arises under that section is a question between the executing Court and the applicant and not a question between the parties to the decree. In our view a Court to which an application is made under S. 20 is perfectly competent to stay the execution proceedings without notice to the decree-holder, if it is satisfied prima facie that the applicant is a person entitled to the benefits of the Act. This is indicated by the existence of the proviso to S. 20 which is that, if the judgment-debtor does not make an application under S. 19 within sixty days or if his application is made and rejected, the Court proceeds with the execution of the decree. We cannot therefore agree that the order passed in this case is an appealable order under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and A.A.O. No. 6 of 1939 must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

In considering the Civil Revision Petition we think that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be upheld. It is not possible to say that he had no jurisdiction to decide whether the applicant was entitled to the benefits of the Act, for, as we have already said, we think that S. 20 does give him such jurisdiction. But his decision we think in this case must be set aside because he has given a perverse meaning to the words of S. 3, proviso C. It was shown beyond the possibility of dispute that the petitioner had not within the two years immediately preceding 1st October, 1937, been assessed to property or house tax under the Madras District Municipalities Act on property of the annual rental value of not less than Rs. 600. It was shown that he was assessed to property tax on property of the annual value of Rs. 405 in Mannargudi Municipality, and it was also shown that he was in reality the owner of property in Tiruvarur Municipality of the annual value of Rs. 240. But he was never assessed to property tax on the property in Tiruvarur. The assessment on that property stands, as it has stood apparently for the last 40 years, in the name of another person Balasubramanya Udayar, who apparently died long ago. Learned Counsel for the respondent contends—and we think with good reason—that the policy of the Act was to prevent persons owning property of the annual rental value of Rs. 600 and more from claiming the benefits of Madras Act IV of 1938. But the proviso to S. 3, as we have already said, excludes from the benefits of the Act only persons who have been assessed to property tax. It does not exclude those who, though liable to property tax, have for some reason or other escaped assessment. The learned Subordinate Judge says:

"In my opinion, the words 'assessed to' means only 'taxed in respect of' and not that the person's name should actually be found in the assessment register."

This, as we have said, is clearly perverse. A person cannot be "assessed" unless the assessment is made in his name.

In this case the petitioner was prima facie a person entitled to the benefits of the Act and we therefore set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and direct that the execution proceedings be stayed under S. 20 of Act IV of 1938. It will be for the petitioner to make an application under S. 19 and if no application is made within sixty days or if the application is made and dismissed, the executing Court will proceed (under the proviso to S. 20) with the execution. The petitioner will recover from the respondents (decree-holders) the costs of this revision petition.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.—These are cross-appeals from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry passed on E. A. No. 626 of 1935 in O. S. No. 68 of 1919. The decree-holders in this execution petition sought to recover from the judgment-debtors four sums of money; costs in O. S. No. 68 of 1919 ordered by the decree of the Court to be paid by the guardian of the first defendant to plaintiffs 2 to 4 amounting to Rs. 666-8-0, interest on the same sum from 16th October, 1923, to 15th September, 1935, at 6 per cent. per annum amounting to Rs. 476-8-9, the costs decreed in A.S. No. 134 of 1924 on the file of this High Court amounting to Rs. 465-1-6 and costs in C. M. P. No. 2774 of 1927 on the file of this High Court amounting to Rs. 402-13-0. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the legal representatives of the first judgment-debtor Vedula Ramakrishnamma should be added in the execution petition and that execution should proceed against any self-acquired properties of the first judgment-debtor in their hands for the recovery of the first two items, namely, Rs. 666-8-0 and interest Rs. 476-8-9. He directed that with regard to the remaining two sums all the joint family property of the respondents should be held liable. The judgment-debtors have appealed with regard to the last two items. Their contention is that the costs of the appeal (A. S. No. 134 of 1924) should have been dealt with in the same way as the costs of the suit and interest upon it and that in so far as the costs in the C. M. P. are concerned, only the estate of the first appellant should be made liable. In C. M. A. No. 24 of 1938 the transferee-decree-holders have appealed contending that the legal representatives of the first judgment-debtor should also be held liable for the costs of the suit and the interest-items 1 and 11 referred to above.

Dealing with appeal No. 24 of 1938 first, we think the contention raised on behalf of these appellants is quite untenable. It was shown that Vedula Ramakrishnamma in defending O. S. No. 68 of 1919 on behalf of his minor daughter Nittala Yellamma set up a false will. It was for that reason that the Court ordered him personally to pay the costs of the plaintiffs although he himself was not a party to the suit. We think that it is quite clear that this debt is properly described as avyavaharika. As the learned Subordinate Judge has said, although he might have felt responsible for defending the suit on behalf of his minor daughter, he was certainly under no obligation to fabricate a will in order to do so and all the costs that he incurred in prosecuting a defence of this kind must be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality for which his sons cannot be held liable.

With regard to the costs of the appeal we agree with the learned Counsel for the appellants in C. M. A. No. 416 of 1937 that they must be dealt with in the same way as the costs of the suit. It was urged on behalf of the respondents (decree-holders) that whatever might be said about the costs of the suit, the costs incurred by Vedula Ramakrishnamma in prosecuting the appeal could not be said to be a debt tainted with illegality or immorality. We find, however, on referring to the grounds of appeal (the appeal was preferred jointly by Vedula Ramakrishnamma as the second defendant and his daughter as the first defendant) that the allegations made are that the lower Court was wrong in its decision that the will was a fabrication. It is quite clear therefore that in prosecuting the appeal Vedula Ramakrishnamma was acting in the same illegal and immoral way as he had done in conducting the defence on behalf of his minor daughter. There was no separate ground taken in A. S. No. 134 of 1924 that the order of the trial Court directing the guardian to pay the costs was in itself illegal.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Appellant.

B. Sitarama Rao for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul dated 11th March, 1936, setting aside the decree of the District Munsif of Periakulam dated 28th February, 1935, in O. S. No. 70 of 1934 and remanding the suit for fresh disposal after deciding certain issues framed by the Subordinate Judge.

The suit was by an indorsee of a promissory note executed by the defendant in favour of one Subbayyan Chettiar, the endorser. The issues framed by the District Munsif were:

"(1) Is the full discharge pleaded true?

(2) Is the plaintiff not a bona fide holder in due course?

(3) Is the defendant entitled to raise the plea of discharge as contended in his written statement?"

In substance, the defence was that the promissory note had been executed in favour of Subbayyan Chettiar as a benamidar, the beneficiary and the person who lent the money under the promissory note being Ramalingam Chettiar, the brother-in-law of Subbayyan Chettiar. The plaintiff and his brother Ramalingam were members of a joint Hindu family of which Ramalingam was the manager. The defendant pleaded two payments to Ramalinga Chettiar the earlier of which was admitted by the plaintiff in his plaint, but the latter was not referred to at all in the plaint. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the subsequent payment also being one alleged to have been made not to Subbayyan Chettiar, the payee under the note, but to Ramalinga Chettiar, the payment could not be pleaded as a discharge of the suit claim.

The District Munsif after considering the cases bearing on the point and in particular the Full Bench decision in Subba- *narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ came to the conclusion that the defendant could not plead a discharge by a payment made to the beneficiary under a promissory note, the payee of which is a benamidar. In accordance with this conclusion, he was of opinion that it was unnecessary to decide whether the subsequent alleged payment was made or not, and he accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, the learned Sub-Judge while not disagreeing with the District Munsif on his conclusion on the point of law in so many words, nevertheless thought that it was open to the defendant to put forward a plea that the promissory note itself could not be sued upon by the payee or his indorsee because there was no delivery of the promissory note to the payee by the maker thereof, though it was admitted in the written statement of the defendant that there was a delivery by the maker to the beneficiary who advanced the money. Some argument about the execution of the promissory note to Ramalinga Chettiar as an agent of Subbayyan Chettiar and a subsequent ratification of the same by Subbayyan Chettiar appears to have been addressed to the Court below, and it was in consequence of these arguments that the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the decision of the District Munsif could not be supported unless certain issues relating to these new points were decided, namely:—

Sinnachami
Chettiar
v.
Ramasami
Chettiar.

(1) Was the promissory note, Ex. A, delivered to Subbayyan Chettiar and did the transaction become complete in his favour?

(2) If there was no delivery to Subbayyan Chettiar, is plaintiff a holder, and if so, a bona fide holder in due course?

(3) If the promissory note was not delivered to Subbayyan Chettiar, did he ratify the transaction as per Ex. A? When was such a ratification, and if it was after the alleged payment in May, 1931, does not that bind him? and so on. These questions did not really arise in the present case and I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge erred in coming to the conclusion that the decree of the District Munsif could not be supported unless these points were decided in the present suit. This is a suit brought by the indorsee of the payee of a promissory note against the executant, and it is obvious that the claim by the payee or his indorsee cannot be questioned by the maker of the promissory note on the ground that the payee was only a benamidar. The present attempt seems to be to avoid the Full Bench decision in *Subbanarayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ by raising a point about delivery of the promissory note which really had never been thought of all these years in cases of this kind. The delivery contemplated by S. 46 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, no doubt, must be a delivery by the maker or by some one authorised on his behalf. It need not necessarily be to the person whose name is given in the note as payee. So long as there is delivery made by the maker the note is valid and complete. In this case, the note was admittedly handed over to Ramalingam Chettiar, the beneficiary under the note, according to the defendant. There was thus a delivery which was a sufficient delivery for the purpose of completing the transaction evidenced by the promissory note. No authority has been quoted to me in support of the proposition that delivery must be to the person whose name is given in the promissory note as the payee or to any agent authorised by him in that behalf. So long as there is delivery—as in this case—with the intention of completing the transaction to the person who actually advanced the money under the promissory note, it is, in my opinion, futile to argue that there was no delivery and that the promissory note is not a completed transaction. In many cases of benami promissory notes, the benamidar may not even know of the transaction and if this argument were to be accepted, the promissory note given and taken in exchange for cash would be a worthless document. I have no doubt that there is really no substance in the point about want of delivery and that the point as regards a subsequent ratification by the benamidar or the promissory note executed in his name is equally without foundation. The relationship between the beneficiary and the benamidar is not that of a principal and agent. The relation between them is the result of a trust arising by implication of law between the two. No question, therefore, of ratification can arise as between them.

In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the issues framed by the lower appellate Court for determination by the first Court are not necessary for the disposal of the suit and that, in any case, there was no justification whatever for the lower appellate Court, to have set aside the decree of the trial Court simply because certain issues had to be determined. This is a plain and simple case in which the decree of the District Munsif who heard the suit was obviously right and it should not have been interfered with in any manner by the lower appellate Court.

The appeal is therefore allowed and the decree of the trial Court restored subject to any alteration that may have to be made as the result of any application made to it under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. This condition is necessary because the learned counsel for the defendant-respondent represents that his client is an agriculturist and would be entitled to certain benefits under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. No actual application is made nor is any affidavit filed to the effect that the defendant-respondent is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act. Under these circumstances, the best course seems to be to give the defendant-respondent liberty to apply to the trial Court for such reliefs as he would be entitled to under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. The appellant is entitled to have his costs in this Court and in the lower appellate Court from the defendant-respondent who will bear his own.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Malabar Law—Tarwad—Karnavan—Suit for removal—Members if need sue jointly—Suit by one member—Other members as necessary parties.

Every member of a Malabar tarwad has a right to see that the tarwad affairs are conducted by the karnavan properly and if he finds that a karnavan has not been acting in the interests of the tarwad, he would have a right to sue for his removal. It cannot be said that the right to maintain the action for removal of the karnavan can only be exercised by all the members of the tarwad jointly. It is obvious however that when a member sues a karnavan for his removal he is trying to enforce a right in which he is interested with the other members of the tarwad jointly and unless he has filed his suit in a representative capacity it is incumbent upon him to implead the other members as parties to the action.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 224 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry in O. P. No. 15 of 1936.

D. A. Krishna Variar for Petitioner.

O. T. G. Nambiar and A. Achuthan Nambiar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revision against the order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry granting leave to the petitioner to sue as a junior member of a Malabar tarwad for the removal of a karnavan from his office and for certain other incidental reliefs in forma pauperis. It has not been contended before me that the petitioner, who is a student in the Zamorin's College at Calicut, is in a position to pay the requisite court-fee. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has confined his attack mainly on the grounds that the petition discloses no cause of action and even if it did, the petition should be held not to have been presented in good faith, as the object of the petition is to help defendant 3 to become a karnavan and not for securing any benefit to the petitioner for himself. In other words, the petitioner is alleged to have been instigated by defendant 3 to fight his cause and it has been contended that it would be wholly against public policy to permit him so to do.

In order to substantiate his argument that the petition disclosed no cause of action, Mr. Krishna Variar contended that a junior member of a tarwad had no right to maintain an action for the removal of a karnavan and he could do so only in conjunction with all the other members of the tarwad against whom no relief was sought in the suit. No satisfactory answer was given when a question was put to him as to what would happen if the other members of the tarwad happened to have either conspired with the karnavan or did not wish to array themselves as plaintiffs either because they took no interest in the affairs of the tarwad or were not inclined to exhibit any hostility to the karnavan openly. Reliance was placed in this connection by the counsel for the petitioner on certain observations made by Mr. Sundara Aiyar in his work on Malabar Law (Chapter VII)* where the learned author has referred to the members of the tarwad in plural wherever he has stated that they had a right to sue for the removal of a karnavan. I was not impressed by this argument. Every member of a tarwad has a right to see that the tarwad affairs are conducted by the karnavan properly and if he finds that a karnavan has not been acting in the interests of the tarwad, he would have a right to sue for his removal. What the learned author was trying to convey to his readers was that the right to maintain an action for removal of a karnavan vested in the members of the tarwad; but there is no justification to construe those words to mean that they could only do so jointly. It is obvious, however that when a member sues a karnavan for his removal, he is trying to enforce a right in which he is interested with the other members of the tarwad jointly, and he would apparently be doing so not only in his individual interest but in the interest of all the members of the tarwad as well or at all events he is taking a step which will not affect him alone but the other members of the tarwad also. It is therefore only proper that if he has not filed the suit in a representative capacity, he should implead them as parties to the action. It is not denied that all the other members of the tarwad are parties to the suit. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff has a locus standi to maintain the suit and it cannot be held that the plaint discloses no cause of action.

There is no merit in the other objection either. If the petitioner has a right to sue for the removal of the karnavan, what does it matter if as a result of his success, defendant 3 or any one else would have to function as such? If a particular karnavan has failed to act in accordance with the well-recognised rules and custom and has behaved in a manner that justifies his removal and the next member—let me assume this for the sake of argument—is found not to be fit enough to act as a karnavan, the office will have to devolve on the next person in the order of the precedence in the ordinary course. In the absence of any other reliable evidence, it is impossible to come to the conclusion, as the learned counsel for the petitioner wants me to do, that this circumstance alone is sufficient for a finding that the petition for leave to bring the suit in forma pauperis is not bona fide. It was alleged on behalf of the contesting defendant that the petitioner had entered into an agreement in regard to the subject-matter of the proposed suit. After a full consideration of the evidence led on behalf of the parties, the lower Court came to the conclusion that the contention had not been made out. Had it been found that this petition was filed in consequence of an arrangement or agreement as alleged by defendant 1, one would be called upon to determine whether the agreement related to the subject-matter of the proposed suit. But in the absence of a finding of fact in favour of defendant 1, it is unnecessary for me to take that aspect of the case into consideration. In the circumstances it must be held that the petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis has not been filed in bad faith. A number of authorities were cited on behalf of the petitioner before me but in as much as there is no valid reason to hold that the petition before the lower Court was not bona fide, they need not be referred to here.

Sankara
Varma Raja
v.
Cheria
Rama
Varma Raja.

The contentions that the petition for leave to file the suit in forma pauperis was not bona fide or that it would be against public policy for the petitioner to be permitted to sue in that form are based on the assumptions that the petitioner is not alone entitled to maintain an action even in his own interest and for his own benefit and secondly that he is doing so to help the third defendant. There appears to be no reasonable basis for these assumptions and the petition for revision must therefore be rejected with costs.

Where the respondent in appeal, on his own initiative made a cash deposit instead of giving security, and the act of the respondent was ratified and adopted by the Court in its final order staying the decree against him by virtue of the deposit and ordering the appellant to furnish security in his turn as a condition for withdrawing the decree amount deposited, but eventually the decree having been reversed, the respondent applied to Court for restitution of the amount including interest for the period it was in deposit in Court, Held, that since the Court itself took the responsibility for treating the deposit as the basis for the stay order, it followed that the order of the Court in fact deprived the respondent of the use of money which would have been at his disposal, had it not been for the erroneous decree. Therefore in accordance with the general principles embodied in S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, the order of the Court requiring the appellant to pay interest on the amount of the deposit was correct.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for restitution made by a judgment-debtor, the decree against whom had been reversed in appeal. The appellant is the plaintiff whose decree was reversed. The full records of the proceedings after this decree are not before me and to a large extent I have had to rely upon statements of the learned Advocates on both sides the correctness of which I do not doubt. It is established that after the decree was passed the appellant took out execution but withdrew his petition on the respondent paying the amount of costs. After this execution petition had been withdrawn the respondent, presumably apprehending further steps in execution, though there was no overt act so far as we are aware by the decree-holder, applied to the Court to stay execution of the decree. This application was opposed and the Court appears to have ordered the respondent (judgment-debtor) to furnish security for the amount of the decree as a condition precedent to the grant of stay. The respondent found difficulty in furnishing security and instead of obeying the Courts' order literally, he deposited into Court the full amount of the decree, praying the Court to order the decree-holder (appellant here) not to draw out the amount except on furnishing security. The Court did so order; but the decree-holder was unable or unwilling to furnish the security, with the result that the decree remained stayed and the money remained in Court. Eventually the decree was reversed in appeal and the respondent applied for restitution, including in his claim interest on the amount in deposit for the period for which it was in Court. The lower appellate Court has awarded interest at 12 per cent. on this amount and it is against this order for interest that the present appeal is preferred by decree-holder.

So far as I am aware there is no case which precisely covers the point now before me though the decision of the Bench in Shanmugasundara Mudaliar v. Ratnavelu Mudaliar deals with somewhat similar facts. That was a case of a decree for money in which an application was made for stay at a time when no execution petition was pending, as is also the position here, but the Court itself ordered the deposit of a portion of the decree amount in cash and the giving of security for the remainder and directed the decree-holder not to draw the cash deposit except on furnishing security. The deposit was made; the decree-holder failed to furnish security and draw out the cash deposit and on the decree being reversed, restitution was ordered in the shape of interest on the amount deposited in cash, the reason being that the basis of an order of restitution should not be the benefit which had accrued to the party whose decree has been reversed, but the loss suffered by the successful party as a result of the erroneous decree and the Courts' orders thereunder.

Venkanna.

It is argued for the appellant here that the position in the present case is different in that the order of the Court as a result of the decree and the stay application was not for the deposit or cash but for the giving of security and that it was the voluntary act of the present respondent in substituting a cash deposit in place of the security ordered which resulted in the loss of interest on the money so deposited. On the other hand it is contended for the respondent that though the respondent on his own initiative made the cash deposit instead of giving security, the act of the respondent was ratified and adopted by the Court in its final order staying the decree by virtue of this deposit and ordering the appellant to furnish security as a condition for withdrawing the amount deposited. With some hesitation, I accept the contention of the respondent. If once we adopt the criterion laid down in the case just quoted that the basis of restitution is to be the loss suffered by the judgment-debtor by reason of the wrongful decree and the orders resulting therefrom I think it follows that the present respondent is entitled to interest on the deposit. It is true that he could have escaped the necessity for a deposit by furnishing security. He was unable to do so and tendered the money into Court subject to certain terms. The Court accepted the deposit, and decided that the terms suggested by the respondent were suitable terms upon which the appellant should be allowed to withdraw the money and it was on the basis of these terms that the Court stayed execution of the decree. It seems to me

v.
Venkanna.

therefore that though the first act in the making of the deposit instead of furnishing security was due to the initiative of the respondent the Court itself took the responsibility for treating that deposit as the basis for the stay order and imposing certain terms upon the appellant. It follows that the order for the retention of the money in Court as a condition of stay and the terms imposed upon the appellant form part of an act of the Court resulting directly from a decree which has been held to be erroneous and that order has in fact deprived the respondent of the use of money which would have been at his disposal had it not been for the erroneous decree. Therefore in accordance with the general principle embodied in S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, the order of the lower appellate Court requiring the appellant to pay interest on the amount of his deposit is correct. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Leave to appeal is granted.

Where a village officer coming within S. 10 (1) (e) of the Madras Act II of 1894 is dismissed by an order of the Sub-Collector and the same is confirmed by the District Collector on appeal and by the Board of Revenue on second appeal, the order cannot be called in question in a Civil Court unless there was a defect in the procedure adopted before the dismissal was ordered which was so important and serious that it rendered the order of dismissal a nullity. There is no specific provision that in the case of village officers coming within sub-S. (1) (e) of S. 10 of the Act and dismissed on the ground of their having been convicted of a criminal offence, which in the opinion of the Sub-Collector disqualified him from holding the office, that any enquiry should be held or that they should be given notice or be heard before the order of dismissal is made.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of Ramnad at Madura in O. S. No. 10 of 1934.

* Appeal No. 316 of 1935.

28th February, 1939.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Appellant.

The Government Pleader (B. Sitarama Rao) and U. Somasundaram for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Ramnad dismissing the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the order dismissing him from the office of hereditary karnam of Kilkudi village passed by the Sub-Collector on 15th December, 1930, and the appellate orders of the District Collector in February, 1931, of the Revenue Board in the same year dismissing his appeals to them are illegal, void and not binding on him. The defendants were (1) the karnam who was appointed in the place of the plaintiff after his dismissal, (2) the Secretary of State for India in Council, and (3) the Rajah of Ramnad within whose zamindari the office is held, the office being one governed by Act II of 1894 and not Act III of 1895.

It was contended inter alia that the suit itself was not competent and that the order of the District Collector on appeal which was confirmed by the Board of Revenue in second appeal was final and cannot be canvassed in a Civil Court. On this point the decision of the Court below was in favour of the plaintiff. Whether this view is right or not is a matter which gives room for discussion, but as the dismissal of the suit on the other ground, that is to say, on the merits, can be supported, we find it unnecessary to decide the question whether the suit itself is maintainable or not. On the merits, the only objection taken to the order dismissing plaintiff-appellant is that he was not heard or given notice by the Sub-Collector before he was dismissed though the dismissal was because he had been convicted of a criminal offence which, in the opinion of the Sub-Collector, disqualified him for holding the office.

The contention of the learned Advocate for the appellant is that even before forming such an opinion, the Sub-Collector and the District Collector were bound to hear the convicted officer before they ordered his dismissal. The procedure to be followed in the matter of the dismissal of village officers under Act II of 1894 is to be found in S. 16 of the Act. Sub-S. (2) of that section runs as follows:—

"The District Collector or the Revenue Officer aforesaid, may, of his own motion or on complaint and after enquiry, fine, suspend, dismiss or remove any village officer for misconduct or for neglect of duty or incapacity as such village officer or for non-residence in the village and shall record his reason for so doing in writing and furnish a copy of the same to the proprietor and to the village officer concerned. Every village officer convicted of an offence of the kind mentioned in sub-S. (1) (e) of S. 10 shall be dismissed."

It will be seen therefore that in the case of officers who come within sub-S. (1) (e) of S. 10, it is not specifically provided that any enquiry should be held or that they should be given notice. It may be, as is contended on behalf of the appellant, that it is not very reasonable not to give the same opportunity for being heard when the dismissal is ordered in view of sub-S. (1) (e) of S. 10 of the Act when such an opportunity is given in cases of dismissal on other grounds or other charges and it is certainly desirable prima facie that an order of serious consequence like an order of dismissal should not be made without giving a hearing to the person affected. But we cannot decide in this case what we consider to be the appropriate procedure in cases of this kind. Where it is sought to attack an order of dismissal passed by the Sub-Collector which was confirmed by the District Collector and the Board of Revenue as void and illegal, we must be satisfied that there was a defect in the procedure adopted before the dismissal was ordered which was so important and so serious that it renders the order of dismissal a nullity. There is no specific provision that in the case of dismissal of village officers who have been convicted of offences which in the opinion of the Revenue Divisional Officer disqualify them for holding the office, they should be heard before the order of dismissal is made. It may be a lacuna but we are not able to say definitely it is a lacuna and we cannot ignore the plain words of the section which while requiring notice and enquiry in other cases in the same section make no mention of any such requirement in the case of dismissal in view of sub-S. (1) (e) of S. 10. We are therefore of opinion that the conclusion of the learned District Judge on this part of the case is right and that there is no ground for interference in appeal.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, two sets.

Where a father delivers his infant daughter to the custody of another and for a number of years takes no interest in her but allows others to do what he as a father should do, he is not fitted to exercise the rights of a father. He is not a person in whose favour the Court shall pass an order under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act.

A Hindu father cannot apply under the Guardian and Wards Act for an order appointing him guardian of the property or person of his minor child as he is under law the lawful guardian of his child and a declaration by Court to that effect cannot increase his powers.

M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises a question of the right of a Hindu father to the custody of his minor daughter, the allegation being that he had abandoned the minor. The appellant is the father of the minor who was born in 1922. Her mother suffered from tuberculosis and died a few months after the child was born. Before the mother's death, the appellant entrusted the minor to his sister Gnanambal, who was married to one Subramania Mudaliar. Subramaniam died in August, 1931 and Gnanambal in October, 1932. After the death of Gnanambal the first respondent, who is another sister of the appellant, took charge of the minor and has had charge of her ever since. In 1927 the first respondent went to live with Gnanambal and her husband. Gnanambal owned the house in which she, her husband, the first respondent and the minor were living and by her will left the house to the first respondent and minor jointly. She further provided that on the death of the first respondent the minor should have the property absolutely. The appellant married a second time in 1923 and had a daughter by his second wife. It is said that up to 1934 he used to visit the minor, but it is common ground that he has not visited her since 1934. It is also common ground that she never returned to her father's house. In January, 1937, the first respondent arranged to marry the minor to the second respondent. The appellant's case is that he was not consulted about this and as he disapproved of the marriage he instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal arises. He applied under the Guardian and Wards Act for an order appointing him the guardian of the person and property of the minor. He also asked that the first respondent should be directed to hand over the custody of the minor to him and that the first respondent should be restrained by an injunction from giving away the minor in marriage to the second respondent. The application was heard by Gentle, J., who treated it as one falling within S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act and on the ground that the appellant had abandoned the minor dismissed it. The appeal is from this order.

The appellant is not entitled to apply under the Guardian and Wards Act for an order appointing him guardian of the person or property of the minor. Under Hindu Law the father is the lawful guardian of his child and a declaration by the Court cannot increase his powers. I had to consider this very question in K. V. Venkateswaran v. Saradambal, when sitting as a judge of the Rangoon High Court and I see no reason to change the opinion I expressed there. In fact the learned Advocate for the appellant has not challenged the correctness of this decision.

The important question is whether the appellant is entitled to an order under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act. I consider that the learned Judge was right in refusing to pass such an order. I have already referred to the fact that the minor was brought up by her aunts and that she has never been received again in her father's house. It is admitted that he has not contributed anything to her support since he delivered the child to Gnanambal and that he has taken no part in ceremonies which are so important to a Hindu girl, namely, the ear-boring ceremony and the ceremony which takes place when she reaches the age of puberty. The appellant has never even given her a present. The invitation to the ear-boring ceremony was issued by Gnanambal and her husband Subramania Mudaliar. The invitation referred to the minor as the daughter of Gnanambal and her husband and no objection was taken to this by the appellant. The minor has always referred to her father as "uncle" and to Gnanambal and her husband as "mother" and "father". If the fact that the minor referred to her father as "uncle" was all the Court had to consider it might not be a point against the appellant but it can be taken into consideration in the circumstances of this case. While the appellant may have visited the house where the sisters were living, he has not visited the minor since 1934 and throughout the minor's life he has not taken the slightest notice of her. His character can be gauged from the fact that in the course of the evidence he alleged that dissolute persons were in the habit of frequenting the house where the first respondent and the minor were living. There is not the slightest foundation for this statement. The learned Judge was satisfied, as we are, that he made this unwarranted allegation thinking that if he attacked the character of the respondent it would strengthen his case. The learned Judge also held, and again we agree with him, that this application was filed because he had not been consulted about the marriage and he wished to annoy the first respondent. Where a father delivers his infant daughter to the custody of another and for over fifteen years takes no interest in her, but allows others to do what he as a father should do it is evident that he is not fitted to exercise the rights of a father. He is certainly not a person in whose favour the Court should pass an order under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act. It is abundantly clear in this case that the minor will be in far better custody if she remains with the first respondent. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that even in these circumstances he should be granted an injunction restraining the first respondent from marrying the minor to the second respondent. I fail to see how we can pass an injunction of this nature when the main part of the application has failed. The learned Advocate for the appellant has been unable to point to any section in the Guardian and Wards Act under which he can ask the Court to issue an injunction in these circumstances. If the appellant wishes to take other proceedings he is at liberty to do so, but having failed in his application under S. 25 of the Guardian and Wards Act he is not entitled to any order on the present application.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs in favour of the first respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898 as amended), S. 222 (2)—Criminal breach of trust—Single charge for misappropriation of money and goods—Validity.

The case referred to in S. 222 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, is a case in which the charge is criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money and it does not apply to a case of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of goods and affords no justification for mixing up moneys and goods or for framing a single charge in respect of the total of the cash said to have been misappropriated and the total value of the goods said to have been misappropriated.

Appeal under S. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid respondent (accused) by the Sessions Judge of South Kanara in Criminal Appeal No. 7 of 1938 on his file (C. C. No. 56 of 1937 on the file of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Mangalore).

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) appeared in person.
Accused not represented.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the Public Prosecutor, Madras, from the judgment of the Sessions Judge of South Kanara acquitting one N. S. Sharma of the offence of criminal breach of trust by an agent punishable under S. 409, Indian Penal Code. The man had been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 800 by the First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Manga-lore Division. On appeal, he was acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge who dealt with the facts of the case at great length in his judgment. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have come to the conclusion that the entrustment itself had not been proved beyond doubt. The case for the prosecution was that certain goods, namely, Aniline Dyes, etc., had been sent by the Aniline Dyes and Chemical Company, Bombay, to the accused in his capacity as manager of their branch at Mangalore. The learned Sessions Judge has found that the case was not proved that the appellant was the manager of a branch and was entrusted as such with the goods of the company and apparently the learned Sessions Judge thought that the defence of the accused that he had merely purchased the goods from the company as an ordinary customer and was only liable from the point of view of civil law was more likely to be true than the case for the prosecution. It may be there is something to be said in support of the view which found favour with the learned Magistrate. But one important fact is established by the evidence, namely, that the company itself kept their accounts as if the accused was not the manager of a branch and as such entrusted with the goods of the company. While the ledger accounts of other branches were shown in the name of the company, the account of the accused was kept in his personal name and there is no separate account in respect of the alleged branch at Mangalore. In these circumstances, it is really impossible to say that the learned Sessions Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the prosecution had failed to prove the factum of entrustment to an agent.

Public
Prosecutor
P.
Sharma.

Another reason why this appeal should not go further is that the trial before the Magistrate appears to have been contrary to law. The charge against the accused in respect of which he was tried no doubt alleged that an aggregate sum of Rs. 757-4-9 was criminally misappropriated within the space of twelve months, that is, between 3rd September, 1936 and 6th May, 1937, and the learned Magistrate thought that on this account under S. 222 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, it would be legal to frame a charge in respect of such gross sum and to try him on that single charge though that charge related to a number of items, namely, 12 in number. No doubt, if a single charge can be justified, the trial could not be said to be illegal, but if the single charge itself was one not permitted by law and

Public
Prosecutor
v.
Sharma.

the offences disclosed were really separate, the trial held could not be said to be legal. S. 222 (2) provides that

"Where the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it shall be sufficient to specify the gross sum in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed, and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed, without specifying particular items or exact dates, and the charge so framed shall be deemed to be a charge of one offence within the meaning of S. 234:

Provided that the time included between the first and last of such dates shall not exceed one year."

In this case, however, the case for the prosecution and the evidence adduced in support of it are to the effect that only two sums of money, namely, Rs. 103-12-0 and Rs. 70 collected from P. Ws. 4 and 11 respectively were alleged to have been misappropriated by the accused, while the other ten items do not relate to money at all. They relate to goods supplied to the accused by the company and are covered by various invoices in the names of P. Ws. 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12. The total of these ten items of goods said to have been misappropriated is Rs. 583-8-9. These goods were delivered to the accused on different dates and it is alleged that he misappropriated the goods and covered up the misappropriation by sending bogus invoices to the complainant on different dates. The case referred to in S. 222 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, is a case in which the charge is criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money and it does not apply to a case of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of goods, and affords no justification for mixing up money and goods in the manner in which it has been done by the trial Court or for framing a single charge in respect of the total of the cash said to have been misappropriated and the total value of the goods said to have been misappropriated. The charge therefore was not one which was permitted by law, and if the charges had been properly framed, there could not have been a joint trial according to law. In these circumstances, it seems unnecessary to proceed further with the appeal and have it argued on the merits even if there is a case on the merits.

The prosecution was instituted at the instance of a private complainant and the amount involved is less than about Rs. 800. The private complainant has his civil remedy in respect of the amounts said to have been lost and the interests of public justice do not seem to require that there should be a further retrial of the accused in respect of what is alleged against him. He has been sufficiently harassed by the proceedings that have already taken place and which ended in acquittal by the Sessions Judge. It would be, in my opinion, very undesirable that he should be further exposed to a retrial in respect of the same matter.

Prosecutor

Sharma.

The appeal is therefore dismissed under S. 421, Criminal Procedure Code.

ORDER.—On the 16th March, 1938, this Court granted to the petitioner a certificate permitting him to appeal to His Majesty in Council. O. 45, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code requires a person to whom a certificate is granted to furnish security in cash or in Government securities for the costs of the respondent, but there is a proviso which says that the Court at the time of granting the certificate may, on the ground of special hardship order that some other form of security may be furnished. At the time of the grant of the certificate the petitioner made no application for permission to furnish security otherwise than in cash or in Government securities, but on the 24th March he filed a petition asking the Court to accept security in the form of immovable property. This petition is now before us.

The learned advocate for the respondents has taken a preliminary objection, and has pointed out that this question has already been decided by a Bench of this Court in *Arunachala Naidu v. Balakrishna & Co.*¹ There Venkatasubba Rao and Srinivasa Iyengar, JJ., held that the proviso to O. 45, r. 7 to which I have referred precludes the Court from granting an application of this nature at a later stage. This decision is binding on us and we do not question its correctness. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has been unable to point to any Privy Council rule which has the effect of overriding this proviso, and that being so it must be given effect to.

The preliminary objection succeeds and the application must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from a decision dated 6th April, 1937, of the High Court, Fort William in Bengal, in its appellate civil jurisdiction (Costello and Panckridge, JJ.), reversing a decision dated 22nd May, 1936, of that Court in its original civil jurisdiction (Lort-Williams, J.).

The plaintiffs agreed to lend the defendants a sum of money for which certain immovable property in Calcutta was to be security. The terms of the loan having been agreed, the plaintiffs and the defendants met, and the defendants signed a document setting out those terms. The advance was to be made in two instalments, and the document provided that payment of the first instalment would be made on the deposit of the title deeds relating to the property, and that, after payment of the balance of the loan, the defendants would execute a memorandum evidencing the deposit and embodying the conditions of the loan. The defendants, having signed that document, handed over the title deeds saying at the same time that they were depositing the deeds as security or mortgage for the first sum advanced. A few days later, when the balance of loan was paid, the same formalities were carried out, and on the same day one of the defendants on behalf of the others executed a formal and elaborate memorandum which, after reciting inter alia that the documents of title specified in a schedule had been deposited as security for the advance, agreed and declared that the deeds had been delivered with intent to create a security on the property in question, "such security having been created prior to the execution of this agreement by delivery of the documents. . . .", and that they would be held by the plaintiffs as such security for payment of the sum due, together with any costs incurred in obtaining payment of the sums "hereby secured". The memorandum then laid down the other terms of the loan, and conferred a power of sale. The plaintiffs claimed to enforce their rights as mortgagees under that memorandum.

2nd August, because that document was only executed at a time when the mortgage was already in being. The money having been advanced to the mortgagors, on the security of title deeds duly delivered, the mortgage was already created, and the mortgagees' title established, for the deposit was expressly made for the purpose of creating a security. The earlier transaction stood on its own legs as a complete transaction of mortgage. The subsequent memorandum, accordingly, could not, it is submitted, itself do the same thing. It was and could be no more than a mere record of what had gone before, and, as such, it did not require registration. The memorandum could not operate to transfer an interest which had already been effectively transferred by the earlier mortgage by deposit of title deeds, and indeed the parties never intended it to have any such effect. Further, it seems inequitable that, when a transfer of an interest in property has thus been validly made by a transaction, complete in itself, of mortgage by way of deposit of title deeds, the subsequently executed memorandum should be allowed to operate retrospectively so as to upset the earlier and valid transaction.

Lionel Cohen, K.C. and J. M. Parikh for Respondents Mortgagors.—It is submitted that the memorandum of 2nd August is an instrument which comes under S. 17 of the Act of 1908 in that it operates to create, declare or assign a right to immovable property, or effects a mortgage within the meaning of S. 59 of the Indian Transfer of Property Act. The memorandum should therefore have been registered, and as that has not been done the mortgagors cannot seek to enforce it against the property in question. The memorandum cannot be dismissed as a mere record of a transaction previously completed and complete in itself. It is an operative instrument by which the parties effected, or purported to effect, a transfer of an interest in the mortgaged premises. They are now founding upon that operative instrument, and are, it is submitted, barred for non-registration of the document.

Lord
 Macmillan.

LORD MACMILLAN.—The plaintiffs in this suit, now the appellants, seek to enforce a mortgage for the principal sum of Rs. 25,000 with arrears of interest accrued. Their case is that the mortgage was effected by the delivery to them of the documents of title to certain immovable property in Calcutta with intent to create a security thereon.

The general law in India under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that a mortgage for a principal sum of Rs. 100 or upwards can be effected only by a registered instrument duly signed and attested, but the validity of mortgages by deposit of title deeds in Calcutta and certain other places is expressly recognised and saved, doubtless because of the convenience of this form of security in commercial centres [see S. 59 of the Act as it stood at the date of the transaction with which this case is concerned, and now, by amendment, S. 58 (f)].

P.C.
 Sir Hari Sankar Paul
 v.
 Kedar Nath
 Saha.
 Lord
 Macmillan.

That the title deeds of the property were deposited by the respondents with the appellants is not disputed, but the appellants were not content to rely only on this deposit. They insisted on the execution by the respondents of a memorandum of agreement "evidencing the said deposit and embodying the terms and conditions of the loan." The appellants found upon this memorandum in their plaint, and the respondents in their written statement aver that this memorandum constituted the bargain between them and the appellants, and they maintain that, inasmuch as it was not registered as required by S. 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, it is inadmissible in evidence and the mortgage is consequently unenforceable under S. 49 of that Act. To this the appellants reply that the memorandum did not effect or constitute any transaction between the parties, but merely recorded a transaction already completed; it therefore did not require registration, not being, in the words of the statute, a non-testamentary instrument purporting or operating "to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish . . . any right, title or interest . . . to or in immoveable property."

There have been numerous cases, some of which have reached this Board, in which a mortgage, alleged to have been effected by the deposit of title deeds, has been accompanied by a written document, and in which the question has arisen whether that document was of such a character as to require registration. The decision in each case has turned upon the nature of the document in question. It will be sufficient to refer to one or two of the most recent of these cases.

In Obla Sundarachariar v. Narayana Aiyar, the title deeds of certain properties were handed over as security for a loan along with two written documents, namely, a promissory note for the total advance and a signed memorandum consisting of a list of the title deeds, prefaced with the names of the parties and these words:—

"As agreed upon in person I have delivered to you the undermentioned documents as security."

In the view of their Lordships as expressed by Lord Tomlin, the memorandum was a document which "merely records particulars of deeds the subject of a deposit . . . it was and remained a list of the documents deposited and nothing more. It did not embody the terms of the agreement between the parties."

Their Lordships accordingly reached

"the conclusion that the memorandum was not other than a written record of the particulars of deeds the subject of an agreement constituted in fact by the act of deposit and the payment of the money and that it neither purported nor operated to create or declare any right, title or interest in the property included in the deeds, with the result that it did not require registration."

With this case that of *Subramonian v. Lutchman*¹, may be contrasted. There, on the occasion of the deposit of the title deeds, a memorandum was signed and delivered to the lender or creditor which stated:—

"We hand you herewith title deeds relating to [certain specified property]. . . this please hold as security against advances made to us."

The memorandum in addition referred to a promissory note and a second mortgage over certain other property, both in favour of the borrowers, which they also handed over as security for the advances made to them, and the document concluded:—

"We promise not to deal with same till your amount due you is fully paid and satisfied."

Lord Carson, in delivering their Lordships' judgment, quoted passages from the cases of Kedernath Dutt v. Shamloll Khettry,² and Pranjivandas Mehta v. Chan Ma Phee,³ as laying down the law on the subject and stated the criterion to be:—

"Did the document . . . constitute the bargain between the parties or was it merely the record of an already completed transaction?"

On the evidence and on the terms of the document their Lordships had no doubt "that the memorandum in question was the bargain between the parties and that without its production in evidence the plaintiff could establish no claim, and as it was unregistered it ought to have been rejected."

3. (1916) 31 M.L.J. 155; L.R. 43 I.A. 122; I.L.R. 43 Cal. 895 (P.C.).

Commenting on this passage, Lord Tomlin, in the case above quoted, said on behalf of the Board:—

"While their Lordships do not think that the language of Lord Carson conveys or was intended to convey the meaning that no memorandum relating to a deposit of title deeds can be within section 17 of the Indian Registration Act unless it embodies all the particulars of the transactions of which the deposit forms part, their Lordships are of opinion that no such memorandum can be within the section unless on its face it embodies such terms and is signed and delivered at such time and place and in such circumstances as to lead legitimately to the conclusion that so far as the deposit is concerned it constitutes the agreement between the parties."

With these considerations in mind their Lordships proceed to examine the facts of the present case. It appears that toward the end of 1923, three brothers, Kedar Nath Saha, Atindra Nath Saha and Jnanendra Nath Saha, who, or whose representatives, are the present respondents, arranged with the appellants for a loan of Rs. 25,000, for which certain property in Calcutta owned by the borrowers was to be the security. The parties having reached agreement as to the terms of the loan, the transaction was carried out as follows. On the 24th July, 1924, a meeting took place at the office of the attorneys for the appellants at which were present Hari Mohan Paul, one of the two appellants, on behalf of himself and his brother, the other appellant and Jnanendra Nath Saha, on behalf of himself and his two brothers. At this meeting a document was signed by Jnanendra Nath Saha setting out the terms and conditions of the advance. It provided that Rs. 12,000 should be paid on that day and the balance of Rs. 13,000 on or before 31st July, 1924, that the rate of interest was to be 9 per cent. per annum and that the period of the loan was to be one year from 1st August, 1924. It further provided that the advance of Rs. 12,000 "will be made on the deposit of the documents of title relating to the premises, No. 75, Beniatolla Street, abovementioned, and after the balance of Rs. 13,000 shall be paid the mortgagors will execute in favour of the mortgagee a memorandum evidencing the said deposit and embodying the terms and conditions of the loan."

Jnanendra, having signed this document formally, handed over the title deeds to the appellants' attorneys, saying as he did so: "For the sum of Rs. 12,000 which I have taken out of the loan of Rs. 25,000 I am depositing these documents of title by way of security or mortgage." The sum of Rs. 12,000 was thereupon paid over to Jnanendra, who signed a receipt on the memorandum for the sum of Rs. 12,000 advanced "on the security and upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore mentioned."

Subsequently, on 2nd August, 1924, the balance of Rs. 13,000 was paid to Jnanendra who repeated the formality of handing the title deeds to the appellants' attorneys, stating that "for the sum of Rs. 12,000 which I have already received out of Rs. 25,000 and for the sum of Rs. 13,000 which I am receiving now these documents will be kept in security." Later on the same day Jnanendra executed the memorandum of agreement now in question.

This memorandum of 2nd August, 1924, is a formal and elaborate document. It designates the borrowers as the mortgagors and the lenders as the mortgagees and recites that the mortgagors are the owners of the property described in the first schedule, that the mortgagors had applied to the mortgagees to lend them Rs. 25,000, and that the mortgagees had agreed to make this advance on the security of the documents of title specified in the second schedule. It further recites that the mortgagees had on 24th July, 1924, paid to the mortgagors Rs. 12,000, and that as security for this sum the mortgagors had deposited with the mortgagees' agents the documents of title specified in the second schedule, and that the mortgagees, before the execution of the memorandum, had paid over the balance of Rs. 13,000. The memorandum then proceeds to set out that it is thereby agreed and declared between the parties that, in consideration of the two sums of Rs. 12,000 and Rs. 13,000 paid before the execution of the memorandum, the title deeds described in the second schedule, "which said deeds, evidences and writings have as hereinbefore stated prior to the execution of this agreement been delivered by the mortgagors to the mortgagees' said agents in the town of Calcutta with intent to create a security on the said hereditaments and premises described in the said first schedule hereto such as is contemplated in the concluding proviso to S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act (such security having been created prior to the execution of this agreement by the delivery of the documents hereinbefore mentioned—would (sc. shall) be held by the mortgagees as such security as aforesaid for the payment by the mortgagors to the mortgagees at the time and in the manner hereinafter mentioned and the costs (as between attorney and client) charges and expenses of and incidental to any proceeding which may be had for the protection of this security or for procuring or obtaining or attempting to obtain payment of the moneys hereby secured." There follows a series of heads dealing with the date of repayment, rate of interest, consequences of default, warranty of title and various other matters, and the memorandum in conclusion confers on the mortgagees a power of sale of the mortgaged property. A receipt for the total sum of Rs. 25,000 is appended.

Such being the tenour of the memorandum of the 2nd August, 1924, and such the circumstances attendant on its execution and delivery, the question is whether it required to be registered. Lord-Williams, J., held that it did not, being satisfied that the "memorandum was nothing but a record of what had been agreed to orally on the 24th July," and was "not a document containing the bargain made between the parties." On appeal, Costello, J., with whom Panckridge, J., concurred, was of the contrary opinion, holding that "the writing was of such a character as calls for registration," for the reasons set out in a long and careful judgment.

Their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the Appellate Court. The leading feature of this case is that the appellants' advisers were evidently quite aware of the niceties of the law in the matter, and deliberately endeavoured to effect a valid mortgage by delivery of title deeds and at the same time to accompany it with an effective written document which would nevertheless not require registration. The appellants, in their Lordships' opinion, have over-reached themselves and have failed to achieve their purpose.

In the first place, it is made clear by the earlier memorandum of 24th July, 1924, that the parties contemplated from the outset that a document should be executed "evidencing the said deposit and embodying the terms and conditions of the loan," and this earlier memorandum bears an acknowledgment of the receipt of the first instalment of the loan as having been advanced "on the security and upon the terms and conditions hereinbefore mentioned." When the memorandum of 2nd August, 1924, subsequently executed, is examined, it is found to contain all the essentials of the transaction. It states that it is hereby agreed and declared between and by the parties that in consideration of the sums advanced the title deeds of the property shall be held as a security on the said property, and refers to any proceeding which may be had for the protection of this security or for procuring payment of the moneys hereby secured. It then sets out all the details of the transaction and specifically confers a power of sale on the mortgagees. It is true that in the parenthetical passage, quoted above, the title deeds are stated to have been previously delivered with intent to create a security, but that does not alter the character of the memorandum itself, which, if the parenthetical passage be disregarded, is an instrument effective to create an interest in the property in favour of the mortgagees. Having purported to create a mortgage by delivery of title deeds, the parties proceeded to create it over again in writing. The memorandum does not merely evidence a transaction already completed: its language is operative. It is contractual in form and it embodies an agreement that the title deeds in question are to be held as security for the advances made and it speaks of the moneys "hereby secured." It not only contains all the terms on which the moneys were advanced, but it expressly confers a power of sale. It is noteworthy that in the appellants' "concise statement" of their claim in the plaint they state that they sue for a decree "for realisation of the principal and arrears of interest due and payable under a memorandum of agreement dated the 2nd August, 1924."

Their Lordships are of opinion that where, as here, the parties professing to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds contemporaneously enter into a contractual agreement, in writing, which is made an integral part of the transaction and is itself an operative instrument and not merely evidential, such a document must under the statute be registered. The appeal accordingly fails.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Appellate Court of the 6th April, 1937, be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed. The legal representatives of the respondent Kedar Nath Saha, who alone appeared, will have their costs of the appeal.

Promissory note—Executed by only one—Indorsement for collection in favour of another—Indorsee's rights as against the father and son of the executant—Whether any transfer of a debt or actionable claim effected by the indorsement—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), S. 8.

Vira Raghavulu Naidu
v.
Rajalingam.

In a suit to recover an amount due on a promissory note executed by the first defendant in favour of the father of the plaintiff's indorsers, not only the maker of the note the first defendant, but also his father (second defendant) and his son (third defendant) were proceeded against, and the lower Court passed a decree against the estate of the first defendant which had by then vested in the Official Receiver, and dismissed the suit as against the defendants 2 and 3,

Held, that it was obvious that neither the son nor the father of the first defendant would be made liable directly on the pronote in which neither of them was mentioned. This was not however a case in which there had been any transfer in law of either a debt or of any actionable claim. What was transferred by the indorsement was only the property in the pronote and nothing more. Hence the particular portion of S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act stating that "where the property is a debt or other actionable claim, the securities therefor", would not apply.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Kistna dated 12th April, 1935, in O. S. No. 15 of 1933, a suit to recover the amount due on a promissory note Ex. A, dated 12th February, 1930, executed by the first defendant in favour of the late Mallikarjuna Rao, the father of the plaintiff's indorsers. The suit was directed not merely against the maker of the note, the first defendant, but also against his father, the second defendant, and his son, the third defendant. It may be mentioned in this connection that the first defendant became insolvent and the Official Receiver of Vizagapatam was brought on record as the fourth defendant. The learned District Judge passed a decree only as against defendants 1 and 4, that is to say, as against the estate of the first defendant, and dismissed the suit as against defendants 2 and 3. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal from the decree of the Court below dismissing the suit against defendants 2 and 3, and the only question for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree against defendants 2 and 3.

It must be remembered that the suit is by an indorsee and is based on the promissory note, Ex. A. In paragraph 4 of the plaint it is mentioned that the endorsement was obtained of the note in order to collect the amount due thereunder, and it would appear as if the plaintiff is only an indorsee for collection and not for value. The plaint does not allege that the plaintiff paid anything for the indorsement, and on the other hand it is stated in paragraph 4 that the transfer of the promissory note was obtained in order to collect the amount due on the note. It is obvious that neither the son nor the father of the first defendant could be made liable directly on the promissory note in which neither of them is mentioned. It is enough in this connection to refer to the recent Full Bench decision in *Maruthamuthu Naicker v. Kadir Badsha Rowther*¹, in which the head note runs as follows:—

"The indorsee of a promissory note executed by the managing member of a Hindu joint family is limited to his remedy on the note unless the indorsement is so worded as to transfer the debt as well and the stamp law is complied with; and therefore in the case of an ordinary endorsement the indorsee cannot sue the non-executant coparceners on the ground of their liability under the Hindu Law."

In the present case the indorsement is of the ordinary kind; it is not so worded as to transfer the debt itself nor has any stamp duty been paid on the indorsement. It was alleged in the plaint that there was an agreement by the second defendant on the 12th January, 1931, whereby he paid Rs. 2,000 being part of the amount due to the original payee and the balance was promised to be paid after some time. This agreement, which is marked as Ex. F in this case, is however not an agreement with the plaintiff in the present suit but only with the original payee, and it is not the plaintiff's case that the rights under this agreement were also transferred to the plaintiff along with the promissory note. While the promissory note was filed along with the plaint, this letter Ex. F was not filed, and if it had really been relied upon as part of the cause of action as it is now sought to be, it would have been filed along with the plaint. Even assuming that the plaintiff is not a mere indorsee for collection but is an indorsee for value, it would not follow that the indorsement ipso facto transferred the rights under the letter Ex. F to the plaintiff. The Advocate for the appellant relies on S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act and in particular the following passage therein, namely :—

"Where the property is a debt or other actionable claim, the securities therefor."

This is not however a case in which there has been any transfer in law of either a debt or of any actionable claim. What was transferred by the endorsement was only the property in the promissory note and nothing more. This is therefore a case to which the particular portion of S. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act relied upon will not apply. We are therefore of opinion, though not for the reasons found in the judgment of the Court below, that the Court below was right in dismissing the claim of the plaintiff as against defendants 2 and 3. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents 2 and 3.

In execution of a decree obtained on a mortgage the mortgaged property was about to be sold. The mortgagors agreed to sell a portion of the property to strangers who advanced the money with which the decree debt was satisfied. They obtained a sale-deed and in a suit by a subsequent mortgagee they claimed a right of subrogation to the rights of the earlier mortgagee whose decree was discharged by the money advanced.

The Court delivered the following

Venkata-

Rao, J.

JUDGMENTS: Venkataramana Rao, J.—This appeal raises a question of subrogation. The facts necessary for the disposal of the same lie in a narrow compass. The plaintiff sued to recover a sum of Rs. 8,000 on a mortgage dated 3rd October, 1925, executed by defendants 1 to 4 and their father late Subbarayudu in her favour. There was a prior mortgage on the said property dated 1st August, 1914. In execution of a decree obtained thereon the property mortgaged was about to be sold. To discharge the said decree debt the mortgagors—late Subbarayudu and his sons—agreed to sell a part of the said property, namely, plaint items 3 to 7, 9 and 15 to defendants 6 and 7. In pursuance of the said contract, the defendants 6 and 7 obtained a sale-deed dated 2nd November, 1933, and advanced the money with which the said decree debt was satisfied. They therefore claim a right of subrogation in respect of the said sum on the ground that by their having discharged the said decree debt they are subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee under the deed dated 1st August, 1914. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to give them the said relief on the ground that there is no registered instrument reserving the right as required by S. 92 (iii) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is this view that is now canvassed in this appeal by Mr. Satyanarayana Rao on their behalf.

rayudu
v.
Lakshmi-narasamma.
Venkata-
ramana
Rao, J.

It is conceded that the matter is governed by S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, but it is contended that defendants 6 and 7 have a right of subrogation under cl. (i) of the said section. This contention is directly opposed to the interpretation placed on the said section by the Full Bench decision in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹. But it is contended that the observations regarding the interpretation of that section are obiter and that a different note was struck in a recent judgment by their Lordships Venkatasubba Rao and Abdur Rahman, JJ., in *Srinivasulu v. Damodarasami*². In *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹, I observed as follows:—

"The first clause enunciates no new principle (vide S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act since repealed). It applies to all persons who have an interest in the equity of redemption and are under no personal obligation to discharge prior encumbrances. The third clause has been enacted to confer a benefit on persons who advance money to discharge an incumbrance only 'if the mortgagee has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be subrogated.' The clause is intended to apply to all persons who acquire an interest in the mortgaged property by advancing moneys to discharge prior incumbrances and there is no warrant for restricting the scope of that clause to persons other than purchasers or mortgagees as contended by Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon. The distinction between the two classes of cases aforesaid, namely, those who have an existing interest in the property and those who acquire an interest therein by advancing money, is well recognised in the law relating to subrogation."

This is also the view taken by Varadachariar, J.—Vide pages 367 and 368 and by Cornish, J. (page 362). Since the date of this decision the matter was considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court and a Full Bench of the Nagpur High Court. The Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court is reported in *Hira Singh v. Jai Singh*³. Sulaiman, C. J., after considering the decision in Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara

Venkata-

Rao, J.

*Narayana Menon*¹ and the previous Full Bench decision in *Tota Ram v. Ram Lal*², which was dissented from in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹ affirmed the view taken by us. In that case certain properties were sold for discharging the prior encumbrances and as there was no registered instrument in the case, the right of subrogation was refused. The learned Chief Justice concluded his judgment thus:

"Having paid the amounts which under their contracts of sale they were bound to pay as part of their sale consideration, and not having obtained any agreement in writing registered that they would be subrogated to the rights of the prior mortgagee, they are not entitled to any such benefit."

The Full Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court is reported in *Taibai v. Wasudeorao*³. The actual decision in that case is that:

"A purchaser of a property with whom is left part of the consideration of the sale in his favour for paying off a mortgage but in whose favour there is no express agreement of subrogation in writing registered is not entitled to claim subrogation against a later mortgagee under S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act as amended by Act XX of 1929."

It also affirms the view taken by us in our Full Bench decision. Mr. Satyanarayana Rao canvasses the reasoning in both the above judgments. What he contends for is that the interpretation placed on S. 92 (iii) of the Transfer of Property Act was based upon a principle which according to him was not well founded. In the course of the Full Bench judgment in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹, Varadachariar, J., observed thus:—

"There is a well-established distinction between cases in which a person who has a pre-existing interest in property pays off a prior charge on that property for the protection of his own interest and cases in which a person acquires an interest in property only by reason of his advancing money to pay off an existing mortgage debt. It seems to me that the first clause of S. 92 must be held to relate to the first type of cases above referred to and the third clause to the second type."

This is also the view which I took. It is this view which Mr. Satyanarayana questions and in support thereof relies upon the observations of Venkatasubba Rao, J., in *Srinivasulu v. Damodarasami*⁴. The learned Judge remarks thus at page 783:—

"We must say we find it difficult to follow the distinction adverted to between a person with a pre-existing right and a person acquiring a right by reason of the advance he makes. Not the slightest support is to be found for this supposed distinction in any of the rulings of the Judicial Committee; on the contrary, as already shown, it finds no countenance in them."

But the learned Judge did not however express any opinion on the interpretation placed by us. The learned Judge again remarks :

"To construe cls. (i) and (iii) of the new S. 92 is not within our purview. It is not therefore for us to say whether the construction adopted in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹ is right or not, whatever may be our own view on the matter."

Mr. Satyanarayana Rao contends that the observations of Venkatasubba Rao, J., are well founded in principle and the distinction sought to be made in *Lakshmi Amma v. Sankara Narayana Menon*¹ does not exist and that on a proper construction of S. 92, a person who advances money to a mortgagor and takes a mortgage or sale would come within cl. (i) of S. 92. Considerable reliance was placed upon certain decisions of the Judicial Committee and the interpretation placed upon them by our High Court and other High Courts. Those decisions are *Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das*², *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das*³, *Dinabandhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Das*⁴, *Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh*⁵ and *Jagmohan v. Jugal Kishore*⁶. I shall now proceed to examine the soundness of the contention and the scope of the said Privy Council decisions. The cases in *Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das*² and *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das*³ were decided before the Transfer of Property Act (1882) was enacted and the other cases were decided after the enactment of the Act but before the recent amendment in 1929 and 1930. Both in 9 and 10 Calcutta cases, their Lordships applied certain rules of English Law as rules of justice, equity and good conscience. They approved of the rule in *Adams v. Angel*⁷ and disapproved of the rule in *Toulmin v. Steeres*⁸, the one on the ground that it was in consonance with the rules of justice equity and good conscience and the other, on the ground that it was not. I shall first explain the scope of the rule in Toulmin v. Steeres.

It is well settled that a mortgagor who has created more than one encumbrance cannot set up a prior encumbrance which he has discharged against a later encumbrance. This is on the principle that a person who borrows money cannot be his own creditor and he would be derogating from his own grant. But *Toulmin v. Steere*¹ carried the principle a step further and applied the same principle to a person who acquired an equity of redemption. The soundness of the decision was always questioned in English Courts though it was not overruled. Its application was limited as far as possible. The limit of the rule as enunciated therein is thus explained by Lord Macnaughten in *Thorne v. Cann*²:

"A purchaser who took a conveyance purporting to be free from encumbrances could not set up a mortgage which had been paid off out of the purchase money against an encumbrance subsequent in date of which he had constructive notice. The authority of that case cannot nowadays be treated as going beyond the actual decision."

This rule was considered by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee as not being in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. They further stated that they were not prepared to extend that doctrine to India.

I shall now deal with the rule in *Adams v. Angell*³. In that case, Jessel, M.R., after laying down the general proposition that the mere fact of a charge having been paid off does not decide the question whether it is extinguished, proceeded to explain in what cases it could be said to have extinguished and in what cases, not. He instanced the case of a charge paid off by a tenant for life without any expression of his intention and in such a case he observed that it was presumed that his intention was to keep it alive. He then proceeded to instance the case of an owner of an estate in fee or tail. In dealing with this, he observed the presumption was the other way remarking that if there was no reason for keeping it alive, equity, would, in the absence of any declaration of his intention, destroy it, but if there was a reason for keeping it alive, equity would not destroy it. He then took the case of a purchaser and observed that if he paid off a charge, he might have it assigned to a trustee for himself or might have a declaration inserted in the deed that the charge should be treated as remaining on foot for the purpose of protecting him against any encumbrances. The learned Master of the Rolls then wound up thus:

"The intention, therefore, if expressed, governs the case, but if no intention is expressed, then *Toulmin v. Steere*¹ says that in the incumbrance which is paid off is merged, and the subsequent incumbrancers let in."

On the actual facts of that case, he found that the intention was clearly shown not to let in the subsequent incumbrancer. According to Adams v. Angells, a purchaser who pays off a charge must show an intention to keep it alive if he wishes to prevent its merger and such an intention was shown in that case. (This is also how Lord Justice Lindley understood the case.) See Liquidation Estates Purchase Company v. Willoughbys. Let us see how the Privy Council applied the rule. In 9 Calcutta case the right of subrogation was negatived. In that case one Mangal Das as the agent of an Asthal executed a mortgage in favour of one Lachminarain. During that time one Balgobind was the Mahant. After the death of Balgobind disputes arose between Mangal Das and another as to succession. In 1872 Mangal Das purporting to act as the proprietor executed a mortgage in favour of one Mohesh Lal and a part of the consideration for the mortgage was utilised in discharging the prior mortgage in favour of Lachminarain. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee after citing the rule in Adams v. Angells as enunciated by Jessel, M.R., proceeded to apply the said rule in the following words:

"Applying that rule to the present case, it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of intention to the contrary, that Mangal, who when he borrowed the money to pay off Lachminarain's mortgage, claimed to be the owner of the estate, and was stated on the face of the bond to be so, intended that the money should be applied in paying off that mortgage, and in extinguishing the charge, there being no intermediate encumbrance. Although the money was paid by the plaintiff's gumastha to Lachminarain's estate, it was paid with money borrowed from the plaintiff by Mangal, and for which Mangal was liable to him. The mortgage was therefore paid off by Mangal and not by the plaintiff."

It will be seen that Mangal was treated as the owner in fee and the amount borrowed by him and paid in discharge of the prior mortgage was treated as money paid by the owner in fee. Though the money was expressly borrowed for the purpose of paying off the prior mortgage, their Lordships negatived the right of subrogation. The principle is this, that money received in consideration of a mortgage or sale of a property will be the property of the mortgagor or a vendor. Prima facie therefore the money that goes in discharge of the prior mortgage will be the money of the mortgagor or the vendor and therefore it will be payment by the owner in fee. Though in that case it was paid by Mohesh Lal the mortgagee's gumastha, still their Lordships observed that the mortgage was paid by Mangal and not by Mohesh Lal. Their Lordships remarked that as there was no intermediate encumbrance, the charge must be deemed to be extinguished and they declined to raise an equity in favour of Mohesh Lal. In order to have this equity there must be a declaration of his intention and in the absence of such a declaration for keeping it alive, their Lordships observed that it was extinguished.

I shall now take the 10 Calcutta case and see how the rule was applied. In that case, a person in execution of a money decree purchased in Court auction a certain property which was admittedly subject to more than one mortgage. As purchaser of the equity of redemption, after the purchase he discharged the first mortgage and was held entitled to the right of subrogation in respect thereof against the later mortgage. After referring to *Adams v. Angell*¹ and *Toulmin v. Steere*², Sir Richard Couch formulates the question thus and answers it:

"The obvious question to ask in the interests of justice, equity and good conscience is, what was the intention of the party paying off the charge? He had a right to extinguish it and a right to keep it alive. What was his intention? If there is no express evidence of it, what intention should be ascribed to him? In the familiar instance of a tenant for life paying off a charge upon the inheritance, he is assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have intended to keep the charge alive. It cannot signify whether the division of interests in the property is by way of life estate and remainder or by way of successive charges. In each case it may be for the advantage of the owner of a partial interest to keep on foot a charge upon the corpus which he has paid."

Their Lordships therefore treated the case of a purchaser of an equity of redemption in exactly the same position as a life tenant, that is, a person having an existing interest in the property and discharging a prior mortgage by reason of such an existing interest and not being under a personal liability to pay the charge or being under a contractual liability to pay the encumbrance. The expression "the owner of a partial interest" would take in the case of a second and every subsequent mortgagee. The money that is paid by the second mortgagee or the purchaser in such a case would be his own money and cannot in any sense be considered to be the money of the mortgagor because the money is paid as owner of an existing interest, that is, the purchaser as owner of equity of redemption. Where a mortgagor mortgages or sells a property for discharging a subsisting mortgage, whether the mortgagor discharges by receiving the money or the mortgagee or vendee discharges by covenanting to do so retaining the consideration money for the mortgage or sale, it will in either case be a discharge by the mortgagor. Where the mortgagee or vendee covenants with the mortgagor to discharge a particular incumbrance, he assumes the duty of the mortgagor. Prima facie therefore as stated by Jones in his book on 'Mortgages', S. 258:

"If the money be paid by one who has assumed the duty of paying the debt, either by contract with the mortgagor or with those who may have succeeded to his rights, this must be taken, as regards other subsequent interests, as a payment"

"as the payment was in pursuance of his agreement, it may be regarded as made with the mortgagor's money." (S. 864.)

In dealing with the case of a mortgagee who purchases an equity of redemption, Vice-Chancellor Hall in Adams v. Angell states the principle thus at page 642:—

"A mortgagee who purchases an equity of redemption from a vendor liable to pay the mortgage debt, ought, it would seem, in the absence of contract to the contrary, ordinarily to be considered as giving up his claim as creditor against the estate, and not merely his personal remedy against the mortgagor. The parties can well arrange to the contrary, but not doing so, it seems reasonable that the debt satisfied for one purpose should be deemed satisfied for all purposes. That this involves a second mortgagee being placed in a better position than he previously was, does not seem to me to affect the question. Indeed the improved position of the second mortgagee would seem, after all, to be only consistent with his contract, if such contract be considered (as it reasonably may be) to have been a contract that he should have a security on the property, but subject to a prior charge so long as the creditor having that charge remained unpaid."

It will be seen from this passage that it is open to the parties to arrange to the contrary. Of course, where no such arrangement is made, the English law modified the rule in *Toulmin v. Steere*¹, where a person advancing the money had no notice of an intermediate encumbrance or other circumstances which would raise equity in his favour. Even in such cases where from the terms of the mortgage deed or purchase deed it is clear that the intention to keep alive a charge is inconsistent with the real intention of the parties it would not be kept alive because the mortgagee or purchaser finds it would have been better for him to have kept the charge alive. (Vide the observations of Lord Justice Lindley in Liquidation Estates Purchase Company v. Willoughby.) Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das illustrates this rule very clearly. That case was one in which the mortgagee had not an existing interest but acquired an interest in consideration of certain money paid to the mortgagor and prima facie the money so paid to the mortgagor would be the money of the mortgagor with which the prior mortgage would have been redeemed. Both these cases illustrate the distinction between the case of a person having an existing interest and the case of a person acquiring an interest. As I said, these cases arose before the Transfer of Property Act was enacted.

Now let us see how the matter stood under the Act. Ss. 74 and 75 of the Act enacted that every second or subsequent mortgagee on discharging a prior mortgage will be entitled to all his rights. The sections gave effect to the recognition of the principle that a person having an existing interest and not being under personal or contractual liability to pay an encumbrance is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of a prior encumbrance which is discharged. S. 95 provides for the case of a co-mortgagor. S. 101 provides for the case of a union of interests, that is, the case of an incumbrancer becoming owner of the property. It was applied also to the case of a purchaser of equity of redemption discharging a prior encumbrance. It will be seen from the language of S. 74 that it is a statutory right and the Courts do not go into the question whether it was for the benefit of the subsequent mortgagee to keep the prior mortgage alive or not; the presumption which was automatically raised in such cases in England was recognised as a statutory right.

In the case of a person who advances money for the purpose of paying off a mortgage and takes a mortgage or sale, the principle would be that prima facie the prior mortgage is discharged unless there is an agreement that it should be kept alive or the mortgagee or the vendee shows that there is some reason for presuming or implying such an agreement in his favour as the subsistence of an intermediate incumbrance, that is, the onus is on him to prove it. The presumption and onus are not the same as in the two classes of cases, that is, in the case where a person having an existing interest discharges a prior mortgage and a person acquiring an interest discharges a mortgage. The result of the case-law in regard to presumption and onus in cases where a charge is not discharged by a mortgagor and in the absence of an expression of intention or an express agreement to have the charge kept alive may be summarised thus:

(1) If a charge is paid off by a tenant for life, he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance. The presumption is that he intends to keep it alive. *Adams v. Angell*¹ and *W. Tasker & Sons, Ltd., In re: Hoare v. W. Tasker & Sons, Ltd.*² The burden of proof is upon those who allege that in paying off the charge he intended to exonerate the estate. (*Burrell v. Earl of Egremont*³.) This is irrespective of any existence of an intermediate encumbrance. (*Jones v. Morgan*⁴ and *Walker v. Symonds*⁵.)

(2) Where a second or a subsequent mortgagee discharges a first or prior mortgage, the same presumption and onus are raised as in the case of a tenant for life. As the Privy Council remarks in *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das*⁶:

"It cannot signify whether the division of interests in the property is by way of life estate and remainder, or by way of successive charges."

(S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act.)

It would seem that the Privy Council applied the principle applicable to cases coming under this class to the case of a purchaser of an equity of redemption discharging a mortgage apparently on the ground that the charge was by an owner of an existing interest. (Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das.) It appears to me that it would more appropriately come under the next class of cases.

(3) Where the owner of an estate in fee pays off a charge, the presumption is the other way. Equity would in the absence of any declaration of his intention destroy it, but if there was a reason for keeping it alive such as the existence of another encumbrance, equity would not destroy it. Adams v. Angell; also W. Tasker & Sons, Limited, In re: Hoare v. W. Tasker & Sons, Limited.

As the learned Editor of the Article on 'Mortgages' in Hailsham's Edition of Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 23, points out in the footnote at page 516:

"When a tenant in fee simply pays off a charge, the original presumption is in favour of merger. Where under the circumstances it is for his advantage to keep the charge alive, there may be a rebutting presumption which prevents merger."

Take the case of a person who becomes entitled to an equity of redemption by descent or devise. If he pays the charge created by his predecessor, the presumption is merger but he can keep it alive or if there is an intermediate incumbrance or other circumstances which will have to be proved, a rebutting presumption will be made in his favour. (Vide the observations of Sir John Romilly in *Davis v. Barrett*¹, the case of an heir discharging an encumbrance created by his predecessor.) The onus of proving such circumstances is on him, though admission of them might dispense with proof in some cases.

Under this category, in my opinion, would come the case also of a purchaser of an equity of redemption discharging a mortgage. The presumption would be merger but where there is an expression of an intention or an intermediate encumbrance or such a continuance would be for his benefit, a rebutting presumption will be made in his favour. This is the rule embodied in S. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act before the Amendment.

(4) Where a person advances money to discharge a mortgage and takes a mortgage or sale, the presumption is that the mortgage is extinguished. But if it is shown that there is an intermediate encumbrance or other circumstances which raise equity in his favour, the presumption shifts or is rebutted and an agreement with the borrower that the mortgage was to be kept alive is presumed or implied. The agreement is often implied from such circumstances as an arrangement with the mortgagor that after the discharge of the mortgage the mortgage deed should be surrendered to him and a new document would be executed in his favour or a sale free from encumbrance. (Vide Dinabandhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasī and Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh.) The onus is on him to prove them. (Purnamal Chand v. Venkata Subbarayadus.)

Where there is no intermediate incumbrance or any other circumstances which would raise an equity in his favour, the original presumption that the mortgage is extinguished will not give place to a rebutting presumption in his favour and the onus is on him to prove that there was an express agreement to keep the mortgage alive. This principle is exemplified by the cases in Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das and Kalagayya v. Yanadammas.

(5) Where one advances money to another for paying off a mortgage without stipulating for any security, the presumption is that the mortgage is discharged unless by an agreement with the borrower he is subrogated to the mortgage security. (Ram Tuhul Singh v. Biseswar Lal Sahoo.) The rule in English law appears to be different. (Vide Cracknall v. Jansoni, which appears to treat him as an equitable transferee of the debt.)

Whether it is a case of an original presumption as in (1) and (2) or a case of rebutting presumption as in (3) and (4), the theory on which the presumption and onus are rested is that an intention in favour of a gift will not be presumed. (Vide the observations of Lord Justice Fletcher Moulton in Manks v. Whiteley.) This judgment was upheld in Whiteley v. Delaney.

Both Dinabandhu Shaw Chowdhry v. Jogmaya Dasī and Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh are cases of mortgages and not purchases. In the 29 Calcutta case, one Mustafi advanced a sum of Rs. 40,000 for the purpose of discharging two prior mortgages. The mortgages were discharged with the amount. A question arose whether the mortgage in favour of Mustafi had priority over an attachment of property which came into effect before the date of the mortgage. Their Lordships from the nature of the transaction inferred an agreement that the mortgages intended to be discharged should be kept alive. After referring to *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Puranmal Premsukh Das*¹, they remarked thus:—

"Here the mortgagor was paying off his own debts, but he was doing so for the benefit of Mustafi and in performance of the agreement with him."

Therefore their Lordships recognised that though the money would prima facie become the money of the mortgagor as in the 9 Calcutta case, as the money was paid in performance of an agreement with the mortgagee, it should be kept alive. This their Lordships inferred from the fact that it was intended that the mortgagee should have an unencumbered property and the charge in his favour should have priority over all other charges. It would have been very easy for their Lordships to apply the rule under S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act by treating Mustafi as a second mortgagee; but they would not apply that section because that section was intended to relate only to a person having an existing interest in the property and discharging a prior mortgage out of his own money without being under a stipulation with the mortgagor to discharge it from and out of the consideration money for his mortgage. Therefore the distinction between a person having an existing right and the person acquiring an interest was kept in view by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Again, in *Mahomed Ibrahim Hossain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh*², there was a mortgage in favour of one Alfian on 17th February, 1888, which was effected for the purpose of discharging a serpeshgi debt dated 20th November, 1874. Their Lordships gave the benefit of subrogation to Alfian in respect of the serpeshgi deed dated 20th November, 1884, by inferring an agreement that that mortgage should be kept alive. At page 554 this is what their Lordships observe:

"The Rs. 12,000 lent by Musammat Alfian were in accordance with the agreement between Musammat Alfian and Kishan Kumar Singh applied in paying off the serpeshgi debt, that on payment of that debt the serpeshgi deed of the 20th November, 1874, was handed over to Musammat Alfian, and that Musammat Alfian when she lent her Rs. 12,000 intended to keep alive for her benefit and protection the charge which had been created by the serpesghi deed of the 20th November, 1884."

After referring to *Mohesh Lal v. Mohant Bawan Das*¹ and *Gokaldas Gopaldas v. Purnamal Premsookh Das*², they observe that applying the rule of justice, equity and good conscience, the charge was kept alive. It is also significant that their Lordships did not apply S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act but invoked the principle of equity, thus again illustrating the distinction between a person having an existing interest and a person acquiring an interest. This principle was again illustrated in *Jagmohan v. Jugal Kishore*³, where in respect of half of the purchase money their Lordships did not give the benefit of subrogation by implying an agreement because there was no intermediate encumbrance. Mulla does recognise that 29 and 39 Calcutta cases were based on conventional subrogation and that S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act would not apply to cases where a person is under a contractual liability to discharge a mortgage.

In order therefore to avoid questions of intention and onus being gone into by Courts and with a view to place the right of subrogation on a statutory basis the Legislature enacted S. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act. As remarked by Mulla, S. 92 (i) deals with the case of a person having an existing interest and S. 92 (iii) deals with the case where under the previous state of the law the right of subrogation was invoked on the doctrine of conventional subrogation. This follows from the plain language of the section and there is very good reason why the Legislature adopted this view. In the case of a person having an existing interest, there is no need to resort to any agreement express or implied and S. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act before the amendment gave partial recognition in favour of second and subsequent mortgagees and S. 92 (i) only extended the said principle. In other cases the Court had to go into questions of intention, in certain cases coming to the conclusion that there was an intention to keep the mortgage alive and in certain other cases, that there was no such intention. The Legislature therefore enacted the rule in S. 92 (iii) as it is always open to a person who advances money to enter into an agreement. I do not see any injustice in enacting such a rule. The legislature does give the benefit of the principle of subrogation even in such cases but the legislature requires that the person intended to take advantage of the benefit must comply with certain requirements, the requirements being a registered instrument for keeping alive the prior mortgage which can always be done even by the very transaction—sale or mortgage—under which the money was advanced by making a declaration that it was agreed between the parties that the prior mortgage was intended to be kept alive.

It is contended by Mr. Satyanarayana Rao that the words in cl. (iii), “a person who has advanced money to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed”, are only intended to cover the case of a person who merely lends money, without stipulating for any security as such a person cannot in law acquire any right of subrogation but for the statutory provision. There is no warrant for placing such a narrow construction. The words are wide enough to cover the case of a mortgagee or a vendee who advances money in consideration of a mortgage or sale. All that the section requires is that money must have been received by the mortgagor from the person who advances it and with which the mortgage must have been redeemed. What is contemplated by the section is the receipt of money by a mortgagor for the discharge of a mortgage and the redemption of such a mortgage with that money. The money may have been received by the mortgagor either by raising a loan by a mere personal security or by a transfer of the mortgaged property by way of a mortgage or sale. In such cases the money with which the mortgage is redeemed will be the money of the mortgagor obtained by him in any of the modes indicated above. Prima facie therefore the redemption of the mortgage being with the mortgagor's money, the mortgage is discharged. But as and by way of equity an agreement was inferred in cases where there is no express agreement for keeping the mortgage alive. As the inference of such an intention is dependent upon a number of circumstances and to avoid Courts going into them, cl. (iii) was enacted to confer a statutory right in such cases provided the person seeking the benefit of it fulfils the conditions mentioned in the section.

I am therefore of the opinion that the vendees in this case not having obtained a registered agreement stipulating that they should be subrogated to the rights of the mortgage which they have discharged, they are not entitled to set up any claim of priority over the plaintiff's mortgage. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Rao, J.

Newsam, J.—This was a suit on a mortgage dated 3rd October, 1925, executed by a Hindu father and his four major sons. Defendants 6 and 7 purchased seven items of the hypotheca on 2nd November, 1933. The sale of these items to defendants 6 and 7 was expressly stated to be in order to avoid at sale in execution of a decree based on a prior mortgage of the same property dated August, 1914. The question is whether defendants 6 and 7 are by virtue of their purchase subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage was redeemed with their money. The Court below has answered this question in the negative.

Newsam, J.

The law to be applied is admitted to be found in Ss. 91 and 92 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In order to be subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee whose mortgage you redeem you must be either—

(a) a person entitled to sue for redemption [cl. (i) of S. 92]; or

(b) a person who has advanced money to a mortgagor for redeeming a mortgage and a person who has contracted for subrogation with the mortgagor by a registered instrument [cl. (iii) of S. 92].

S. 91 tells us who are persons entitled to sue for redemption. The mortgagor, of course, but the equitable doctrine of subrogation obviously does not apply to mortgagors. Persons entitled to institute a suit for redemption fall into three classes only:

(1) any person who has an interest in or charge upon the property mortgaged or an interest in or charge upon the right to redeem;

(2) any surety for payment of the mortgage debt or a part thereof;

(3) any creditor of the mortgagor who in a suit for administration of his estate has obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property.

rayudu
v.
Lakshmi-
narasamma.
Newsam, J.

Excluding the mortgagor, this is an exhaustive list of the persons entitled to sue for redemption. The question is whether defendants 6 and 7 fall into one or other of these categories. The answer is that they obviously do not. They were not persons entitled to sue for redemption when they purchased property burdened with a mortgage-debt. They did not therefore by their purchase 'redeem' a mortgage. Since they were not persons entitled to sue for redemption their purchase cannot be deemed in equity to be a redemption. That is the principle laid down in the first clause of S. 92. A rule of equity has been given statutory recognition, and it has been strictly confined and limited to persons entitled to sue for redemption. A person not entitled to sue for redemption who purchases property subject to mortgage becomes ipso facto a person entitled to sue for redemption which is the very reverse of saying that he is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. A person not entitled to sue for redemption who buys mortgaged property (that is, advances money to the mortgagor with which the mortgage is redeemed) may however contract with the mortgagor for the right to be subrogated to the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed. But the contract must be in writing and registered. That is the gist of cl. (iii) of S. 92. It is an extension of the principle "caveat emptor". A would-be purchaser of property subject to more than one mortgage must protect himself by a registered instrument. He must contract with the mortgagor for discharge of the prior mortgagee or mortgagees and for the rights of the prior mortgagee or mortgagees, and he can only do so by a registered instrument. Where a statute is as clear as Ss. 91 and 92 are, authority is strictly speaking superfluous. The state of the law on the subject of subrogation before the Amending Act (XX of 1929) is a matter of academic interest, but as a matter of fact the Amending Act merely gave effect to a simple rule of equity, the application of which to the various classes of persons who claimed its benefits was difficult. The application of this rule of equity has now been placed on a statutory and easily intelligible basis. The rule has been defined and the persons to whom the rule is applicable have been classified. Conflict of opinion has been clarified and stilled.

I agree with my learned brother that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

The decree that we pass herein will be without prejudice to the right of the mortgagors and the purchasers of the equity of redemption to claim any relief under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. The application that has been filed here for this purpose will be remitted to the lower Court for being dealt with on its merits.

The Memorandum of Cross-objections is dismissed. No costs.

Held, that since there was no right to relief alleged to exist in the petitioner jointly, severally or in the alternative, and as the petitioner claimed adversely also to the first plaintiff in the suit, it would be expedient to strike out his name as second plaintiff. But as he was clearly a person whose presence before the Court was necessary in order to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all questions involved in the suit, he could be transposed as a defendant in the suit.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This Revision Petition is filed against the order of the Court below refusing to strike out the petitioner's name from the plaint. The petitioner who is the second plaintiff in the suit sold to the first plaintiff the first respondent herein a certain village called Puducottah which, along with certain other villages belonging to the defendants in the suit some of whom are the other respondents here, was charged with the payment of a certain annuity. In execution of a decree obtained for the recovery of such annuity, the petitioner's village was sold but the sale was set aside under O. 21, r. 89 on the petitioner depositing Rs. 2,976-9-6 in Court. The petitioner alone having thus paid the entire amount which was payable from out of all the villages charged with such payment, he claimed to be entitled to recover Rs. 2,514 by way of contribution from the owners of the other villages. Subsequently, the petitioner sold the village of Puducottah to the first respondent with all rights appurtenant thereto. The sale-deed purports to convey also the petitioner's right to recover this sum of Rs. 2,514 and the present suit was accordingly brought by the first respondent impleading the petitioner as second plaintiff for recovering this sum from the defendants who are the owners of the other villages charged with the payment of the annuity.

In the application filed by the petitioner in the Court below, however, he alleged, that the sale by him to the first respondent was never intended to convey his right to recover the amount in question, that the clause purporting to convey this sum also was included in the sale-deed by the first respondent fraudulently, advantage being taken of his ignorance and illiteracy and that he was impleaded as the second plaintiff in the suit without his knowledge. The lower Court, however, found that the petitioner did sign the plaint and also the vakalath executed to the first respondent's pleader in the Court below and the petitioner's learned Advocate has not attacked that finding before me.

Vanjiappa
Goundan
v.
Annamalai
Chettiar.

He contends that inasmuch as there is no prayer in the plaint for any relief being awarded to the petitioner, either primarily or in the alternative, he could not be regarded as a plaintiff at all in the proper sense of the term, and his joinder as second plaintiff was improper, and the Court below should therefore have struck out his name under O. 1, r. 10 (2), Civil Procedure Code. The first respondent objects on the ground that the petitioner's application was vexatious and inspired by the first defendant (second respondent herein) who wants to defeat his right to recover the amount in question under the sale from the petitioner, and that the striking out of the latter's name from the suit would be highly prejudicial to him. The second respondent has no objection to the petitioner's name being struck off as second plaintiff, provided he is added as a defendant but insists that the petitioner should remain on the record, as his presence is necessary for a complete and effectual adjudication of all the matters in controversy between the parties.

The Court below held that the joinder of the petitioner as second plaintiff was not shown to be improper and that he had no absolute right of withdrawing from the suit under O. 23, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, without the consent of the first respondent and therefore dismissed the application. The petitioner's learned Advocate conceded that the view of the lower Court is right so far as O. 23, r. 1 is concerned, in view of the decision of this Court reported in *Ramaswami Chettiar v. Rengan Chettiar*¹, but he urged that the petitioner's joinder as a plaintiff was improper and that, in any case, as he now claims the amount in dispute adversely to the first respondent, he cannot continue to be a co-plaintiff with the latter but should be transposed as a defendant, if he could not be removed from the suit altogether. I see considerable force in this contention. The joinder of the petitioner as second plaintiff is not authorised by the terms of O. 1, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, as no right to relief is alleged to exist in the petitioner jointly, severally or in the alternative, and when the petitioner begins to set up a claim to the amount in suit adversely to the first respondent, it will be highly expedient, if not necessary, to strike out his name as second plaintiff as desired by him. But as he is clearly a person whose presence before the Court is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, the proper order, in my opinion, would be to direct the petitioner to be transposed as a defendant in the suit, see Mathews, In re: *Oates v. Mooney*¹, where it was observed,

"The general rule is that where co-plaintiffs disagree, the name of one is struck out as plaintiff and added as defendant".

The Court below has taken the view, relying upon *Banbihari Mukherji v. Bhejnath Singh Mahapatra*², that the 'questions involved in the suit' referred to in O. 1, r. 10 (2) must mean the questions which are involved in the suit as originally framed between the parties to the suit. But this High Court has placed a wider interpretation on those words and has held that the object of the provision is that where several disputes arise out of one subject-matter, all the parties interested in such disputes should be brought before the Court and all questions in controversy between them should be completely settled in the action—see Secretary of State for India v. Murugesu Mudaliars.

Further, the Court below has not considered the question from the point of view of the rights of the parties. Assuming that the petitioner's allegation that the right to recover the amount in question was never intended to be conveyed by him to the first respondent is true—as to which I express no opinion—the effect the order of the lower Court would clearly be to nullify that right by precluding him from suing the defendants again for the recovery of the amount, while in this suit he cannot obviously get that relief. The first respondent's learned Advocate suggested that the petitioner might, if his allegation is true, sue the first respondent later on for the recovery of any sum that might be decreed to the latter in this suit. But apart from possible technical objections to which such a suit might be open by reason of the petitioner having signed the plaint in this suit, it would be a suit to enforce a cause of action which the Court would have helped to bring into existence by enabling the first respondent to commit, under its own ægis, what undoubtedly would be a wrongful act on the hypothesis assumed.

Having regard to all these considerations, I set aside the order of the Court below and direct the name of the petitioner

Seetha

Ramappa.

The only conditions that can be imposed under S. 41 (2) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act are conditions with respect to any earnings or income which may afterwards become due to the insolvent or with respect to his after-acquired property. It is not possible to impose a condition that the insolvent shall pay any specified proportion of his debts.

Where an insolvent's debts exceeded Rs. 18,000 and his total assets realised were a little above Rs. 50 the Court was obliged under S. 42 (1) to refuse an absolute order of discharge, unless the insolvent satisfied the Court that the fact that the assets were not of a value equal to 8 annas in the rupee on the amount of his unsecured liabilities had arisen from circumstances for which he could not justly be held responsible.

The operation of an order of discharge can only be suspended after the order has come into existence.

Burn, J.—The order of the learned District Judge in this case cannot be supported. The insolvent's debts exceeded Rs. 18,000 and his total assets realised is a little over Rs. 50. In these circumstances the Court was obliged by S. 42 (1) to refuse an absolute order of discharge unless the insolvent satisfied the Court that the fact that the assets were not of a value equal to eight annas in the rupee on the amount of his unsecured liabilities had arisen from circumstances for which he could not justly be held responsible. insolvent. The learned District Judge did not consider these matters at all. He has made no reference to S. 42 but he has passed an order which on the face of it is wholly indefensible. He says that the petitioner is given an absolute order of discharge subject to the condition of paying two annas in the rupee. That is an impossible condition. The only conditions that can be imposed under S. 41 (2) (c) are conditions with respect to any earnings or income which may afterwards become due to the insolvent or with respect to his after-acquired property. It is not possible to impose a condition that the insolvent shall pay any specified proportion of his debts. The learned Judge has further ordered that failing that, that is, failing payment of two annas in the rupee, the operation of the order of discharge be suspended for a period of 18 months. This order of the learned Judge was passed on the 7th of November, 1936 and the contention raised on behalf of the respondent is that, by the 7th of May, 1938, this had worked itself out, and the respondent had thereby become discharged. There is considerable confusion in the arguments addressed to us on this point.

Learned Counsel for the respondent has observed that under S. 41 (2) the Court may (a) grant or refuse an absolute order of discharge; or (b) suspend the operation of the order of discharge for a specified time; or (c) grant an order of discharge subject to conditions.

Learned Counsel appears to be labouring under a delusion that if the Court says "I will suspend the operation of the order for 18 months", some order of discharge will automatically come into existence at the end of 18 months. This is obviously wrong. The operation of an order can only be suspended after an order has come into existence. It is not possible to suspend the operation of an order which has not yet been passed. Therefore it follows that if the operation of the order of the respondent's discharge has been suspended by the learned Judge for 18 months, the learned Judge must have granted him an order of discharge on or before the 7th of November, 1936. But under S. 42 (1) of the Act the learned Judge could not grant him an absolute order of discharge without considering the further matters mentioned in that section.

The order of the learned District Judge is therefore set aside and the petition is remanded to the lower Court for disposal according to law. The appellant will recover the costs of the appeal from the respondent.

The Memorandum of Objections preferred by the respondent contending that he ought to have been granted an absolute order of discharge is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Only daughter's son—Datta homam not necessary—Yama's text—Ceremonial competence of putrika putra recognised, even otherwise.

Where an only daughter's son is adopted by a Brahmin, it is valid despite the fact that the datta homam ceremony is not performed.

Yama's text relied upon. 20 C.W.N. 19, referred to.

Case-law reviewed.

Per Patanjali Sastri, J.—The context makes it clear that the expression 'Vāgdanadēva' (by mere verbal gift) is used in contradistinction to 'homadi niyama' (prescription of homa or the like), to convey the meaning that no gift accompanied by the burning of the sacrificial fire and vyakritis, etc., is necessary, but a mere gift with a verbal declaration of intention to give is sufficient.

It would not be unreasonable to hold also that the datta homa ceremony is not necessary in the case of the adoption of a daughter's son who, according to the Hindu Dharma Sastras, is already endowed with such ceremonial competence.

datta homam ceremony is essential when a Brahmin adopts the son of his daughter. Natesa Aiyar, the brother of the first appellant, adopted the respondent, the son of his only daughter. Natesa Aiyar was joint with his brother and his brother's son, the second appellant. Natesa Aiyar died on the 23rd September, 1929, and the respondent filed the suit out of which this appeal arises on the 22nd January, 1930, for partition of the family properties. The appellants denied the factum of adoption and advanced the alternative plea that if the respondent had been adopted, the adoption was invalid as the datta homam ceremony had not been performed. They also averred that if the respondent's adoption was valid, the partition of the family estate was not for his benefit. The District Munsif of Kumbakonam, who tried the suit, held that the adoption had taken place, but the datta homam ceremony had not been performed. As the District Munsif considered that the ceremony was not necessary for a valid adoption and being of the opinion that the suit was for the benefit of the respondent he granted the decree prayed for. The appellants appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who concurred in all the findings of the District Munsif. The appeal to the Subordinate Judge having failed, the appellants have appealed to this Court. The findings of fact of the Subordinate Judge are conclusive and the only question which we have to decide is whether the performance of the datta homam ceremony was essential in this case, the family being of the Brahmin caste.

By the decision of the Privy Council in *Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit*¹, it has now been finally settled that the datta homam ceremony is not necessary when the adoption is of a Brahmin boy of the same gotra. I shall return to the judgment in that case presently; but before doing so I desire to trace the course of decisions in this Province. In *Singamma v. Ramanujachari*², it was held that in order to establish a valid adoption in a Brahmin family proof of the performance of datta homam was not essential; proof of the giving and taking was sufficient. In that case it was not known whether the adopted boy was or was not of the same gotra, and the decision must, therefore, be taken to apply to the adoption of a boy of a different gotra. This decision was followed by Kindersley and Muttuswamy Aiyar, JJ., in *Chandramala v. Muktamala*¹, which related to an adoption by a Kshatriya. Muttuswamy Aiyar, J., however, observed that if the question whether religious ceremonies were essential to adoption were res integra, he would have felt considerable difficulty in holding that the ceremony of datta homam was not of the essence of a valid adoption among the three higher classes. The same doubt was expressed in the judgment of Turner, C. J. and Muttuswamy Aiyar, J., in *Venkata v. Subhadra*². In *Govindayyar v. Dorasami*³, a Full Bench, consisting of Collins, C. J. and Kernan, Muttuswamy Aiyar, Brandt and Parker, JJ., held that the ceremony of datta homam was not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmans in Southern India when the adoptive father and son belonged to the same gotra. To that extent the Court felt it might adhere safely to the decision in *Singamma v. Ramanujachari*⁴. It did not expressly say that that decision went too far and therefore, it cannot be said that the decision was overruled, but the doubts apparently still existed.

Saminatha
Aiyar
v.
Vageesan.
Leach, C.J.

The case of *Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandit*⁵ related to an adoption from the same gotra and in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, Lord Shaw observed:—

"The question whether the datta homam is a legal requisite in Bombay for adoption among the three twice born classes does not, however, in the view of their Lordships, broadly arise in the present case. It is in no way necessary to canvass or call in question any dicta upon that general point, nor does the question arise, whether, for instance, the principle extends to India at large of the decision of the Madras Full Bench in *Govindayyar v. Dorasami*³ or of the Madras High Court in *Singamma v. Ramanujachari*⁴, both decisions being of value as containing a careful study of the authorities, and affirming that the ceremony of datta homam is not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmans in Southern India, for, in the opinion of the Board, the necessity does not arise where the child to be adopted belongs to the same gotra as that of the adoptive father."

In view of this statement and bearing in mind that in *Govindayyar v. Dorasami*³, there was no express limitation of the decision in *Singamma v. Ramanujachari*⁴, it is certainly arguable that the latter decision still stands. If it stands, it is binding on us and provides a short answer to the appellants' case. It is, however, not necessary to come to a definite decision on the question whether it binds us or to inquire into the question whether the judgment went too far, because the appeal may be disposed of on another ground.

There is ancient authority for the proposition that the datta homam ceremony is not essential in the case of an adoption by a father of his daughter's son and the authority is the Yama text. The text is set out in the judgment of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee in Retki v. Lak Pati Pujari and reads as follows:—

"The homa or the like ceremony is not necessary in the case of adoption of the daughter's or the brother's son; by the verbal gift and acceptance alone, that is accomplished; this is declared by the Lord Yama."

Little is known of Yama but his name appears in the list of law-givers set forth in the Smriti of Yajnavalkya. Sir Asutosh Mookerjee accepted the text as of unquestionable genuineness and authority and set forth his reasons in detail. The text was accepted by the Bombay High Court in Valubai v. Govind Kashinath, and was accepted as authority for the proposition that the datta homam ceremony was not required in the case of adoption of a daughter's son in the course of the arguments in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandits. In Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, Banerjee, J., did cast doubt on the authenticity of the text, but I do not consider that his criticism should outweigh its acceptance in Retki v. Lak Pati Pujari, Valubai v. Govind Kashinath and Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shrinivas Pandits. Moreover, the case of Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh was carried to the Privy Council, and there is no indication in the judgment of the Board of the acceptance of the criticism of Banerjee, J. On the other hand Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment referred to the fact that

"One ancient sage called the holy Yama expressly asserts the right to adopt a sister's son."

It is true that the Yama text is in conflict with the Dattaka Chandrika in that the latter does not recognise the validity of the adoption of a daughter's son. The prohibition has, however, not been observed in Southern India, where a custom exists of adopting a sister's or a daughter's son (vide *Vayidinada v. Appu*¹). It does not, of course, follow from the fact that there is this custom that the datta homam ceremony is not essential in the case of the adoption of a daughter's son, and there is no evidence that it is customary to dispense with the datta homam ceremony in such a case, but if the Yama text is accepted it must be held that the ceremony is not essential to a valid adoption. I see no reason why it should not be accepted and consequently I hold that the adoption in this case was valid despite the fact that the datta homam ceremony was not performed...

Saminatha
Aiyar
v.
Vageesan.
Leach, C.J.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar on behalf of the respondent advanced the argument that the reason why the datta homam ceremony is not essential in the case of the adoption of a daughter's son is because the Hindu Law regards a daughter's son as being in the same position as a son's son in the performance of the obsequies and other ceremonies following the death of the grandfather. He referred in this connection to the judgment of Venkataramana Rao, J. in *Panchapakesa Iyer v. Gopalan*², where the learned Judge quoted these words of Vishnu:

"In regard to the obsequies of ancestors, daughter's sons are considered son's sons" and the following words of Manu:

"Between a son's son and the son of a daughter there exists in this world no difference; for even the son of a daughter saves him (who has no sons) in the next world, like the son's son."

This may be the reason why Yama declared that the datta homam ceremony was not essential in the case of the adoption of a daughter's son, but the validity of the text does not depend on the discovery of the reason for the rule.

For the appellant it has been argued that the Yama text refers to the son of a daughter born after the daughter's appointment by the father to continue his line. The wording of the text does not support this argument and the argument is obviously fallacious because adoption is not necessary when the appointed daughter bears a son. The son is regarded from the moment of his birth as the son of the daughter's father and not as the son of her husband.

I consider that the case was rightly decided below and as my learned brother shares this opinion the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Saminatha

v.
Vageesan,
Patanjali
Sastri, J.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—This second appeal raises the question of Hindu Law whether datta homa is essential to the validity of the adoption of a daughter's son by a Brahmin. The general question whether that ceremony is an essential requisite for a valid adoption among Brahmins and other twice-born classes was also raised, but it is not necessary in this case to decide it, as I am clearly of opinion that no datta homa is necessary even among Brahmins for the adoption of a daughter's son.

As there is no decided case on this precise question, the discussion before us had to turn to some extent on the Hindu Law texts and text books. The learned Advocate for the appellants urged that Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa are works of great and unquestionable authority on Hindu Law in matters relating to adoption and that both of them clearly laid down that datta homa is essential among the twice-born classes to the establishment of the filial relationship of the person adopted. This is no doubt the general rule according to these authorities, but an exception based on a text of Yama in the case of a brother's son's adoption has been recognised in decided cases. If the authority of this text is to be acted upon, it concludes the question in favour of the respondent as it excepts the adoption of a daughter's son also from the rule requiring datta homa. The appellant's learned Advocate therefore directed his attack against the genuineness and authority of this text, and drew our attention to the observations of Banerjee, J., in *Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh*¹, where that learned Judge throws doubt on the authenticity thereof. It is no doubt true that this text does not appear in Yama Smriti and Yamadharma Sastra as they are now extant. But the authenticity and the authority of the text have been accepted in a long course of decisions in this country beginning with *Hulbani Rao Mankur v. Govindarao Bulwant Rao Mankur*², and Mr. Mandlik has also regarded its authenticity as beyond question. In *Retki v. Lak Pati Pujari*³, Mukherjee, J., after an elaborate examination of the authorities bearing on the point definitely accepted its authenticity and relied upon its authority in the case of the adoption of a brother's son which was there in question. It was also accepted as genuine and acted upon by the Allahabad High Court in *Atma Ram v. Madho Rao*¹ and by the Bombay High Court in *Valu Bai v. Govind Kashinath*², both cases relating to adoption of a brother's son. In view of these decisions it seems to me that the authenticity as well as the authority of the text of Yama is no longer open to question.

Saminathia
Aiyar
v.
Vageesan.
Patanjali
Sastri, J.

The learned Advocate for the appellants further contended that even if the text is accepted as genuine, it must, on its true construction, be taken to apply only to the case of a putrika putra and a Dwayamushyayana adoption and not to Dattaka adoptions. The text runs thus:

'Danbitre Bhratru putre cha
Homadiniyamo na hi |
Vagdanadeva tatsiddih

which may be translated as follows:—

"Homa or the like is not prescribed in the case of a daughter's son or a brother's son; by verbal gift alone that is accomplished. So declared holy Yama."

The argument is that the expression 'Vagdanadeva' (by verbal gift alone) cannot apply to a Dattaka form of adoption as corporeal delivery and acceptance of the child is universally treated as the essential part of an adoption in the Dattaka form. It seems to me that this argument proceeds on a misconception. The context makes it clear that the expression 'Vagdanadeva' (by mere verbal gift) is used in contradistinction to 'Homadiniyama' (prescription of homa or the like), to convey the meaning that no gift accompanied by the burning of the sacrificial fire and Vyahrities, etc., is necessary, but a mere gift with a verbal declaration of intention to give is sufficient. 'Dana' or gift ordinarily imports corporeal delivery and 'Vagdana' is used merely to make it clear that the delivery is to be made with appropriate words showing an intention to give. Moreover, in the case of putrika putra, there was no adoption by the maternal grandfather at all. The daughter's son when born automatically became the son of the maternal grandfather if the latter had no male issue. He was recognised as one of the subsidiary sons in the Hindu Law not by virtue of any adoption but by mere intention on the part of the maternal grandfather and without any consent asked for or obtained (see Mayne's Hindu Law, 10th Edn., p. 113). The reference in the text to Vagdaṇa being sufficient would therefore be devoid of any meaning as applied to a 'putrika putra'. Nor has the reference to a brother's son ever been understood to relate only to Dwayanu-shyayana adoption. This contention of the appellant's learned Advocate must therefore be rejected.

Apart from the text of Yama referred to above, it has been contended by the learned Advocate for the respondent that the reason of the now well-established rule that no datta homa is necessary in cases where the adopted son and the adoptive father belong to the same gotra would apply equally to the adoption of a daughter's son. In the Full Bench decision in Govindayyar v. Dorasami, which laid down this rule for this Province, it is said at p. 9:

"Both Manu and Caunakha declare that one who is eligible for adoption should be the reflection or have the resemblance of a son and the commentators apparently thought that as adoption is made partly to secure spiritual benefit arising from the performance of obsequies, the prescribed ceremony was necessary to ensure to the adopted son competency to perform those obsequies with efficacy."

If, thus, the object of the Homa is to bring about an effective transfer of the person from his own gotra prior to the adoption to the gotra of the adopter so as to clothe him with ceremonial competency, it would seem that such a ceremony is not necessary in the case of a daughter's son who though belonging to a different gotra has always been recognised as competent to perform obsequial rites for the maternal grandfather. See the texts cited in Panchapaksa Aiyar v. Gopalan and Narsingh Rao v. Maha Lakshmi Bai, where their Lordships of the Privy Council point out that according to Hindu religious ideas, a daughter's son stands in the place of a son and like a son is a liberator from put. The respondent's learned Advocate suggested that the special position of a daughter's son in relation to his maternal grandfather might indeed be the reason for Yama's text excepting his adoption from the rule prescribing datta homa and other formalities. The suggestion certainly seems plausible but it can only be a speculation, as the text itself does not give the reasons on which it is based. But however that may be, as the Full Bench decision holding that no datta homa is necessary where the adopter and the person adopted belong to the same gotra seems to proceed upon the view that the homa would be necessary only to ensure the ceremonial competence of the person adopted, it would not be unreasonable to hold that such ceremony is not necessary in the case of the adoption of a daughter's son who according to the Hindu Dharma Sastras is already endowed with such ceremonial competence. On this ground also, the respondent's adoption can be upheld.

It is a matter of satisfaction that our conclusion which is in consonance with modern ideas which tend more and more to favour the disentanglement of civil rights and obligations from the meshes of Hindu ceremonial law could be supported on the authority of an ancient text.

I agree with my Lord that this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Madras Compulsory Labour Act (I of 1858), S. 6—Absentee ryot—Requisition for compulsory labour—Notice served in the ordinary way on tenants—Personal notice, whether necessary—Tenants, agents of the ryot—Provisions of the Act complied with.

Where under the Madras Compulsory Labour Act, S. 6, an absentee ryot who was liable for compulsory labour was demanded the proportionate amount due in respect of the work done, but he paid under protest and followed it up with a suit against the Government alleging that he had no notice of the requisition for labour for which he was asked to pay,

Held, that it would be sufficient compliance with the Act if the requisition were made in such a form as would ordinarily bring the matter to the notice of the persons concerned. In the present case the evidence showed that the tenants of the absentee person who were his agents practically, had received the notice regarding the labour demanded of him and that he had, from the beginning probably, knowledge of the proceedings. Hence he had no right to demand back that which was lawfully recovered from him for execution of works for which he should have paid himself.

decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly in O. S. No. 449 of 1932.

S. T. Srinivasagopalachari for Appellant.

The Government Pleader (B. Sitarama Rao) for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, an absentee ryot owning a large extent of land, sues to recover a sum of money alleged to have been unlawfully collected from him by the Revenue Department, as a contribution in lieu of customary labour for the repair of an irrigation source, leviable under the Madras Compulsory Labour Act I of 1858 S. 6 of that Act says:

"Whenever by local custom any work for the purpose of irrigation or drainage or connected therewith is usually executed by the joint labour of a village community, any person bound by such custom to contribute labour to such work who neglects or refuses without reasonable cause to comply with a requisition for such customary aid made to him by the head of the village under the orders of the Tahsildar or other superior revenue officer shall be liable to pay a sum equal to twice the value of the labour which he is bound to contribute."

It is established that on 1st June, 1929, a requisition for customary labour was published in the village by beat of tom-tom and by affixture in the village chavadi and temple and that signatures in token of knowledge of this requisition were taken from a large number of ryots including the tenants of the plaintiff who himself lives in Srirangam. The work was not done in accordance with the requisition and it was carried out departmentally. On 6th June, 1930, the plaintiff received an unofficial intimation that the proportionate amount due from him in respect of this work was being demanded. He took no action until on 15th June, 1931, the payment was actually demanded from him whereupon he paid under protest and followed his payment with notice of suit.

The Courts below have found that there is a local custom whereby compulsory labour can be exacted in respect of this tank and I do not think that it is open to the appellant in second appeal to go behind that finding which is a finding of fact. It is, however, contended that before any levy under S. 6 can be made it must be proved that there has been a requisition made to the ryot himself and that on the evidence in this case it cannot be held that any such requisition has been made to the plaintiff. There are no provisions under the Madras Compulsory Labour Act for the framing of statutory rules. But the Board of Revenue in its Standing Orders (vide B. S. O. 86, sub-r. 5) has promulgated the following orders:

"In the case of an absentee ryot it is desirable that he or his local agent should be advised of a requisition for customary labour in some unmistakable way, especially where the holding is a large one. Notice of such requisitions should always be posted at the village chavadi in addition to publishing by tom-tom."

Ragunatha
chariar

v.
Secretary of State for India.

It has not been shown that this order has statutory force and in so far as the first sentence of that order is concerned, it certainly cannot be taken to be mandatory. There must obviously arise cases in which it is not practicable to give notice to an absentee ryot or his agent of the demand for labour, but that is certainly not the case with reference to the present demand. Notice could have been given to the plaintiff personally but was not given. The question therefore resolves itself into this. There has been a compliance with the mandatory portion of the Board's Standing Order. There has not been a personal requisition made to the plaintiff himself but there has been wide publication of the requisition and it was served personally upon the plaintiff's tenants. Can it be said under such circumstances that there has been no requisition made to the plaintiff sufficient to render him liable under the penal provisions in S. 6 of the Act?

It is pointed out that though S. 6 provides for the recovery of twice the cost of the labour, the amount demanded from the plaintiff was only the actual cost of the execution of the proportionate share of the work which he himself by custom was bound to do. Seeing that the Act itself does not require that the requisition should be made to the villager concerned personally, I consider that it would be a sufficient compliance with the Act if the requisitions were made in such a form as would ordinarily bring the matter to the notice of the persons concerned. Here it is proved that the plaintiff himself lived in another town and had no resident local agent other than his tenants and that the tenants were the persons who paid the kist to Government. There was also some evidence, that, on a previous occasion when contribution for compulsory labour had been recovered, it was the tenants who brought it to the plaintiff's notice that the amount to his credit in respect of excess contribution recovered had not been taken into consideration in claiming the kist. It seems to me that there was sufficient evidence to justify the findings of the Courts below that the tenants of the plaintiff were his agents for matters connected with the liabilities of the plaintiff to Government in respect of the lands in that village. Since they were the persons to whom the Government looked for the payment of its revenue with the approval of the plaintiff, I am of opinion that the officers of Government were entitled to treat the tenants as the persons upon whom this requisition should be served. It was served upon them. There is every probability that the plaintiff knew all about it, he made no protest whatever until the money was actually recovered although he had known the facts certainly for a year and probably from the beginning of the proceedings. I do not consider that he has any right to demand back that which has been lawfully recovered from him for the execution of works for which he himself should have paid. The result therefore is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—I cannot agree that the omission of the learned Subordinate Judge to give notice to the appellant of the transfer of the appeal from the District Court, was a sufficient cause for him to absent himself when the appeal was heard. He was served with a notice in the appeal and he omitted to put in an appearance. If he had done so, he would have known that the case had been transferred to the Subordinate Judge. An applicant under O. 41, r. 21, Civil Procedure Code, who admits receipt of notice is obliged like an applicant under O. 9, r. 13 to show that he was "prevented by sufficient cause from appearing". On the facts in this case, it cannot be said that the appellant was prevented; he simply chose to let the appeal be decided ex parte. This appeal is dismissed with costs of the first respondent.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition suit—Preliminary decree granting a joint share to the defendants' two brothers—Application to Court after preliminary decree by one defendant for separation of his share from that of co-defendant—Application granted and final decree passed—Defendants' branches acting as if separated—Decision of High Court on appeal four years after final decree that application made too late—Subsequent suit to determine whether defendants' estates separate—Whether previous decision of High Court a bar.

The period which elapses between a preliminary and a final decree in a partition suit often being of considerable duration, the ordinary right of a coparcener to effect a separation of his estate, interest or title—as distinct from a partition by metes and bounds—by a proper declaration of his desire for severance, is not abrogated by the mere fact that he has not claimed to exercise it before the passing of the preliminary decree.

Two of four brothers of a Hindu joint family sued the other members of the family for partition, asking for allotment and separate possession of a half share of the family property. One half share accordingly fell to two defendant brothers, R. N. and D. N., the latter at all material times a lunatic whose wife was appointed his guardian ad litem. Neither R. N. nor D. N. included in his pleadings in the partition suit a demand for partition as between themselves. A few days after the preliminary decree had been passed in that suit, D. N.'s wife petitioned the Court for separation of D. N.'s fourth share. The Court having granted the petition, a final decree was accordingly passed in which a fourth share was allotted in severalty to D. N., despite R. N.'s objection. On appeal, D. N. having meanwhile died, the High Court held that the trial Judge was not competent to entertain after the preliminary decree, the petition for severance of D. N.'s share, the decision of the High Court proceeding on the general consideration that, as the preli-preliminary decree had not provided for the separation of D. N.'s quarter share, the final decree could not make a separate allotment in respect of it. During the period of some four years which elapsed between the passing of the final decree by the trial Judge and the decision of the High Court reversing it, the two branches of D. N. and R. N. acted as if they were separate. In a suit brought by R. N. and his son to determine whether D. N.'s estate was separate from theirs, Held (assuming, which quære) that, although D. N. was a lunatic at the time of partition, he was nevertheless entitled to a share on partition, not having been born a lunatic) that the decision of the High Court refusing D. N.'s application for separation did not conclusively determine his status as having a joint estate with R. N., inasmuch as the application was only refused because made too late, and inasmuch as the High Court had expressly reserved the question whether D. N.'s estate was separate from that of R. N., with the result that the Court's decision had no special reference to D. N.'s disability, but would, if a correct decision, (which also quære), have been equally applicable had D. N. been sui juris and declared formally, after the preliminary decree, his intention to become separate. The expression of intention to effect separation of D. N.'s estate being sufficiently manifested by the conduct of the parties, including the application for separation made by D. N.'s guardian, even though made too late since that application had the approval of the trial Judge and the High Court in the partition suit, was accordingly effective to bring about a separation of D. N.'s share.

Quære, doubting, whether, in so far as a decree of partition does not contain something to sever the estate of co-plaintiffs or co-defendants among themselves, they must conclusively be taken to have remained united.

Appeal from a decree of the High Court, Allahabad, dated 2nd April, 1935 (Thom and Ahmad, JJ.) affirming a decision dated 27th May, 1930, of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares.

In 1923, two sons, Ram Das and Parsotam, of one, Rameshar Sahu, who died in 1913, sued their two brothers, Ram Narain and Deo Narain, for partition, and the trial Judge passed a preliminary decree separating the estate into two parts accordingly. A few days later, Deo Narain's wife, as his guardian ad litem (he being at all material times a lunatic, although not from birth) applied to the judge to have Deo Narain's fourth share made separate from that of Ram Narain. The Judge granted the application and, in August, 1924, passed a final decree in which Deo Narain's share was separated. On appeal against that decree, the High Court held that the application, having been made after the final decree, was too late and accordingly not competent in that suit. In 1929 Ram Narain and his son brought the present action against Deo Narain's widow, Musammam Makhna, to determine whether or not Deo Narain had died divided in estate from themselves. The Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, held that notwithstanding the High Court's decree in the partition suit, he did, the High Court affirmed that decision, and the plaintiffs now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Wallach for Appellants.—It is submitted that it is the decree passed in the partition suit which shows whether the partition effected was as between the plaintiffs and defendants in the suit only, or also between the co-plaintiffs and co-defendants inter se. Applying that principle here, and disregarding, as must now be done, the application made by the defendant widow after the preliminary decree in the partition suit for the separation of her husband's fourth share, it is clear that the decree finally passed by the High Court in that suit says nothing about any separation of Deo Narain's estate from that of Ram Narain, and, that being so, those estates must be taken to have remained joint: See the judgment of Sir John Edge, in *Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Moniagar*¹.

The respondent cannot now seek to go behind the High Court's decree in the partition suit, and, in any event, as Deo Narain's guardian ad litem in the partition suit, she has fulfilled her function, and is not now in a position to establish a separation of estate, more especially since Deo Narain's death. If, however, the conduct of the parties between the dates of the preliminary and the final decrees in the partition suit is to be looked at to see whether a desire for separation was manifested, that conduct, so far as the present plaintiffs are concerned, ought to be disregarded because, in so far as it proceeded on a basis of separated interests, it did so only because such a course was forced on the plaintiffs by that taken by the defendant widow. Any conduct on the part of Ram Narain tending prima facie to shew an intention to separate, or an acceptance of Deo Narain's wish to do so, ought to be discounted accordingly.

Dunne, K.C. and S.P. Khambatta, for Respondent.—The question whether the decree in a partition suit is the evidence which determines the position of the remaining members of a joint family inter se after one or some of them has or have obtained separation of estate does not arise here. The High Court in the partition suit dismissed on technical grounds Deo Narain's application to have his estate separated from that of Ram Narain, his co-defendant in the partition suit, and the Court expressly reserved the question whether or not the estates of Deo Narain's and Ram Narain's were, in the events which had meanwhile happened, separate. Accordingly there was ample evidence in the conduct of the parties of an intention to separate. But apart from such conduct between the dates of the preliminary and final decrees in the partition suit, the mere fact of the present respondent's application on behalf of Deo Narain to have his fourth share separated is a definite and sufficient manifestation of a desire for separation to bring it into effect, the trial Judge and the High Court in the partition suit having regarded the application with favour on the merits.

20th April, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Rameshar Sahu (died 1913)

Sir George
 Rankin.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—The sole question in this case is whether at the date of his death the (5th August, 1927), Deo Narain was separate in estate from all the other members of his family; or whether he was joint with the plaintiffs-appellants, namely, his brother Ram Narain and Lachmi Narain, the latter's son. If he died a separated Hindu, then, as he left no son, his widow, Musammat Makhna (defendant-respondent), became heir to his property; if at the time of his death he was a member of a joint Hindu family, his interest passed by survivorship to his coparceners. Both Courts in India have held in favour of the widow that he died separate.

In 1923 the family was joint. Four sons of Rameshar were alive, and on the 26th March, 1923, two of them, Ram Das and Parsotam (together with the latter's minor son) sued the other members of the family for partition, asking for allotment and separate possession of a one-half share. At that time and at all material times Deo Narain was a lunatic.

His wife (the present respondent) was appointed his guardian ad litem. The plaint was in one respect disingenuous: it alleged untruly that there had been a division of cash and furniture among the members of the family. This was an attempt to deprive Deo Narain and Ram Narain's branch of their proper shares, but it was detected and frustrated at the trial. Both Ram Narain and Deo Narain filed written statements but neither pleading contained a demand for partition as between themselves. On the 15th September, 1923, certain accounts were directed, and on the 23rd April, 1924, the trial Judge ordered a partition, directing the amin to divide the immovable properties into two lots and to report by the 14th May, 1924, which lot should be given to the plaintiffs in that suit. This decree does not appear to have been drawn up until October, 1924, but a very few days after it was pronounced Deo Narain's guardian ad litem presented a petition to the Court (dated the 3rd May and filed the 10th May, 1924), praying that his share—namely, one-fourth—should be separated by the amin, and stating that “there is an apprehension of loss in future if the said share is allowed to remain joint.” His three brothers objected, but the Subordinate Judge on the 27th May, 1924, granted her application, and in the final decree for partition dated the 16th August, 1924, a one-fourth share was allotted in severalty to Deo Narain. From this decree Ram Narain and his son appealed on the 27th July, 1925, to the High Court at Allahabad, mainly on the ground that it was not in conformity with the preliminary decree of the 23rd April, 1924, and before the appeal was heard Deo Narain died (5th August, 1927), leaving him surviving his widow and a daughter. The widow having been brought on the record of the appeal in his stead, the High Court on the 19th July, 1928, allowed the appeal, holding that after the preliminary decree the Subordinate Judge was not competent to entertain an application that Deo Narain's share should be separated :—

“We leave Ram Narain and Musammat Makhna to have their rights adjusted by means of a separate suit, if they so choose. In the meantime we are of opinion that the portion of the property which has not been allotted to the plaintiffs should be considered for the purpose of the present suit to be property held in common. What the legal effect of the application of Musammat Makhna upon the status of the family property or the constitution of the family qua Ram Narain and Deo Narain is, has got to be determined in a subsequent suit, if the parties are not agreed as to it, or if one or the other party choose to institute a suit.”

The Board is not now sitting in appeal from this decision nor has the question of its correctness been argued before their Lordships, who express no opinion upon it, nor will they here inquire whether there is anything in the Code to prevent the learned trial Judge, before the preliminary decree had been drawn up and signed, from deciding to include in it a direction for the separation of the one-fourth share of Deo Narain and directing it to be drawn up and completed accordingly.

From May, 1924—when the trial Judge in the partition suit accepted the respondent's demand that Deo Narain's share should be separated—until July, 1928, when this decision was reversed by the High Court, the two branches of Ram Narain and Deo Narain acted as though they were separate in interest and in title. Till 1924, they had messed and lived jointly, but they ceased to do so in about May, 1924. The trial Court has in the present suit found that Ram Narain acted as a divided member in matters connected with marriages and funerals. "Ram Narain himself had acquired and accepted severance by his unambiguous conduct." It is, however, objected by his learned Counsel that the order of the 27th May, 1924, in the partition suit, had left him no option in the matter pending his appeal to the High Court from the final decree.

The widow having on the 1st September, 1928, succeeded before the Revenue Court in obtaining an order for entry of her name in the revenue records, the present suit was brought against her on the 14th May, 1929, to determine whether Deo Narain died divided or undivided from Ram Narain and Lachmi Narain, the plaintiffs. The suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Benares on the 27th May, 1930, and the High Court has affirmed this decision (the 2nd April, 1935).

The Courts in India have proceeded in this case upon the view that, though Deo Narain was a lunatic at the time of partition, he was nevertheless entitled to a share on partition, not having been born a lunatic. This had been throughout admitted on behalf of the plaintiffs, as it had been admitted by all parties in the partition suit, and in the mutation proceedings which followed thereon in 1928. It seems that this doctrine prevailed in the High Court at Allahabad since *Tirbeni v. Muhammad*¹, but after the present case was decided by the High

1. (1905) I.L.R. 28 All. 247.

Court it has been departed from by a Full Bench decision in Mool Chand v. Chahia Devi, which is in agreement with certain decisions of other High Courts. Their Lordships have not been asked to review these decisions, and the important question which they raise has not been argued on this appeal. It is a matter of some embarrassment to their Lordships that they should be called upon to discuss the rights of a lunatic and the guardian ad litem of a lunatic to claim separation of estate in a partition suit upon an artificial assumption that a lunatic (if not lunatic from birth) is entitled to a share upon partition, when there exists high authority in India for the view that he has no such right.

The right of a member of a Hindu family who is sui juris to separate himself in estate and interest by declaring this intention was thus stated by Sir George Lowndes in *Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna*² :—

"It is now settled law that a separation may be effected by a clear and unequivocal intimation on the part of one member of a joint Hindu family to his co-sharers of his desire to sever himself from the joint family. This was laid down in *Suraj Narain v. Ibbal Narain*³. The question was further examined in *Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj*⁴ and the principle was reaffirmed, and the last mentioned case was followed in *Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal*⁵, where Lord Haldane says, 'the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate'."

The effect of the exercise of this right upon the rights and status of other members of the family has been considered in a number of cases which have come before the Board.

In *Balabux Ladhuram v. Rukhmabai*⁶, Lord Davey, delivering the judgment of the Board, said :—

"It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption, when one coparcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. In many cases it may be necessary, in order to ascertain the share of the outgoing member, to fix the shares which the other coparceners are or would be entitled to, and in this sense the separation of one is said to be a virtual separation of all. And their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact."

In *Bal Krishna v. Ram Krishna*², Sir George Lowndes said (p. 226) :—

"The separation of one member of the family, it is said, necessarily causes the separation of all. This problem has been discussed in many cases, the argument usually turning upon a question of presumption. The general principle undoubtedly is that every Hindu family is presumed to be joint unless the contrary is proved. If it is established that one member has separated, does the presumption continue with reference to the others? The decisions of this Board show that it does not: per Lord Davey in *Balabur Lachuram v. Rukhmabai*¹, followed in *Jatti v. Banwari Lal*². But it is equally clear from these decisions that the other members of the family may remain joint: it is again their Lordships think, a question of their intention, which must no doubt be proved."

In 1924, Sir John Edge (Palani Ammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Monigara), restated the matter and made some observations having reference to cases in which the claim to separate has been made by bringing a partition suit:—

"It is also now beyond doubt that a member of such a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family and is on separation entitled to have his share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, and that the remaining coparceners, without any special agreement amongst themselves, may continue to be coparceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family what remained after such a partition of the family property. That the remaining members continued to be joint may, if disputed, be inferred from the way in which their family business was carried on after their previous coparcener had separated from them. . . . In a suit for partition which proceeds to a decree which was made, the decree for a partition is the evidence to show whether the separation was only a separation of the plaintiff from his coparceners or was a separation of all the members of the joint family from each other. It appears to be obvious to their Lordships that in a suit for partition no effective decree can be made for a partition unless all the coparceners whose addresses are known are parties to the suit, and that it is the decree alone which can be evidence of what was decreed."

The appellants rely strongly upon this last-cited passage, and contend that the decree of the High Court in the partition suit refusing the claim made on behalf of the lunatic for a separation of his one-quarter share and confining the partition to a division into two shares conclusively determines that the status of the lunatic continued to be joint with the present appellants. It is difficult, for more than one reason, to accept this contention. The decision of the High Court proceeded upon the general consideration that, the preliminary decree not having provided for the separation of a one-quarter share, the final decree could not make a separate allotment in respect of it. This was not a matter in any way having special reference to the disability of Deo Narain. If it was right it would have been equally right had Deo Narain been sui juris, and had he declared in the most solemn and explicit manner after the preliminary and before the final decree his intention to become separate in estate and interest. Yet it could hardly be right in that case to hold that, because he did not get an allotment in severalty by the final decree, he remained joint in status. The gap between preliminary and final decree is not seldom of considerable duration, and the ordinary right of a coparcener to effect a separation of his estate, interest or title—as distinct from a partition by metes and bounds—by a proper declaration of his desire to sever, is not abrogated by the mere fact that he has not claimed to exercise it prior to the preliminary decree.

Again, while the decree in a partition suit is the only evidence of what was decreed, it is not uncommon for the Court, in passing a partition decree, to concern itself only with the division of the property into lots and the allocation of these lots to individual members or groups of members. A division by metes and bounds and allotment in severalty implies a separation of estate or interest; and a decree may contain directions which operate a severance of estate without any corresponding division by metes and bounds. This would result, for example, from a simple direction that the parties should hold in defined shares. But it is another matter altogether to say that, if and in so far as the decree does not contain something to sever the estate, title, and interest of plaintiffs or defendants inter se, they must be conclusively taken to have remained united. As a decree is not a necessary condition of separation in interest, the proposition is by no means axiomatic and requires careful examination. In Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakhpati Koeri, there had been a separation in 1861, and in a suit of 1868 the three plaintiffs were given a decree for possession of their shares of certain property. It was said by Sir Andrew Scoble of that decree:—

"It was contended, on behalf of the appellants in the present suit, that although the decree in the suit of 1868 may have effected a separation quoad Tundan and Tukan, it left the plaintiffs united inter se; and that this might have been the legal effect of the decree is undeniable. But here, again, the conduct of the parties must be looked at in order to arrive at what constitutes the true test of partition of property according to Hindu law, namely, the intention of the members of the family to become separate owners."

It is not, however, necessary in the present case that their Lordships should decide this general question, and they do no more than guard themselves against being supposed to accept on this point the able argument of the appellants' learned counsel. The High Court's decree of the 18th July, 1928, was made with express reservation of the question whether the estate or interest of the lunatic was divided or undivided, and cannot be regarded as concluding the matter. It decided only that, as Deo Narain's guardian had applied too late, he could not in that suit be given a separate allotment in respect of his one-fourth share.

Upon the footing that a person who became a lunatic after birth has a right to a separate share upon partition, their Lordships are unable to dissent from the view taken by the High Court. It is not shown that the lunatic in this case remained joint in estate. Everything is against that interpretation of the conduct of the parties, except, indeed, the fact that the application of the guardian ad litem for a separate allotment was made on the 3rd or the 10th May, 1924, a few days after the preliminary decree (23rd April, 1924), before anything had been done under it but not before it had been pronounced. Even so, however, the action of the guardian had the approval of the trial Judge in that suit, and, as a demand for separation of the estate and interest of the lunatic, it had apparently the approval of the High Court: it is not shown to have been in any way contrary to the interests of the lunatic. In these circumstances the utmost effect that can be given to the preliminary decree will not, in their Lordships' opinion, avail the appellants.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the respondent's costs.

.. Respondent (Plaintiff).

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), S. 88, proviso (2)—Inam land—Landholder suing occupier for land revenue paid to Government—Interest on such arrears whether claimable—Limitation—Art. 120, Limitation Act (IX of 1908)—Land cess, how much of it recoverable—Education tax, whether recoverable—Interest Act (XXXII of 1839), Ss. 34, 36.

Where the land in respect of which the respondent held a grant from the Government was in possession of the appellant and the respondent claimed a sum from the appellant made up of land revenue and amounts paid by him in respect of land cess and education tax over a period of 12 years and he claimed also interest with regard to the land cess and education tax, and the questions for decision that arose were:

(1) whether the respondent was entitled to interest in respect of the amount of the arrears of the land revenue;

(2) whether anything was recoverable from the appellant in respect of land cess and education tax; and

(3) if there was such liability in respect of land cess or for education tax, what was the period of limitation,

Held, (1) that since the original grant did not stipulate when the land revenue should be paid to him and all that he got under the instrument was the right to collect the land revenue, the respondent was not entitled to interest.

Subbaroya Gowdan v. Ranganada Mudaliar, (1915) 30 M.L.J. 387: I.L.R. 40 Mad. 93 and Kasturi Gopala Aiyangar v. Anantaram Thivari, (1902) 13 M.L.J. 248: I.L.R. 26 Mad. 730, relied on.

(2) That since on the authority of Alabi v. Kunhi Bi, (1886) I.L.R. 10 Mad. 115, the appellants could only be regarded as tenants of the respondent, the respondent having paid the land cess, he was entitled to recover half of it from the tenants. The only statutory provision is that contained in the second proviso to S. 88, Madras Local Boards Act, which gives him the right to recover half the amount paid by him. This right is subject to the law of limitation and Art. 120 governs it [vide Rajah of Visianagaram v. Chinna Thammanna, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 91: I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 498 (F.B.)]. Therefore the respondent was entitled to half of the land cess paid by him in respect of the six years immediately preceding his suit. The claim of interest on it would fail.

(3) That under the Interest Act, as it stood then, there was no provision entitling the landholder to recover the education tax or any portion of it from the tenant and the rule did not and could not supply the deficiency.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar in A. S. Nos. 5 and 9 of 1934 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Quilandy in O. S. No. 648 of 1932.

K. Kuttikrishna Menon for Appellants.

B. Pocker for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The respondent's predecessors-in-title obtained an inam grant from Tippu Sultan. The grant was confirmed in 1866 at the time of the Inam Settlement. The validity of the grant had, however, been recognised for many years before that. The land in respect of which the respondent holds the grant is situate in Malabar. In 1932 he filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Quilandy to recover from the appellants, who are in possession, a sum of Rs. 450-4-11 made up of land revenue and amounts paid by him in respect of land cess and education tax over a period of 12 years. He also claimed interest. With regard to the land cess and education tax the respondent's case was that he had been compelled to pay the amounts to Government and therefore was entitled to recover them from the occupiers of the land. The appellants denied that the respondent was entitled to recover anything from them. The District Munsif held that the respondent had the right to recover the amount claimed for land revenue with interest and also to the amount claimed in respect of land cess, but in that case without interest. He rejected the claim so far it related to the education tax. An appeal and a cross-appeal were filed in the Court of the District Judge, North Malabar. The District Judge held in favour of the respondent on all the points and decreed the suit. The appeal before us is from the decree of the District Judge. The learned Advocate for the appellants concedes that the respondent is entitled to recover from them the amount claimed in respect of land revenue, but he challenges the findings of the District Judge on the other points. The questions which the Court is called upon to decide are therefore these:—(1) Whether the respondent is entitled to interest in respect of the amount of the arrears of land revenue; (2) Whether anything is recoverable from the appellants in respect of land cess and education tax; and (3) if they are liable in respect of land cess or for education tax what is the period of limitation?

It is clear that the respondent is not entitled to interest in respect of the amount due for land revenue unless the case falls within the proviso contained in the Interest Act. The inam grant does not fix the date when the land revenue is to be paid to the inamdar and no notice in writing was given to the appellants that interest would be claimed in default of payment. The proviso to the Interest Act, however, leaves it open to the Court to award interest where a Court of Equity would recognise the claim. This was the construction placed upon the proviso by the Privy Council in the recent case of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji. In delivering the judgment of the Board, Sir Shadi Lal quoted the observations of Lord Tomlin in *Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Co. v. Hart*¹, where Lord Tomlin said:—

"In order to invoke a rule of equity it is necessary in the first instance to establish the existence of state of circumstances which attracts the equitable jurisdiction, as, for example, the non-performance of a contract of which equity can give specific performance."

In Drax, In re: Savile v. Drax, the Court of Appeal recognised that interest was payable when a settlement or contract contained a provision that a certain sum should be charged on land and be paid at a fixed time. In the case before us neither of these conditions is fulfilled. It is true that the trial Court and the District Court considered that the respondent was entitled to a charge and this finding has not been expressly challenged by the appellants in their memorandum of appeal. I shall state presently what we consider should be the form of the decree, but for the purposes of deciding whether interest is recoverable or not we have to consider whether a Court of Equity would grant it.

In Subbaroya Goundan v. Ranganada Mudaliars, Wallis, C.J., observed that it was well settled that by virtue of an assignment from Government of the right to land revenue the inamdar did not acquire a charge upon the land and that the assignee was left to recover rent from the occupiers under the Madras Rent Recovery Act. Seshagiri Aiyar, J., indicated that had it been open to him to do so he would have come to a different conclusion, but he recognised that the principle of stare decisis applied. The decision in that case was that where jodi is payable by an inamdar to Government it is recoverable as revenue and is a first charge on the interest of the inamdar, but where a zamindar has been given the right to collect jodi payable by an inamdar to Government he has no charge on the interest of the inamdar for arrears. In the course of his judgment Wallis, C.J., pointed out that in Kasturi Gopala Aiyangar v. Anantaram Thivari, it was laid down broadly that assignees of revenue could not proceed under S. 42 of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act and had only a personal claim and referred to the earlier decisions to the same effect. We are bound by those decisions, but assuming we were not and were disposed to hold that in this case there was a charge the respondent would still be disentitled to ask a Court of Equity to award him interest. As I have indicated his grant does not stipulate when the land revenue shall be paid to him. All that he gets under the instrument is the right to collect the land revenue. If it is not paid within the year or by the end of the year he has his remedy by suit. He could by giving notice in accordance with the provisions of the Interest Act make sure of a right to interest in default of payment, but he does not come within the provisions of the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, which only applies to the payment of revenue due to Government. In these circumstances the respondent is not entitled to interest and the decision of the District Judge on this question will be reversed.

The claim in respect of the land cess payments requires a consideration of certain sections of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920. S. 74-B states that in every District, a land cess being a tax on the annual rent value of lands shall be levied in accordance with the provisions of the Act. S. 81 provides that the cess shall be levied upon a landholder or sub-landholder. S. 88 says that every landholder and sub-landholder shall pay the land cess due in respect of lands held by him, but there are two provisoes. The first allows the landholder or sub-landholder as the case may be to recover the amount paid by him for an intermediate landholder. If there is no intermediate landholder and the land is occupied by a tenant the second proviso allows the landholder or sub-landholder or an intermediate landholder to recover half the amount of the cess from the tenant. The definition of "landholder" is given in S. 3 (9) and reads as follows:—

"'landholder' includes all persons holding under a sanad-i-milkat-istimrar, all other zamindars, poligars, shrotriyamdars, jagirdars, and inamdars, all persons registered as proprietors under S. 5 of the Madras Limited Proprietors Act, 1911, and all persons forming the land revenue under Government; all holders of land in the District of Malabar under whatever tenure; and all holders of land under ryotwari settlement, or in any way subject to the payment of land revenue direct to Government, and all registered holders of land in proprietary right."

S. 3 (21) describes a 'sub-landholder' as a person, not being a landholder, who (i) holds a portion of an estate consisting of one or more revenue villages on an under-tenure created, continued or recognised by the proprietor of the estate, or is entitled to collect the rents otherwise than as agent or servant of the landholder, and (ii) is registered as a sub-landholder in the office of the Collector. Sub-S. 22 defines "tenant" as including all persons who, whether personally or by an agent, occupy land under a landholder or an intermediate landholder, and whether or not they pay rent to the landholder or intermediate landholder as the case may be.

The appellants and the respondent both come within the definition of 'landholder'. The appellants are the holders of land in the District of Malabar and the respondent is an inamdar. Neither the appellants nor the respondent are within the definition of "sub-landholder" but the appellants come within the definition of "tenant". In Bhupathi Raju v. Subba Rao, it was pointed out that a person could not at the same time be a tenant in respect of the land of which he was the intermediate landholder. It is obvious that the appellants cannot be both the landlords and the tenants of the same land. The definition of "landholder" in S. 3 (9) is subject to there being nothing repugnant in the subject or context, and to treat the appellants as landholders and tenants would not only be contrary to the scheme of the Act, but would be impossible. In this case the landholder for the purposes of S. 88 must be taken to be the respondent and the appellants must be taken to be the tenants. This very same grant had to be construed on a previous occasion by this Court. The case was Alubi v. Kunhi Bū, where a Division Bench held that the respondent was in the position of a landholder and the occupiers of a portion of the land covered by the grant were tenants. There is consequently authority for the statement that the appellants can only be regarded as tenants of the respondents.

This being the position and the respondent having paid the land cess he is entitled to recover half of it from the appellants. The District Judge held that he was entitled to recover the whole under Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act, but this is not so. The respondent could recover the full amount from the appellants only if he were "interested" in making the payments, but not personally liable. If he is liable for the money, and by reason of S. 88 of the Madras Local Boards Act he is, he could only recover the full amount from the appellants by virtue of some statutory provision in that behalf. The only statutory provision is that contained in the second proviso to S. 88 of the Madras Local Boards Act, which gives him the right to recover half the amount paid by him. The right is subject, however, to the Law of Limitation and the Article of the Limitation Act which applies is Art. 120. (*Rajah of Visianagaram v. China Thammanna*².) The respondent is, therefore, only entitled to half the amount of the land cess paid by him in respect of the six years immediately preceding the suit. The claim for interest fails for the reasons already given.

The remaining question is whether the respondent was entitled to education tax. The District Judge here again erred. The case is governed by the provisions of the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, before its amendment by the Madras Elementary Education Amendment Act, 1931. S. 34 of the unamended Act provided for the levy of an education tax and S. 36 stated that the assessment and realisation should be "in accordance with the procedure prescribed." Under the power conferred by S. 36 the following rule was framed:—

"The tax levied by a local authority under S. 34 of the Act under any head of taxation specified therein, shall be treated as an addition to the tax levied under the heads by the local authority under the law for the time being in force governing it, and shall be assessed and recovered along with the said tax as an integral part of it."

2. (1932) I M.L.J. 91: I.L.R. (1937) Mad. 498 (F.B.).

There was no provision in the Act that the landholder should be allowed to recover the tax or any portion of it from the tenant and the rule did not, and could not, supply the deficiency. (See Nagabushanam v. Venkanna.) Under the Act as it now stands the respondent will in future be able to recover half of the education tax, but this was not the position at any time material to the present suit.

There will be a decree providing for the payment by the appellants to the respondent of (a) the amount claimed in respect of land revenue, but without interest, and (b) half the land cess paid by the respondent for the six years immediately preceding the suit, also without interest. The claim in respect of the education tax is disallowed in toto. As the appellants have not appealed against that part of the decree of the lower Court declaring a charge, the charge will be allowed to stand, but only to the extent of the amount payable under the decree of this Court. As the appeal has succeeded in part and failed in part the parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

In about 1908 there was a division in N's family by which N divided himself with the sons by his first wife but continued joint with the sons by the second wife. wife in the partnership half for himself and half for the sons by the first wife. After the death of N the business was continued by K and C and the sons of N by the first wife, who were then majors. The sons by the second wife were then minors and it was found that they did not continue the business nor were they admitted to the benefits of the partnership. Sometime after the death of N, the plaintiff deposited two sums of money with the partnership. The plaintiff sought to recover these amounts even from the sons by the second wife from out of their family properties and their assets in the partnership.

Held, this is not a joint family business which will not be dissolved by the death of a member of the family but a partnership between the representatives of three different families and is therefore governed by the ordinary law of partnership and on the death of one of them, the partnership is ipso facto dissolved. By the sons of the senior wife continuing the business they became partners thereby but they could not and did not carry on the business on behalf of the sons by the junior wife. The position therefore is that the plaintiff lent the sum to a firm in which the junior branch was not in fact interested as partners either by Hindu Law or by reason of an admission under the contractual law to the benefits of the partnership. Their interest in the partnership consisted merely of the right to have the share in the dissolved business ascertained and paid over to them as at the date of the death of N together with interest on a share of the profits if their share of the assets had been utilised in the business subsequently carried on. The junior branch is therefore not liable for the debt and neither their family properties nor their assets in the firm could be made liable for the debt of the firm.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by Chinnayya Servai the first respondent to recover from the appellant and ten other persons who were impleaded as defendants, the principal and interest due in respect of a deposit made with a Nattukottai firm which carried on business at a place called Maubin in Burma. The deposit consisted of two sums placed in deposit on two different occasions, sometime after 1927. The vilasam of the firm in which the deposit was made was known as M. P. N. The firm was started in 1922 or 1923, by three partners, namely, Narayanan Chetty, Kadiresan Chetty and Chockalingam Chetty. Narayanan Chetty was the father of defendants 1 to 5; Kadiresan was the sixth defendant and the father of defendants 7 to 9, and Chockalingam was the tenth defendant and the father of defendant No. 11. At the date of the deposit Narayanan Chetty had died, but the business was being continued in fact. In the business so continued there is no doubt that Kadiresan and Chockalingam were partners and so far as they and their sons are concerned, the Subordinate Judge has passed a decree, from which no appeal has been preferred. The controversy raised in the appeal relates to the liability of Narayanan Chetty's sons by his junior wife one of whom, namely, the fourth defendant is the appellant in this appeal.

Narayanan Chetty died on 2nd October, 1927. His first wife was Unnamulai by whom he has left three sons, defendants 1 to 3. Even while she was alive he married a second wife Alamelu by whom he had two minor sons, namely, the appellant now a major and the fifth respondent still a minor. Each of these two groups has in its defence in the Court below attempted to shift the liability on to the other. According to the plaintiff, the sons by both the wives formed with their father Narayanan Chetty members of a joint Hindu family, and even after his death they continued joint with this difference only, that instead of the father, the eldest of the sons, namely, the first defendant became the manager of the family. Defendants 1 to 3 were majors at the date of the deposit and were accordingly sought to be made personally liable as partners but as against defendants 4 and 5 who were at that time both minors, the plaintiff only prayed for a decree against their interest in the firm and in the joint family assets. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff rested his case throughout in the lower Court on the allegation that defendants 1 to 5 were always joint in interest, a position which is quite untenable. These defendants belonging to both the groups agreed in their defence to this extent, namely, that they ceased to be joint from and after 1908 as the family became divided in status by the compromise decree in O. S. No. 28 of 1907 on the file of the Sub-Court, Madura, by which defendants 1 to 3 who were the children of his first wife became separated from Narayanan Chetty and his children by the second wife, though as between the members of each group inter se the joint status thereafter continued to subsist. Their versions however materially differed as to who in fact carried on the business after Narayanan's death, and on whose behalf it was so carried on. The position taken up by defendants 1 to 3 was that they were at no time partners of the M. P. N. business, either during the lifetime of the father or even after his death. The first defendant's undoubted association in the business was explained as being due to his having merely supervised it at the request of his stepmother. The fourth defendant asserted on the contrary that Narayanan Chetty during his life represented himself as well as defendants 1 to 3 in the partnership, that he held his interest in it, half for himself and half for defendants 1 to 3; that the partnership being one in which there were strangers associated, became necessarily dissolved on his death, and could not therefore be continued by the first defendant or by any other and that if it is found to have been in fact continued, neither he nor his younger uterine brother nor their property in the firm or outside, could be held liable as they were neither partners in any sense nor admitted to the benefits of a partnership.

The learned Sub-Judge has accepted the case of the defendants to this extent, namely, that the compromise decree in O. S. No. 28 of 1907 created a division in status between the two groups of Narayanan Chettiar's family the children by his senior wife remaining joint in one group, while Narayanan Chetty himself with his children by the second wife formed the other group which continued in itself joint down to his death. In spite of the criticisms of the respondent's Advocate, we are not disposed to differ from the Subordinate Judge's finding on this point, as there is sufficient material in this case to support it, and the probabilities also point to the same conclusion. The division is in accordance with the patni bhaga rule of custom recognised in Palaniappa Chettiar v. Alagan Chetti. The notional definition of share according to the custom has been followed in this case by an actual partition evidenced by the compromise, Exhibit I, which we have no reason to doubt was anything but a genuine arrangement. We think we shall not be justified in disturbing a finding duly arrived at in this case, on the ground that in another similar appeal which arose out of a suit by another creditor against the same family this Court has expressed a different opinion on what is but a question of fact. We feel bound to examine the facts and evidence for ourselves and come to our own independent conclusion on the matter. It would indeed be a grave error, were we to take any other course.

We must now notice another contention raised by the appellant. It was sought to be made out that at the very inception there was an agreement among the partners of the M. P. N. firm that the death of a partner should not work a dissolution, but that the partnership should continue with the legal representatives taking the place of the deceased partner. The Subordinate Judge has in spite of the absence of direct proof, found this agreement established from the conduct of the parties subsequent to the death of Narayanan Chetty. According to him, the business was continued by the family of defendants 1 to 3 as well as by the family of defendants 4 and 5. His view apparently is that the continuance is explicable only on the footing that there was such an agreement. We cannot agree. This fact by itself is too slender a basis to support an agreement, in the absence of other and more cogent evidence. The agreement is denied by the appellant and on a consideration of the available material we are unable to see sufficient warrant for the conclusion of the Subordinate Judge on the point. Not only is there no direct evidence but there is an utter absence of such circumstances as would warrant a Court in drawing an inference in favour of such an agreement. Defendants 1 to 3 are shown by their conduct to have taken a substantial part in the conduct of the business after their father's death as the learned Judge has found. They no doubt would be subject to all the liabilities consequent on their acts. But being divided brethren not representing and not capable of representing their minor stepbrothers, they cannot affect them to their prejudice or bind them by a fresh contract of partnership; for that is what in law the continuance of the business amounts to. A partnership such as the one in question arising by contract between the representatives of three different families is not governed by those legal incidents which are peculiar to a joint family business in Hindu Law, but is regulated by the ordinary law:

"Where a managing member of a joint family enters into a partnership with a stranger, the other members do not ipso facto become partners in the business His family as a unit does not become a partner, but only such of its members as in fact enter into a contractual relation with the stranger; the partnership will be governed by the Act," *Pichappa Chettiar v. Chockalingam Pillai*¹ (Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 10th Edn., p. 398).

Whatever may be the rights and liabilities as between each individual partner and the members of his own family whose position is more or less akin to that of sub-partners in a partnership *Gangayya v. Venkata-ramiah*¹, the principle of Hindu Law which prevents a dissolution of a pure joint family business by the death of a member, is inapplicable to a partnership of this kind. Narayanan Chetty's death must consequently be held to have brought about a dissolution in this case. It has no doubt been, as found by the Subordinate Judge, subsequently carried on by defendants 1 to 3 with the stranger partners, namely, defendants 6 and 10. The crucial question however on which the liability of the appellant turns is whether it was validly continued on behalf of the junior branch so as to involve the members of that branch in the liabilities of the business incurred during its continuation. On this question our answer is decidedly in the negative. The fact of it is that the defendants could not, as they probably did not, carry on the business on behalf of the junior branch, and it is equally clear that the second wife who was the natural guardian of her children did not do so either. There is ample evidence on the record to show, at any rate after Narayanan Chetty's death, that the two branches were in every respect separately living with a separate residence, a separate mess, and with a separate account of their separate expenses. Defendants 1 to 3 cannot therefore, except possibly under the direction of the natural guardian of their stepbrothers, continue the business or enter into any arrangement so as to bind them. There is, however, very little basis for the suggestion that she in fact assented to or concurred in the continuation of the business in this case. It may be observed that there is not even a suggestion that she was aware of or had been consulted before the deposits were accepted from the plaintiff. In fact there is every reason to hold that the money taken from the plaintiff was not remitted to the Maubin firm at all, but was utilised for the personal needs of the first defendant, or probably also of defendants 2 and 3 who were joint with him.

The evidence of the second defendant who did no doubt depose that he acted not for himself but only in pursuance of the instructions of the stepmother in taking part in the conduct of the business and by writing the letter Ex. D is palpably false, and there is ample justification for the observation of the Subordinate Judge that he is a person who has no regard for truth. There is however another piece of evidence which is not open to objection. While alive Narayanan Chetty had sued in O. S. No. 19 of 1926 on a pronote executed in his favour by one Alagappa Chetty, an assistant in the firm, who had been found liable for a sum of Rs. 5,000 on a settlement of accounts. On the death of Narayanan the names of defendants 1 to 6, as well as that of another son of the junior wife who has since been adopted away were substituted on the record of the suit. This must have been done with the knowledge and consent of the junior wife for the obvious reason that she joined in the execution of a vakalat in favour of a pleader to represent her children who were all minors at the time. In support of the application for the substitution of the legal representatives, an affidavit was sworn to by the second defendant in which the sons of Narayanan Chetty by both wives were described as undivided sons and heirs who had obtained the properties of the father by survivorship. This is, as the Subordinate Judge has rightly held, a false affidavit put in merely for the purpose of avoiding the necessity for the production of a succession certificate which would have been insisted on if the divided status had been disclosed. But this apart, a point was sought to be made out of this transaction, in support of the theory that the business was continued by the second wife also on behalf of her sons after the death of her husband. There might be something in it, if the promissory note sued on had been executed in respect of a liability which arose in a transaction of the firm after Narayanan Chetty's death. If that had been the case, the connection of the junior branch in the suit might indicate their association in the subsequent conduct of the business. But it is conceded as indeed it is apparent from the fact that Narayanan Chetty was himself the plaintiff, that the liability evidenced by the promissory note, was one which related to the anterior period, and was therefore one in which as the learned Judge has pointed out both branches were interested.

It seems to us therefore that this transaction is incapable of being founded on either for disproving the partition as the Subordinate Judge has held, or making out as was here attempted a continuance of the business by or on behalf of the junior branch. While we agree with the Sub-Judge that the business was continued after the death of Narayanan Chetty, we must, differing from him, hold that it was defendants 1 to 3 alone who continued it, along with defendants 6 and 10, of course. As defendants 4 and 5 were minors at their father's death, they could not, and their mother did not in fact as we have said, continue the M. P. N. business.

The plaintiff's claim has therefore to be judged on the footing that he lent the money to a firm in which the junior branch were not in fact interested as partners either by Hindu Law or by reason of an admission under the contractual law to the benefits of a partnership. Their interests in the business consisted merely of the right to have the share in the assets of the dissolved business ascertained and paid over to them as at the death of their father, together with interest or a share of the profits if their share of the assets had been utilised in the business subsequently carried on.

If their mother had concurred in the continuation of the business, or if the partition of 1908 had been a mere sham, other and more difficult questions would have arisen for decision. We would have had then to consider as we were in fact invited to consider, whether the subsequent business was an ancestral business, and the debts incurred by those in charge of it bound all the members of Narayanan Chetty's family in both the branches. In view of the findings of fact we have arrived at, we are relieved from the necessity of having to express any opinion upon this somewhat difficult branch of the Hindu Law.

The appeal therefore succeeds, and the decree of the lower Court has to be modified by omitting the relief given to the plaintiff against the appellant and the 5th respondent in respect of their family properties. Their interest in the assets of the M. P. N. firm is equally free from liability to the plaintiff's claim. As against the other defendants the decree stands. The appellant is entitled to his costs here and in the lower Court against the first respondent who alone contested the appeal.

S. 90 of the Evidence Act does not lay down any presumption regarding anonymous documents the writer of whom is not known, so that an old anonymous document must be proved in one or other of the modes known to law. The English rule is not applicable in its full extent in India in view of the precise terms of S. 90.

But an objection on this ground ought not to be permitted to be taken for the first time in second appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of a Kanom mortgage. The appellant is the first defendant's legal representative. The contesting respondent is the plaintiff who is the jenmi mortgagor. It is quite clear that this mortgage, which is alleged to be one of the year 1859, has not been properly proved unless Ex. A is treated as good evidence of the terms of the mortgage and is regarded as having been technically proved in evidence in the trial Court. Ex. A, which is part of a book kept in the family of the plaintiff containing details of the terms of a considerable number of Kanom demises, was alleged to be a copy of the actual document of mortgage and the trial Court gave a decree on the basis that it was an actual copy. The Subordinate Judge in appeal took the view that Ex. A was not an actual copy but was a memorandum of the terms of the mortgage contained in a book kept in the ordinary course of business and it was therefore admissible to prove the terms of the mortgage.

Now, whether Ex. A be used under S. 63 of the Evidence Act as secondary evidence of the original of which it is a copy or whether it be used under S. 32 as a statement made by a deceased person in a book kept in the ordinary course of business, it is a document which has to be proved in one of the ways known to law. It may be proved by the examination of the person who wrote it or by the examination of somebody who knows the handwriting and can swear that it is the handwriting of the person who wrote it or it may be proved by the use of the presumption regarding ancient documents contained in S. 90 of the Evidence Act. S. 90 lays down that in the case of an ancient document produced from proper custody the Court may presume that the signature and every other part of such document which purports to be in the handwriting of any particular person is in that person's handwriting. S. 90 does not lay down that there is any presumption regarding anonymous documents the writer of whom is not known. Though the corresponding English rule is usually stated in terms that an ancient document proves itself, I doubt very much whether that rule applies to its full extent in India in view of the very precise terms of S. 90. The entry in Ex. A is not signed by the person who wrote it and there are no materials upon which one can say that a particular person purports to have written it, except a general statement that it is kept amongst the family records as a record of the family's mortgage transactions. I am therefore of opinion that had the objection been taken at the proper time, it would have been necessary to require the plaintiff to adduce some evidence as to the writer of Ex. A, seeing that the presumption under S. 90 would not be sufficient to provide proof of the document. At the same time I am constrained to point out that though there appears to have been a rather futile contest regarding the genuineness of Ex. A—a contest which apparently was not pressed in the lower appellate Court—there is no suggestion either in the records of the trial Court or in the memorandum of appeal or in the memorandum of second appeal that Ex. A should have been rejected for want of formal proof. It seems to me that this is an objection which ought not to be permitted to be taken for the first time in the course of arguments in second appeal. Although Ex. A is a very old document, it is quite possible that somebody may be available amongst the senior members of the plaintiff's family who can remember the handwriting of the person who wrote it. The plaintiff put the document into the Court relying on the presumption under S. 90 and no objection appears to have been taken at the proper time on the ground that an anonymous document cannot be taken to be properly proved by virtue of this presumption. It is suggested that an objection to the genuineness of the document can be taken to include the lesser objection to its technical proof. I cannot accept this contention. An objection based on an allegation of forgery is a totally different thing from an objection based on a purely technical ground such as that which is urged now. Though an allegation of forgery might conceivably have been met by examining some old man to speak to the handwriting of some long-forgotten clerk, the plaintiff had a much more satisfactory reply to this objection, based on the numerous date stamps of Courts going back for many years indicating the undoubted genuineness of the book (Ex. A). I must therefore take it that the objection to the mode of proof of Ex. A, though based on valid grounds, was not raised at the time when it should have been raised and cannot be sustained in second appeal. It therefore follows that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge proceeded on materials which were legally available to him and there is no question that on those materials this Court has no power to interfere with the decision reached. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932), Rules under—R. 15 (7)
—Assignment of Registrar's award—Application to Civil Court for execution —Recognition of assignment under O. 21, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code—Objection subsequently—Jurisdiction—Whether Civil Court can recognise assignment.

It is clear that though the Registrar of Co-operative Societies is a Court for certain limited purposes, when the award of the Registrar is transferred to the executing Court, empowered under r. 15 (7) of the rules framed under the Act to enforce it as if it were a final decree of the executing Court itself, in the absence of any explicit provision in the rules for the recognition of assignments by the Registrar, the natural inference is that the executing Court is competent to recognise the assignment. Even if it were not competent, in the circumstances of the present case, where the assignment was recognised after due notice to the judgment-debtor and it was only after sale had been ordered that a stranger purchaser came forward to object to the exercise of jurisdiction to which no objection had been taken at the proper time, the execution should not be stopped at the instance of the transferee from the judgment-debtor.

If there was an irregularity it is nothing more than an irregularity and there is no error of law apparent on the face of the record which would justify the cancellation of the recognition of an assignment of the transferee under O. 21, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code. Nor can it be said that the executing Court acts wholly without jurisdiction. Vide Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., in liquidation, (1928) 55 M.L.J. 545 : L.R. 55 I.A. 227 : I.L.R. 3 Luck. 314 (P.C.).

S. Ramachandra Aiyar for Appellants.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to which an award by a Registrar under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act has been transmitted for execution, to recognise an assignment under O. 21, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code. In a very recent case (C. M. S. A. No. 188 of 1936) I held that an assignee could apply under O. 21, r. 16 for execution. But that decision was not based on any specific argument regarding the forum in which an application for assignment should be made in the first instance. The argument now put forward is that if there is any power in the assignee to execute an award under the Co-operative Societies Act the assignment must first be recognised by the Court which passed the decree, which is in effect not the Civil Court, but the Court of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies.

The award in the present case was in favour of a co-operative bank and it was transferred to the Civil Court at the instance of the bank and execution was taken out by the bank. While the execution petition was pending, there was an assignment to the present respondent and the execution proceedings instituted by the bank were stopped and the assignee applied to the executing Court for recognition of his assignment and for execution. Notice of this application went to the judgment-debtors. There was no objection and the assignment was recognised. Further notice was issued of the sale application and again there was no objection. After the sale had been ordered the present appellants, one of them claiming to be a transferee from the judgment-debtors of the properties to be sold, applied to the Court by way of review to cancel the order recognising the assignment in favour of the respondent. Both the Courts below have held that the recognition of the assignment was within the powers of the Court.

S. 51 of the Co-operative Societies Act gives the Registrar power to deal with disputes of members and persons claiming under them either inter se or with the society, or between the society and its servants touching the business of a registered society. R. 15 (7) of the rules framed under the Act prescribes three ways in which the decision or award of the Registrar in such a dispute can be enforced. One is by invoking the powers of the Registrar himself under r. 22 to execute the award. The second is by a requisition to the Collector or his deputy to recover

chariar.

Kannappa Mudali
v.
Varada-

the amounts awarded as if they were arrears of land-revenue. The third, with which we are now concerned, is by an application to the Civil Court having jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the decision or award, which Court shall enforce the decision or award as if it were a final decree of the Court. I would point out that the power of the Civil Court is not merely to execute the decree as if the Registrar were a Court and as if the decree were merely a decree of the Registrar's Court transferred to it for execution; but it is a power to enforce the award; as if it were a final decree of the Court itself. That is to say, the executing Court is to my mind for purposes of execution put in the same position as a Court executing one of its own decrees.

If this view is correct, it disposes of the argument for the appellants. The appellants' contention is that the Registrar is a Court, that an award comes within the definition in the rules of a "decree" and that since O. 21, r. 16 authorises the recognition of an assignment of a decree only by the Court which passes the decree and not by the Court to which it is transferred for execution, the power to recognise an assignment, if it exists at all, can be exercised only by the Registrar. Now with reference to this argument it must be observed that though the Registrar may for certain purposes be a Court, he exercises no powers other than those which have been granted to him under the Act and the rules framed under it. Neither the Act nor the rules under the Act contain any provision whereby the Registrar can permit an assignee of an award to apply to the Registrar for recognition of the assignment and for execution. I am not called upon now to decide whether the Registrar would be acting legally or not if he permitted an assignee to execute an award by application to the Registrar. All I would say is that there is no express provision in the rules whereby the Registrar can perform the function, which a Civil Court can perform in respect of its own decrees, of recognising an assignment. The machinery of the Act seems to contemplate the treatment of an award in different ways for different purposes. It may be enforced by a purely executive machinery such as that constituted under the Revenue Recovery Act. It may be enforced by the semi-judicial machinery constituted by the Registrar under the rules under the Act. Or it may be made material for the purely judicial machinery by its transfer for execution to a Civil Court. When once it is transferred to the Civil Court, it is transferred subject to the proviso that it shall be executed as if it were a decree of that Court. It seems to me impossible to read into that provision a reservation that for purposes of assignment of the decree and for the recognition of such assignment in execution, it shall be, not the decree of that Court, but the decree of the Registrar.

There is very little authority on this subject. Cases under the old Co-operative Societies Act have no direct bearing, for under the old rules the award of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies could be executed only by a procedure similar to that applicable to an award of an ordinary arbitrator. It is established that under the old Act when an award was transferred to the Civil Court for execution, that Civil Court had the necessary power to treat the decree as its own decree for purposes incidental to execution including the granting of a certificate transferring the decree to any Court for execution, vide Krishnaji Shridhar v. Mahadeo Sakharani. There is authority for the view that the award of an arbitrator when it has been filed in Court and has become the decree of the Court can be assigned and the assignment can be recognised by the Court in which that award is filed. *Gladstone Wyllie v. Joosub Peer Mahomed*¹. It is contended for the appellants that the provision of r. 15, sub-r. 8 is significant and that this rule contemplates that the person to be recognised as the decree-holder by the Civil Court must always be the person in whose favour the Registrar has granted an award and cannot be his assignee, for the original holder of the award is given the power to apply to the Court for the return of the award with a certificate of non-satisfaction. It seems to me to be going too far to hold that because the person in whose favour an award has been passed may apply to the Court for its transfer back to the Registrar, the Court has necessarily no power to recognise an assignment. If the Court has recognised such an assignment and in spite thereof the original holder of the award applies for its transfer back to the Registrar, the position is one with which the Court executing the decree can deal by passing appropriate orders on the application for a certificate under O. 21, r. 6.

On a consideration of the contentions of both sides it seems to me clear that though the Registrar is a Court for certain limited purposes, when the award is transferred to the executing Court empowered to enforce it as if it were a final decree of the executing Court itself, in the absence of any explicit provision in the rules for the recognition of assignments by the Registrar, the natural inference is that the executing Court is competent to recognise the assignment. Even if it were not competent, the present case is to my mind not one in which execution should be stopped at the instance of the transferee from the judgment-debtors, for the assignment was recognised after due notice to the judgment-debtors and it was only after sale had been ordered that a stranger-purchaser comes forward to object to the exercise of a jurisdiction to which no objection was taken at the proper time. It seems to me to follow that if there was an irregularity (in my opinion, there was none) it is nothing more than an irregularity and there is no error of law apparent on the face of the record which would justify the cancellation of the recognition of the assignment in review. Nor can it be said that the executing Court acts wholly without jurisdiction—vide the decision of the Privy Council in Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India, Ltd., in liquidation.¹

property which she was possessed of into two shares and to enjoy one half share the other half share to be enjoyed during her lifetime by N. The testator further directed that after the death of N, L should take possession of the property in which N had a life interest. Subsequently L for the purpose of discharging his debts executed a power-of-attorney in favour of B his wife and thereby authorised her to sell his movable and immovable properties. The question having been raised whether the interest which L possessed in the half share enjoyed by N during her lifetime was also included in the expression "immovable property" which B was authorised to convey,

Held, that the effect of the will was that the entire property was given over to L subject to a life interest in favour of N, that L possessed a vested interest in the share given to N and that the said interest was included in the properties which B was authorised by the power-of-attorney to convey.

When a certain property is conveyed it must be taken strongly against the grantor and in favour of the grantee and all the interest which the grantor possessed in the property sold should be deemed to have passed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chicacole in O. S. No. 17 of 1936 and appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Lakshmana Rao dated 8th December, 1937 and made in C. M. P. No. 5166 of 1937 in the said Appeal No. 13 of 1937 on the file of the High Court.

The facts were as follows:—The testator provided by her will thus:

"On my death my younger brother's son Vallipalem Venkata Lakshminarayana shall perform my obsequies, recover the outstandings due to me from others divide the movable and immovable properties in my possession into two shares and enjoy one-half share; the other half shall be enjoyed during her lifetime by my widowed daughter Lakshmi Narasamma wife of Putrepu Suryanarayana without rights of gift, sale, etc. Her obsequies alike shall, on her death, be performed by my nephew the said Venkata Lakshminarayana and he shall take possession of the property in her custody. As regards the lands that passed to my daughter from her parent-in-law she is at liberty to deal with them as she pleases."

After the death of the testator the plaintiff's father became involved in debts heavily. He then executed a power-of-attorney in favour of his wife authorising her to sell away his properties and to settle his debts. According to the plaintiff, his mother acting under the said power-of-attorney purported to sell not only the half share of the plaintiff's father but the half share belonging to the other legatee Lakshmi Narasamma. Plaintiff contended that the sale in so far as it comprised the moiety bequeathed to Lakshmi Narasamma was void. The defendant contended that Lakshmi Narasamma was only given a life estate in a moiety of the properties with a remainder over to the plaintiff's father and that the sale was binding on the plaintiff. The trial Court held that the sale did not affect Lakshminarayana Rao's interest in the moiety bequeathed to Lakshmi Narasamma. The defendants appealed.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Venkata-
ramana
Rao, J.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—The question for determination in this appeal is whether a vested remainder which was vested in one Lakshminarayana Rao was conveyed by his wife Bhramaramba (seventh defendant) under a sale-deed Ex. C in favour of the first defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge answered it in the negative and against this decision of the Subordinate Judge the plaintiff has preferred this appeal.

The relevant facts are not in dispute. One Kanchamma was the last owner of the suit property. She made a will in 1899 in and by which she bequeathed all the properties she was possessed of, including the suit property, to the said Lakshminarayana Rao who was her brother's son and to one Lakshmi Narasamma, her widowed daughter. By her will she directed Lakshminarayana Rao to divide the movable and immovable property which she was possessed of into two shares and to enjoy one half share, the other half share to be enjoyed during her lifetime by Lakshmi Narasamma. The said Kanchamma further directed that after the death of Lakshmi Narasamma, Lakshminarayana Rao should take possession of the property in which Lakshmi Narasamma had a life interest. As we construe this will, the entire property was given over to Lakshminarayana Rao subject to the life interest in favour of Lakshmi Narasamma the widowed daughter of the testatrix. It is immaterial whether his interest in the half share which was being enjoyed by Lakshmi Narasamma during her lifetime is considered as a vested remainder or not. There can be no doubt that Lakshminarayana Rao possessed a vested interest in the said share which was capable of being alienated by him or by anybody purporting to act under his power. In 1908 Lakshminarayana Rao became heavily involved and in order to discharge his debts he executed a power-of-attorney in favour of his wife Bhramaramba. It is dated 14th August, 1908. By it Lakshminarayana Rao authorised his wife to sell his movable and immovable property. The question is, is the vested interest which Lakshminarayana Rao possessed in the half share of the property which was being enjoyed by Lakshmi Narasamma during her lifetime also included in the expression 'immovable property' which Bhramaramba was authorised to convey? The learned Subordinate Judge seems to be of the opinion that she was not authorised to convey the vested remainder on the ground that it would not be 'immovable property' within the meaning of the expression as used in the power-of-attorney. It seems to us, that the view of the Subordinate Judge is totally unsound. A vested remainder is property and it is immovable property being an interest in land. There can be no doubt therefore that Bhramaramba was authorised to sell all that interest which Lakshminarayana Rao possessed in the suit property on the date of the power-of-attorney. Acting under this power on 28th October, 1908, she sold the suit property to the first defendant for valuable consideration. The question is, as we have said, whether the vested interest which Lakshminarayana Rao possessed in the half share which Lakshmi Narasamma enjoyed during her lifetime passed under the sale-deed. If we come to the conclusion that it passed, the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit and his suit is liable to be dismissed. What was conveyed under the sale-deed was three vrittis of land enclosed within particular boundaries. The suit land was sold with all rights. On a proper construction of the sale-deed it seems to us that Bhramaramba purported to convey the entire interest in the land as if it belonged to her husband. In fact on the date of the sale-deed she could only convey the property minus Lakshmi Narasamma's life interest in it. It was contended in the lower Court successfully and the contention was repeated before us that there was no specific conveyance of the vested remainder possessed by Lakshminarayana Rao as such and therefore it did not pass. We think the learned Judge has misread the deed and the contention is fallacious. When a certain property is conveyed, it must be taken strongly against the grantor and in favour of the grantee and all the interest which the grantor possessed in the property sold should be deemed to have passed. Therefore when in this case certain specific lands were described as being conveyed without specifying the extent of the interest possessed by Lakshminarayana Rao, it must be taken that all interest which Lakshminarayana Rao possessed and which the seventh defendant was authorised to convey and which she could convey under the power-of-attorney executed by her husband in her favour would pass under the deed Ex. C. Prima facie therefore all that interest which Lakshminarayana Rao possessed including the vested interest in the half share in the enjoyment of Lakshmi Narasamma passed under the said deed.

A point was urged by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that Bhramaramba purported to deliver possession of the land which she was conveying, that she could not obviously have delivered possession of the half share to which Lakshmi Narasamma was entitled and that this shows that what was sold was only the half share of Lakshminarayana Rao. But the sale-deed makes it clear that she purported to convey not only the entirety of the interest possessed by Lakshminarayana Rao but also to deliver possession of the entirety of the interest. Whether she was right in law in doing so is not the question. What was her intention in conveying the property? There is no doubt that she intended to convey all the interest which her husband possessed on the date of the sale-deed. In this view the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit. The appeal is therefore allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout against the first respondent. The plaintiff will pay the necessary court-fee on the plaint to the Government.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to set aside a sale held by the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies as liquidator of a Co-operative Credit Society. The grounds upon which the sale was sought to be set aside are substantially the failure of the selling officer to follow strictly the procedure laid down in the rules under the Co-operative Societies Act. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court on the grounds that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit for a remedy in respect of which a special machinery has been provided by the Act; and also because by reason of S. 48 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act whereunder the suit would not lie without the leave of the Registrar. The learned District Judge has reversed the trial Court on both these grounds, holding that the jurisdiction of Civil Courts cannot be taken away unless it is expressly excluded by the Statute in question and that S. 48 has no application because the bringing of properties to sale in execution of a decree or an award is not part of the winding up of the Society.

It seems to me that the decision of the learned District Judge is demonstrably wrong on both these grounds. In the first place the authorities which the learned District Judge quotes for the view that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not ousted unless it is ousted by the express terms of the statute propound precisely the contrary proposition and the fact that jurisdiction may be ousted by necessary implication seems to follow from the words of S. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, which are to the effect that the Courts shall have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature except suits of which their cognisance is either expressly or impliedly barred. All the cases to which I have been referred recognise that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts may be ousted by necessary implication when a special statutory machinery has been set up and that the ouster need not be express. As to the reason for not applying the bar under S. 48, the learned District Judge has overlooked the fact that though this suit has been filed nominally against the liquidator, it is in fact against the liquidator as representing the Society and such being the case, the second portion of S. 48 will apply and the suit will not lie without the leave of the Registrar.

Subbayya
v.
Thippa

This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, but, as the more important question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts has been argued at length, it is desirable that I should say a few words upon it. The facts are that the plaintiff borrowed money from the Society and mortgaged properties as security for the loan. When the Society was in liquidation, the liquidator having got a decree against the plaintiff, in execution of that decree through the agency of the Co-operative Department sold the properties to the present appellant, the second defendant in the suit, on 10th September, 1936. Under the rules framed under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act a special procedure is prescribed whereby a person whose property has been sold can, by taking action within thirty days of the sale, establish before the Registrar his right to have the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity, mistake or fraud by a procedure almost identical with that prescribed under O. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff took no such action but on 12th March, 1937, that is to say, some five months after his remedy under the statutory rules was barred, he filed the present suit. The plaint is not drafted as if the plaintiff were merely seeking the common law remedy against a trespass by an unauthorised person upon property to which he was entitled. It is drafted just as if the plaintiff had a right by statute to contest in the Civil Courts the regularity of the sale on the ground that the statutory formalities had not been complied with; that is to say, the plaintiff seeks to call in aid the Civil Courts to procure a remedy which would have been hopelessly barred if sought in the tribunal specially designated by the statute for that purpose.

Subbayya
Thippa
Reddi.

The general principle is well established and has been repeatedly laid down by the Courts that where by statute powers have been given to any person for a public purpose, by which powers an individual may receive injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Court is ousted. Another way of putting the same proposition is that where the statute creates a new offence or gives a new right and prescribes a particular penalty or special remedy, no other remedy can, in the absence of a contrary intention, be resorted to. And it is well established that the exclusion of the Civil Courts' jurisdiction by the creation of a special machinery before a special tribunal need not be express but may be by necessary implication. The cases to which I have been referred are *Ramachandra v. Secretary of State*¹, *Iswarananda Barathiswami v. Commissioners, Hindu Religious Endowments Board*², *Bhaishankar v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay*³, *Ramayyar v. Vedhachala*⁴, *Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Sankarappa Reddiar*⁵, *Municipal Board, Bareilly v. Abdul Axis*⁶, *Mohideen Pichai v. Fasat Dad*⁹, and the Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court under the Burma Co-operative Societies Act reported in *Dey v. Bengalee Y. M. C. C. Society*¹⁰. All these rulings follow well-known English cases, the validity of which has never been doubted. On the other hand Mr. Raghava Rao for the respondent quoting Varadachariar, J., in *Kamaraja Pandiya Naicker v. Secretary of State for India in Council*¹¹, relies on the opposite proposition that where a person's liberty of property is interfered with under colour of statutory powers, he has a cause of action which the Civil Courts are bound to entertain unless a bar to such entertainment has been enacted expressly or at least by necessary implication. It is argued that there is no express exclusion of the Civil Courts' jurisdiction to decide on the validity of a sale by a Co-operative Registrar and that the absence from the rules under the Co-operative Societies Act of a provision similar to that found in O. 21, r. 92 (3) is an indication that no such ouster of the Civil Courts' jurisdiction should be implied. It seems to me that the last argument has very little force, for we are not concerned here with power of the Courts to question the decision of the Registrar on a dispute regarding the validity of a sale. We are concerned rather with the alleged right of the debtor to ignore the machinery provided by the Act and seek to question the sale in the Civil Courts by alleging statutory irregularities at a time when the remedy provided by the Act would be time-barred. In the case just referred to Varadachariar, J., does not question the validity of the proposition that where a quasi judicial machinery is set up by the statute for remedying injuries alleged to have been caused by the exercise of powers conferred under the statute, ordinarily it will be implied that the Civil Courts' jurisdiction to give the same remedy will be ousted. What the learned Judge does in the particular case is to distinguish between an executive machinery and a quasi judicial machinery and to point out that the ouster of the Civil Courts' jurisdiction will not be inferred merely because of the setting up of a right of appeal to a purely executive authority. Under r. 22 framed under the Co-operative Societies Act the machinery which is prescribed for setting aside a sale on grounds of irregularity, fraud, etc., is definitely a machinery of a judicial nature functioning under rules precisely similar to those by which the Courts are bound under O. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code and, apart from the fact that there is some curtailment of the rights of appeal presumably with a view to economy and despatch of business, there is nothing in the procedure before Registrar which can be regarded as less judicial in its character than the procedure before the District Munsif in contesting sales in execution. Quite clearly this is a case in which the plaintiff has, with his eyes open, brought himself within the ambit of the special statute in order to enjoy the special facilities thereby created for borrowing money and has put himself and his property within the reach of the machinery created by that statute for the enforcement of the repayment of loans. If he has a grievance arising out of the way in which that machinery has worked, the remedy is the one indicated by the rules under the Statute. That remedy he has not chosen to adopt and he cannot, when his legal remedy is barred, try to achieve the same result by filing a suit in the Courts requiring the Courts to exercise a jurisdiction which the statute itself does not contemplate and which is inconsistent with the scheme of the Act.

In the result therefore I allow the appeal, and dismiss the suit with costs throughout. The costs in appeal will be payable by the first respondent-plaintiff. One set only in appeal.

Where the purchaser of a hypotheca, who had executed a promissory note to the mortgagee decree-holder claimed that he was entitled to the relief under the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, S. 8, explanation,

Held, in a case where B takes over a debt due by A, the document executed by him is not a "fresh document" so far as he is concerned. He is executing a document for the first time. The old debt is extinguished and a new debt and a new debtor come into existence. The scaling down provisions under S. 8 explanation, do not apply to such a case. Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Karur, dated 13th September, 1938 and made in I. A. No. 584 of 1938 in O. S. No. 461 of 1934.

C. A. Seshagiri Sastri for Petitioner.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—There was a mortgage decree against a third party and before the sale of the hypotheca, the petitioner's father and some others purchased the property mortgaged. They then executed the suit promissory note in satisfaction of the mortgage decree.

The petitioner claimed relief under explanation to S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938. The lower Court rejected his petition and this C. R. P. is filed against the said order.

The question is whether the case comes within the Explanation to S. 8.

The explanation runs thus:—

"Where a debt is renewed or included in a fresh document in favour of the same creditor."

The explanation speaks first of a renewal which is obviously by the same debtor. Then come the words "or included in a fresh document". This is obviously to provide for a case where a debtor instead of merely executing a new document for the exact sum owing under the previous one, takes a fresh loan, and executes the document both for the sum due under the original document and for the sum taken at the time of the new document. The juxtaposition of the words "renewed"—"included in a fresh document" leaves no room for doubt. Inclusion in a fresh document must be obviously by the same debtor.

In a case where B takes over a debt due by A, the document executed by him is not a "fresh document", so far as he is concerned. He is executing a document for the first time. The old debt is extinguished and a new debt and a new debtor come into existence. Advantage is sought to be taken of the absence of the words "by the same debtor" but the obvious meaning of the explanation is that where the debtor merely renews the debt or includes in a fresh document the sum due under the old document, the scaling down provision applies.

the petitioners in this Court. They seek to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam dated the 6th August, 1937. By that order the Subordinate Judge restored a suit which had been dismissed for default on 14th January, 1937. The plaintiff's application for restoration was opposed by defendants 1 and 7 on two grounds: (1) that the decision in the suit was not one dismissing the suit for default but that it was a disposal under O. 17, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code and (2) that there were no sufficient grounds to set aside the default order. The Subordinate Judge held on both points against the defendants and restored the suit on terms. This revision petition is directed against the said order and it is urged before me by Mr. Lakshmayya the learned counsel for the petitioners that the disposal was not under O. 17, r. 2 but was one under O. 17, r. 3 and that there is no finding by the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff had sufficient cause for not appearing on 14th January, 1937, on which date the suit was dismissed.

As regards the first point it is contended that time had been granted to the plaintiff on the day of the previous hearing for production of his witnesses and that therefore the dismissal of the suit on 14th January, 1937, was one made under O. 17, r. 3. What happened on that day was that Mr. P. Lingayya who was appearing for the plaintiff was away from town, that another gentleman Mr. Sitaramayya applied for an adjournment and that being refused he took no further part in the proceedings. He was apparently not instructed to conduct the suit. The plaintiff was then asked to go into the witness-box and give evidence. But he evidently felt that he could not go on with the suit in the absence of any pleader duly instructed to conduct the case on his behalf. On these facts I am satisfied that the case falls under O. 9, r. 9. The mere physical presence of the party has been held not to take the case out of O. 9, r. 9. Similarly, the mere fact that a pleader who had no instructions to conduct the suit asks for an adjournment is not appearance in the suit whether he formally reported no instructions or not, if all that he did that day was to apply for an adjournment and nothing more. This is not a case in which any act was done by the pleader on the date of the hearing in the conduct of the suit. The decision relied upon by Mr. Lakshmayya in Govindarajulu Naidu v. Imperial Bank of India, Vellore does not therefore apply. The other decision relied on by him, namely, *Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthammal*¹ is one in which on the facts of that case the learned Judges held that the pleader did actually appear. I am not prepared to take the decision as laying down any general proposition of law applicable to all cases. In this case, Mr. Sitaramayya was not the Advocate originally engaged by the plaintiff and was apparently instructed only to apply for an adjournment and not to conduct the suit. Adjournment having been refused, it is clear that he took no further part in the proceedings and whether he actually stated that he withdrew or not is immaterial. I hold that there was no appearance so as to preclude an application for restoration of the suit.

On the second question whether the plaintiff had sufficient cause for not appearing or for not being ready on 14th January, 1937, it is no doubt true that there is no clear finding by the Subordinate Judge in the order under revision. He ought to have definitely found whether the plaintiff had sufficient cause for not appearing on 14th January, 1937. But I do not think that any useful purpose will be served by sending the case back for a finding on that point. I have myself gone into the evidence and I find that the plaintiff had sufficient cause for not appearing on 14th January, 1937, in the sense of being ready to go on with the trial of the suit. The mere physical appearance of the plaintiff on the day of the hearing, as already observed, is no appearance in the suit. (Vide *Gopal Rao v. Maria Susayya Pillai*², and *Mittadar Venkoba Rayar v. Mittadar Kadiriappa Goundar*³.)

The lower Court has given costs to the defendants and that is enough panacea for them. I accordingly dismiss this revision petition but in the circumstances I make no order as to costs.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Authority to adopt—Strict instructions—Exercise in excess of power—Construction of such power—General intention not to be inferred.

Where special instructions are given by a husband, they must be the paramount consideration in testing the validity of an adoption by his widow.

In a case where the terms of the power to adopt contained the sentence 'my wife shall adopt a suitable boy from our family or a boy belonging to the same gotra as myself', but the widow adopted a boy who did not satisfy the above qualifications, Held, (1) that the power to adopt should be strictly pursued.

Rajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen, (1930) 59 M.L.J. 615: L.R. 57 I.A. 296: I.L.R. 10 Pat. 187 (P.C.), followed.

(2) That the terms of the power did not, in this case, warrant an inference of a general intention to adopt nor were the instructions carried out. Therefore the adoption was invalid.

Venkata-

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned District Judge of Rajahmundry dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for possession of a house which is item 2 of Sch. A to the plaint. The plaintiffs claimed title to the property through one Surayya who was alleged to be the adopted son of one Subbarayadu. The adoption was said to have been made by the widow of Subbarayadu in pursuance of an authority given to her by her husband by his last will and testament dated 7th July, 1882. Both the factum and the validity of the adoption were denied in the lower Court, but during the trial the factum was not seriously disputed, but only the validity of the adoption was put in issue. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the adoption was invalid on the ground that it did not conform to the authority given by the husband. The substantial question for decision in this appeal is whether the view taken by the learned Judge is sound and this turns on the construction of the said authority.

It is contained in one sentence which runs thus:

"My wife shall adopt a suitable boy from our family or a boy belonging to the same gotra as myself."

The said Surayya was no other than the brother of the widow of Subbarayadu and it is conceded that he did not belong to the family of Subbarayadu nor had the same gotra as Subbarayadu. As observed by the Privy Council in *Rajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen*¹, it is well-established law that the power to adopt given to a wife must be strictly pursued. There is no doubt that the power in this case has not been strictly pursued, but it is contended by Mr. Somasundaram that, from the fact of Subbarayadu having given a power to adopt, it must be inferred that there was a general intention on the part of Subbarayadu to be represented by an adopted son, that the direction given to his wife to adopt a boy from the family or a boy belonging to the same gotra as the testator was only indicative of a preference, and that if it was not possible for the widow to comply with the said direction, it would be open to her to adopt any other suitable boy of her own choice. It seems to us that this contention is untenable. It may be open to a Court to infer a general intention to adopt and construe that general intention rather liberally where there are no special instructions given by the husband or, possibly in cases where such instructions were carried out and an adoption made in accordance therewith but the adopted boy died and another adoption was made. In *Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana*², the Judicial Committee observe thus:

"Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges of the High Court in the opinion that the main facts for consideration in these cases is the intention of the husband. Any special instructions which he may give for the guidance of his widow must be strictly followed; where no such instructions have been given, but a general intention has been expressed to be represented by a son, their Lordships are of opinion that effect should, if possible, be given to that intention. This more liberal rule has been followed by the High Court of Bombay, as well as in Madras, and is not without support in Bengal."

It is clear from this judgment that where there are special instructions given by the husband, they must be the paramount consideration in testing the validity of the adoption. In this case the terms of the power do not warrant an inference of a general intention to adopt nor were the instructions carried out.

A number of cases were relied on by Mr. Somasundaram, but it will be found in most of them the widow carried out the instructions and did adopt a boy in accordance therewith but the adopted boy died and the question arose whether her power was exhausted by the first adoption or whether it was open to her to make a second adoption. The Courts took a liberal view that the testator must be taken to have expressed a general intention that he should be represented by an adopted son. The cases in *Suryanarayana v. Venkataramana*¹, *Chenga Reddi v. Vasudeva Reddi*², *Sindigi Lingappa alias Sidda Lingappa v. Sindigi Sidda Basappa*³ and *Yadeo v. Namdeo*⁴, are all of that category. Some of the Privy Council cases on which Mr. Somasundaram relied are all distinguishable on the facts of those cases. In *Mustaddi Lal v. Kundan Lal*⁵, the testator directed that one of the sons of one Hardeodas should be adopted. The boy that was adopted was not a boy living at the date of the authority given to adopt. It was contended that the testator meant that the boy who was then living was the boy intended to be adopted and not a boy born thereafter. Their Lordships were of the opinion that the special instructions which the testator gave were that one of the family of Hardeodas should be adopted and they were complied with. Therefore it was a case in which the instruction given by the testator was strictly pursued. The observation in *Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh*⁶, to the effect that the Courts must not be astute to defeat an adoption but should uphold it as far as possible where it is not in excess of the power was relied on but, where it is in excess of the power, Courts have no option but to declare an adoption invalid. In this case it is our opinion that the adoption was in excess of the power. On a construction of the will it is clear that the instruction of the testator was not to adopt any boy of the widow's choice but that the widow should adopt a boy possessing certain qualifications; namely, that he should belong to his family or failing which he ought to belong to the same gotra as himself. The power, as already observed by us, was contained in one sentence and the qualification laid down by the testator is part of the power given to his wife. It is a condition annexed to the power. As observed by the Privy Council in more than one decision, a condition annexed to such a power should be strictly complied with, or else the adoption would be invalid. The case in *Rajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen*¹ is a case in point. In that case the testator directed a particular boy to be adopted and, if that boy was not available, another boy should be adopted with the permission of his father. He also expressed his general intention that his estate should be inherited by the adopted son. The father of the testator died and twelve years after the father's death the widow made an adoption and the question was whether the adoption was valid. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the adoption not having been made with the permission of the father, the adoption was invalid because that was a condition annexed by the testator to the authority given to his widow. It will be seen from the terms of the will that there was an intention that his estate should be represented by an adopted son, but still their Lordships held that the condition annexed to the power not having been complied with the adoption cannot be upheld. Therefore the adoption in this case cannot be held to be valid as the condition imposed by the testator was not complied with. In this view we do not think it necessary to examine the other contention of Mr. Somasundaram that the widow made every possible attempt to make the adoption but failed to secure a boy of the qualifications required by the testator and therefore the adoption must be upheld. The contention is that we must so read the will as to hold that, if the conditions imposed by the testator were not possible, of fulfilment, the widow was permitted to adopt a boy of her own choice by adding the words 'if possible' to the power conferred. A contention of this nature was negatived by their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Rajendra Prasad Bose v. Gopal Prasad Sen*¹, on the ground that a Court ought not to add words where the intention of the testator is clearly expressed. We are therefore unable to uphold the contention of Mr. Somasundaram.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The memorandum of cross-objections is also dismissed with costs.

Maistry,
In re.Madras Gaming Act (III of 1930), Ss. 4 (2) and 6—'Gaming' definition of—Difference between being present at a place of gaming and actually betting—Grounds necessary to invoke S. 6.

The definition of 'gaming' in S. 3 of the Madras Gaming Act (III of 1930) has included only the actual wagering or betting on a horse race, and payment in fulfilment of such agreement cannot be regarded as part of such betting. [Vide Bradford v. Dawson, (1897) 1 Q.B. 307.]

There is wide difference between a person being present at a particular place for the purpose of gaming and his gaming at the place. It is only the latter act that is constituted an offence under S. 4 (ii) of the Act and not the former. Therefore S. 6 of the Act cannot be invoked to sustain a conviction under S. 109, Indian Penal Code, read with S. 4 (2) of the Gaming Act.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Saidapet dated 10th September, 1938, and made in CrI. The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The petitioners were prosecuted in this case for an alleged offence under S. 4 (2) of the Madras Gaming Act, 1930. The learned Appellate Magistrate however observed that there was no betting at the time of the night when the instruments of betting were seized by P.W. 1 under S. 5 of the Act and that the petitioners were there only for the purposes of payment or sharing of profits. But he has held that the petitioners must be regarded as accessories either before or after the betting and found them guilty under S. 109, Indian Penal Code, read with S. 4 (2) of the Gaming Act. This is clearly wrong as no particular person is found to have committed the offence under S. 4 (2) of the Act, which the petitioners in this case could be said to have abetted. The learned Public Prosecutor has not attempted to support the conviction on this ground.

He urged however that the conviction could be upheld on two other grounds. First, he contended that payment of money or sharing of profits in pursuance of betting on a horse race is also gaming as such distribution of prizes and dividends to winners is a fulfilment of the betting or wagering agreements. But the definition of 'gaming' in S. 3 of the Act has included only the actual wagering or betting on a horse race, and payments in fulfilment of such agreement cannot be regarded as part of such betting. (See Bradford v. Dawson.)

Kanniah Maistry,
In re.

The learned Public Prosecutor next contended, that having regard to the statutory rule of evidence enacted in S. 6 of the Act, the conviction of the petitioners can be sustained as supported by evidence. S. 6 only enacts, so far as it is material for the purposes of the case, that gaming instruments found in any place entered or searched under the provisions of S. 5 shall be evidence that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming, although no play was actually seen by the police officer. But, as I understand this section it does not take the prosecution in this case far enough, for it does not say that the mere finding of gaming instruments in such a place shall be evidence of gaming. There is obviously a wide difference between a person being present at a particular place for the purpose of gaming and his gaming at the place. It is only the latter act that is constituted an offence under S. 4 (ii) of the Act and not the former. I am therefore of opinion that S. 6 of the Act cannot be invoked to sustain the conviction in the circumstances of this case. I set aside the conviction and sentence as well as the order of confiscation. The fine paid by the petitioners as well as the amount seized from them will be refunded.

suit filed to set aside the gift—Limitation to present suit—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Ss. 6 and 7.

Where a plaintiff member of a Malabar tarwad within three years of his obtaining majority filed a suit to recover certain property gifted away and where his aunt Kunhimani, the senior member of the tarwad, had allowed twelve years to elapse without filing a suit to set aside the gift.

Held, (i) that, during the period of limitation, Kunhimani and the plaintiff were not persons, within the meaning of S. 7, jointly entitled to institute a suit because Kunhimani herself was party to the gift and would have had to plead that she was induced to execute it by fraud or mistake, and

(ii) that in any case, Kunhimani and plaintiff being joint owners, Kunhimani could not give a discharge without the concurrence of the plaintiff. Her failure to take steps to cancel the gift was not sufficient to perfect the title of the donee.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal involves the decision of an interesting question of law. The appeal arises out of a suit to set aside alienations of property belonging to a Malabar tarwad and to recover property. There were three such alienations, but at the hearing of this appeal only one remains in controversy, namely, a gift to certain persons evidenced by a registered gift deed Ex. A in the suit. The persons who executed that deed were Arayakandy Kottiah Kannan executing it as karnavan of the tavazhi, secondly his niece Arayakandi Kunhimani and lastly Kannan purports to execute it on behalf of Kunhi Kannan the present plaintiff who was then a child of 4 years. That gift in form is a gift by all the existing members of the tarwad or tavazhi. Kannan described in this document as the karnavan died in 1919 and his niece Kunhimani was left in sole management of the tarwad property. The plaintiff came of age in 1927 and he filed the suit now under appeal in 1930 within three years of his attaining majority. He files the suit in the capacity of karnavan of the tarwad and he impleads as the first defendant his aunt Kunhimani as being the only other member of it and the suit is, as I have said, to recover the property on behalf of the tarwad. Both the Courts have held that the gift as such could not be supported, but in the lower appellate Court the learned Subordinate Judge, differing from the trial Courts, held that the plaintiff's suit was barred by time. This second appeal is that the lower appellate Court was wrong.

Kunhi
Kannan
v.
Kottiath
Vazhayil
Devaki.

The gift was taken as having been effected on the date of Ex. A, namely, on the 14th January, 1913, and the time for filing a suit was taken as being 12 years in accordance with the provisions of Art. 142 of the Limitation Act; the suit therefore should have been brought before the 14th January, 1925. But on that date the plaintiff was, as I have explained, a minor and under S. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act he was entitled to bring the suit within three years of his attaining majority. There is no dispute about that. Other things being equal the provisions of S. 6 of the Limitation Act certainly apply to the plaintiff. But the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff's case is governed by S. 7. In other words, this was a case where there was a person entitled to institute the suit jointly with the plaintiff who could give a discharge without the concurrence of the plaintiff. That person according to the learned Subordinate Judge is no other than Kunhimani, the aunt of the plaintiff who was a party to the gift deed, and who admittedly took no steps to set it aside.

The ground of this appeal is twofold. First, Kunhimani having herself executed the gift deed could not bring the suit on the same title as the plaintiff. She could not file a suit as a junior member of the tarwad to set aside an alienation made by the karnavan without her consent. She would have had to plead in addition that her consent had been obtained by force or fraud or in some other way sufficient to avoid the contract so far as she was concerned. The second argument is that Kunhimani could not give a discharge within the meaning of S. 7 of the Limitation Act without the concurrence of the plaintiff.

I agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant in respect of the first ground. I do not see how Kunhimani and the plaintiff can be held to be jointly entitled to file a suit when the position of Kunhimani relative to this gift is entirely

Kannan
v.
Kottiath
Vazhayil

different from that of the plaintiff. That to my mind is the fundamental difficulty with which the respondent is faced in endeavouring to apply to the case the provisions of S. 7. Learned Counsel for the respondent contends however, that in 1919 Kunhimani became the karnavathi herself and in that capacity, ignoring all together the fact that she had joined in the gift, she could have filed a suit to set it aside. No case is cited in support of this interesting contention. There are cases in which it has been held that the position of a karnavan in a Malabar tarwad is not analogous to that of a trustee and I should hesitate to say that the karnavan in all cases has the power which a trustee has under the common law of suing to prevent injury to the trust property even when that injury has been caused by his own act. But taking the proposition as it stands, namely, that when a person comes into the position of a karnavan he can sue to set aside his contract made before he attained that position, without pleading that his consent was obtained by illegal means, there is, as I have said no authority, and I think that such authority would be available if the point had ever been decided in the sense contended for by the learned Counsel for the respondent. After all, much property is held in this country by senior members of Hindu families representing not only themselves but the junior members who have a joint interest in the property. If a suit had ever been filed by a family manager to set aside his own act done before he became the manager and if that suit had been decided in his favour otherwise than on the ground that he had been illegally induced to do the act the case I think would have reached one or other of the High Courts and would have been available in the law reports. On this first point therefore I hold that the plaintiff and Kunhimani were not jointly entitled to file a suit of this nature because Kunhimani, in addition to pleading that she was a junior member of the tarwad, would have had to plead that her consent to the gift was not voluntary but had been obtained by illegal means. The learned Subordinate Judge thought that because a suit of this nature could be filed by Kunhimani, therefore she was jointly entitled within the meaning of S. 7 along with the plaintiff to file a suit to set aside this gift. My finding on that point is that I am in entire agreement with the learned Counsel for the appellant that so far as the capacity to file a suit is concerned, the title of Kunhi-mani who executed the document and the title of the plaintiff who was not a party to it are not joint but separate and distinct.

The second ground is I think even more cogent. It is contended by learned Counsel for the appellant that Kunhimani could not, within the meaning of S. 7, have given a discharge without the concurrence of the plaintiff. The expression "giving a discharge" must I think mean with reference to the facts of this case "remaining silent until the time to question the gift by suit had expired." There is no doubt that Kunhimani did this but, as contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant, in doing so she cannot be held to have acted with the concurrence of the plaintiff nor can her failure to take the necessary action be regarded by itself as sufficient to perfect the title of the donees. In the case reported in *Ganga Dayal v. Mani Ram*¹, it was held that as between two brothers in a joint Hindu family the elder by failing to file a suit to set aside an alienation had not thereby given a discharge which was binding on his younger brother. It was held on the contrary that the latter was entitled to sue under S. 6 of the Indian Limitation Act within three years of his attaining majority. The learned Judges in that case (Mr. Justice Richards and Mr. Justice Griffin) held that the elder brother was not capable of giving a discharge without the concurrence of the younger and if I may say so with great respect, I agree with those Judges. Where there are joint owners of property each being entitled to the whole equally with the others, I do not see how the negligence of one can take away the statutory rights of the rest. The Privy Council to which the case just cited was appealed have not discussed the point in any detail. The respondent did not appear in the Privy Council and the decision was "on the question of limitation their Lordships concur with the High Court." A case has been cited of a Bench of this Court consisting of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar as he then was and Mr. Justice Napier in which the former construed S. 7 of the Limitation Act in the same sense as the learned Subordinate Judge has done here. That case was even stronger than the present case. The first defendant in that case had executed the document as the karnavan of the tarwad and Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar held that provided that he alleged that his consent was fraudulently obtained he could have filed the suit to set aside the alienation and on that account must be deemed to be a person jointly entitled with the plaintiff who was a junior member of the tarwad. Mr. Justice Napier did not agree with that opinion and it is not apparent how the question under S. 7 of the Limitation Act came to be discussed by Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, for it was not necessary to the decision of the case. With great respect I find it impossible to concur in that opinion. S. 7 of the Limitation Act is a disabling section. S. 6 confers on persons who are entitled to property or interests in property and who are incapacitated from suing out their rights in Court, the right to file suits within a reasonable period after the incapacity has disappeared. S. 7 so far as it takes away that right must I think be strictly construed and before dismissing the suit of a minor which is in time within the meaning of S. 6 the Court should be quite certain that the disabling provisions of S. 7 apply to his case.

The second appeal in respect of the gift evidenced by Ex. A is allowed. In other respects the appeal has not been pressed and it is dismissed. Each party will bear his or her own costs throughout.

Leave to appeal is granted.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), S. 42—Suit for declaration of title—Consequential relief omitted in the prayer portion—Suit whether maintainable.

Where certain jewels, belonging to the appellant, as the result of certain other legal proceedings between him and the respondent company were in custodia legis, that is, were deposited in the lower Court and the appellant claiming them as his own prayed for a declaration of his title, but did not include a prayer in the plaint for any consequential relief,

Held, that since the Court should have delivered them to whomsoever showing in himself a title to them, it was not necessary for the appellant to ask for anything more than a mere declaration in the plaint.

Appeal preferred under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment and decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Horwill dated 10th September, 1937 and passed in S.A. No. 1144 of 1936 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore in A. S. No. 128 of 1936 (O. S. No. 507 of 1934, District Munsif's Court, Coimbatore).

K. Rajah Aiyar and C. S. Krishnamurthi Aiyar for Appellant.

K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Coimbatore for a declaration that he was the absolute owner of certain jewels. At the time of the suit the jewels were in possession of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate of Coimbatore. No consequential relief was asked for, and the question which we are called upon to decide is whether the suit could be maintained in view of the proviso to S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which says that no Court shall make a declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so. In 1932 the appellant was desirous of selling the jewels and he was approached by one Subba Rao who represented that he knew of a prospective purchaser. On the representation that he desired to show the jewels to the prospective purchaser the appellant handed them over to him. This was on the 3rd July, 1932. Having obtained possession of the jewels Subba Rao pledged them for a total sum of Rs. 1,000 with the respondent company, which carries on a banking business in Coimbatore. When the appellant came to hear of this, he complained to the police and as the result Subba Rao was charged with criminal breach of trust under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code. On the 26th of October, 1932, Subba Rao was convicted and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who directed that the jewels should be returned to the respondent company on security being furnished. The appellant appealed to the Additional Sessions Judge of Coimbatore against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The appeal was allowed and the Additional Sessions Judge directed that the jewels should be delivered to the appellant unconditionally. In accordance with this order the appellant obtained possession of the jewels from the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 21st December, 1932. In the meantime the respondent company had filed an application to this Court for the revision of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge. The application was heard on the 10th August, 1933 and was successful. This Court directed that the jewels should be delivered to the respondent company. The appellant did not obey the order and the respondent company was compelled to apply to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to enforce it. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate accordingly issued a summons to the appellant calling upon him to produce and surrender the jewels. This the appellant did on the 11th June, 1934, but on the same day filed the suit out of which this Letters Patent Appeal arises, and obtained an interim order from the District Munsif directing the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to deposit the jewels in the District Munsif's Court pending the decision of the suit. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate complied with this order and the jewels have since remained in the District Munsif's Court.

In the written statement the respondent company pleaded that it was a pledgee of the jewels in good faith and was entitled to the benefit of the pledge by reason of the provisions of Ss. 178 and 178-A of the Contract Act. The respondent company also pleaded that the suit was bad because the appellant had omitted to include in his plaint a prayer for possession of the jewels. The District Munsif found that the respondent company had accepted the pledge of the jewels in good faith and that it was protected by Ss. 178 and 178-A of the Contract Act, but dismissed the suit on the ground that the appellant was not entitled to maintain it without a prayer for consequential relief. The appellant appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore who considered that the respondent company had not acted in good faith and therefore was not entitled to the benefit of the pledge, but he agreed with the District Munsif that the suit was not maintainable in view of the proviso to S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The result was that he affirmed the decree dismissing the suit. The appellant then filed an appeal to this Court. This was heard by Horwill, J., who also held that the suit was not maintainable without a prayer for consequential relief.

The learned Judge discussed the decisions of this Court in *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*¹, *Malaiyya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai*² and Natesa Aiyar v. Mangalathammals and came to the conclusion that the law was correctly stated in the case last mentioned. We do not share this opinion, but before examining the cases cited there is an earlier decision of this Court, which calls for mention, namely, the decision of Turner, C. J. and Muttuswami Aiyar, J., in *Ramanuja v. Devanayaka*⁴. In that case Turner, C. J., observed:

"Possession, whether it is of property or of an office may be regarded either as a physical fact, or in contemplation of the legal right to it, and it is in the former sense it should be understood in coming to a finding under S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act as to whether the plaintiff is, or is not, able to seek further relief. It may be observed that the term relief pre-supposes the actual withholding of the fruit of the right of which a declaration is sought, and not its mere denial. A declaratory decree is all that a plaintiff requires when he has no need of the assistance of the Court to replace him in possession."

In our opinion the law is here correctly stated.

In *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*¹, the facts were these. A minor was entitled to a certain property which was in the possession of his mother. The plaintiff filed an application under the Guardian and Wards Act for an order appointing him guardian of the property of the minor. Pending the hearing of this application he was appointed the receiver of the property and in this capacity he took possession of it from the mother. The validity of the order appointing the plaintiff receiver was challenged in an appeal to this Court, which held that the order had been wrongly passed and directed that the mother should be replaced in possession of the property. The minor was murdered and the receiver filed a suit for a declaration that he was entitled to the property of the minor as the nearest reversioner. The mother pleaded that the suit could not be maintained without a prayer for possession, but the Court held that the suit was maintainable. At the time the suit was filed the possession of the property was neither with the plaintiff nor with the mother, but was in custodia legis. The fact that it was in the possession of the plaintiff as receiver made no difference. That was a mere accident. As the possession was the possession of a Court all that was necessary was a declaration of title. That seems to us to be exactly the position here.

In *Malayiya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai*¹, it was held that before the proviso to S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act applied it must be shown that the defendant was in possession, and that as against him the plaintiff could obtain an order for delivery of possession. In that case proceedings were taken under Ss. 145 and 146 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and a receiver was appointed to hold possession of the property in dispute. The order was subsequently cancelled by this Court and the receiver was directed to deliver possession to the defendant. At the time the suit was filed the property was still in the possession of the receiver. It was held that in such circumstances there was no necessity to claim consequential relief. This decision is in complete accord with the decision in *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*². These appeals were heard by Division Benches and are binding on us. But there is also a decision of the Privy Council to the same effect: *Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Sanatan Dharam High School Trust, Indaura v. The Managing Committee, Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Rajput High School, Indaura*³. The suit there had reference to a school. At the time the suit was filed the school was in the possession of the founder, who was merely holding it until certain disputes had been decided by the Court. He was willing to hand the property over to those declared to be entitled to it. The plaintiffs merely asked for a declaratory decree. The Subordinate Judge considered that it was necessary to ask for possession his reason being that the plaintiffs were neither in possession nor in control of the management of the school. As a decree for possession was not sought he dismissed the suit. On appeal the High Court held that the Subordinate Judge was wrong. The defendants were not in possession or in a position to deliver possession of the properties and there was no further relief available to the plaintiffs against the defendants. The Judicial Committee agreed with the High Court.

I will now state the facts in Natesa Aiyar v. Mangalamammal. There the plaintiff was the widow of one Viswanatha Aiyar, who was also survived by his father and a brother. A mortgage had been executed in favour of the plaintiff's husband and on his death his father brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree, as a result of which certain moneys were brought into Court towards the satisfaction of the decree. The father instituted a suit as manager of the joint family and claimed that the mortgage formed part of the joint estate. The father died without withdrawing the moneys from Court and the surviving son then applied for payment out to him of the moneys as the legal representative of his father. The plaintiff objected to this and claimed that the mortgage was the separate property of her husband. She then filed a suit to obtain a declaration of her right to the monies. Pakenham Walsh, J., held that a prayer for consequential relief was essential. He considered that the case was distinguishable from *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*¹ and *Malaiyya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai*². It is true that the decision in *Natesa Aiyar v. Mangalathammal*³ was accepted as being correct in a Letters Patent Appeal which followed, but no reasons were given in the judgment. We do not agree that *Natesa Aiyar v. Mangalathammal*³ was distinguishable. The question which arose there was really the same question which arose in *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*¹ and in *Malaiyya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai*² and if they were rightly decided, *Natesa Aiyar v. Mangalathammal*³ was wrongly decided. Inasmuch as the judgment of Pakenham Walsh, J., was approved of on appeal we have been asked to refer the present appeal to a Full Bench. It is not necessary to do so as the judgment of the Privy Council in *Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Sanatan Dharam High School Trust, Indaura v. The Managing Committee, Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Rajput High School, Indaura*⁴ shows that *Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal*¹ and *Malaiyya Pillai v. Perumal Pillai*² were rightly decided.

The fact that when the present suit was filed the jewels were in the possession of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who as the result of the decision of this Court in the revision application was bound to hand them to the respondent company unless otherwise directed, makes no difference. All the Court has to consider is who has possession. The jewels have not been in the possession of the respondent company since 21st December, 1932. At the time of the institution of the suit the jewels were in custodia legis and have remained in custodia legis. The Court must deliver them to the person who shows a title. Therefore it was not necessary for the appellant to ask for anything more than a mere declaration. The appeal will be allowed and a decree passed in terms of the prayer with costs throughout.

Advocate—Struck off rolls—Application for readmission—Grounds for—Mere opinion certificates about his fitness insufficient.

Before readmitting an advocate, who has been ordered to be struck off the rolls of advocates for misappropriation, to the legal profession, the Court must be fully satisfied that the petitioner has fully regained his character and is fitted for readmission into the ranks of an honourable profession. Mere opinions expressed by gentleman who have given the petitioner certificates that he is a fit and proper person for readmission without stating the grounds on which the opinions are based are not sufficient.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to reconsider the orders of the High Court dated 9th February, 1931, 29th September, 1933, 3rd May, 1937 and 21st October, 1938 and readmit him to the roll of Advocates.

The petitioner in person.

The Court made the following

Leach, C.J.

ORDER. The Chief Justice.—The petitioner applies to be readmitted as an advocate of this Court. In August, 1930, he was suspended from practice for misappropriation of moneys belonging to a client. On the 9th February, 1931, his name was struck off the rolls as the result of further misappropriation of client's money. He was adjudicated an insolvent on the 29th October, 1925. His liabilities were Rs. 90,000 and he had no assets. On the 11th April, 1938, my learned brother, Mockett, J., granted him his discharge on the grounds that he would be condemned to insolvency for life if it were not granted. The petitioner had no prospects of being able to pay anything to his creditors and the discharge was unopposed. In 1933 the petitioner applied to the Court to review its order striking his name off the roll of advocates, but the application was dismissed on the 29th September, 1933, by a Full Bench composed of Beasley, C.J. and Sundaram Chetti and Stone, JJ. In support of that application the petitioner filed three certificates of character two of them being signed by individual members of the Bar and the third being a joint certificate signed by 46 members of the Bar. The Bench refused the petition for two reasons. The first was that the Court required, before re-admitting a person to the profession, solid facts and cogent reasons, not merely the opinions expressed by gentlemen who had given the petitioner certificates. It was not enough to say that the petitioner was a fit and proper person for re-admission without stating the grounds on which the opinion was based. The second reason was that the petitioner was still an insolvent.

The petitioner has now obtained his discharge, but the first ground of the Full Bench for refusing to re-admit the petitioner still exists. The petitioner has filed three further certificates, but these do not carry the matter further. Since he was suspended from practice in 1930 the petitioner has had no employment. According to his statement in Court, he has throughout been supported by his daughter. Before the Court could re-admit an advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation the Court must be fully satisfied that the petitioner has fully regained his character and is fitted for re-admission into the ranks of an honourable profession. Mere opinion is not sufficient.

Here there are no cogent reasons for the Court holding that the petitioner has become fitted to be re-admitted as an advocate. He has not attempted to obtain any employment. In fact he has stated that he refused two offers of employment made to him. One offer was employment as manager of an estate and the other was employment in an insurance company. The re-admission of an advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation does not depend on the fact that he has been suspended or struck off the rolls for several years. He can only be re-admitted if he can show that he has become worthy to act as an advocate. In deciding such matters the Court has a duty to the public and where an advocate has been guilty of misappropriation it must be shown that there is no likelihood of such an offence being committed again. In view of the previous decision and the fact that the position is now the same as it was then except that the petitioner has obtained his discharge, I consider that the Court would not be justified in allowing this petition.

Advocate—Struck off for misconduct—If Court can reinstate him.

Though an advocate has once been struck off the rolls for an act done by him amounting to professional misconduct, it does not preclude the Court from reinstating him when adequate punishment has been imposed and he has shown by subsequent conduct that he has rehabilitated himself in such a manner that he is fitted to be admitted into the profession again.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein the High Court will be pleased to review the order dated 15th October, 1931, disbarring him and reinstate him to the roll of the Advocates.

T. R. Venkatarama Sasiri and K. S. Sankara Aiyar for Petitioner.

The Court made the following

Leach, C.J.

ORDER The Chief Justice.—The name of the petitioner was struck off the roll of advocates of this Court on the 15th October, 1931, as it had been shown that he had misappropriated a sum of Rs. 4,800 belonging to a client. The petitioner, who had considerable property, got into financial difficulties in 1927 and on the 14th February of that year he was adjudicated an insolvent. On the 25th April, 1927, he was suspended from practice. The delay in the passing of the order striking the petitioner's name off the rolls was due to the fact that the Court desired to know the position disclosed by the insolvent's public examination before arriving at a decision. The justice of the order of this Court striking the petitioner's name off the roll of advocates is not and could not be questioned. It is said, however, that during the twelve years that have elapsed since the petitioner was first suspended he has worked hard to rehabilitate himself and has succeeded in establishing an honourable reputation. The petitioner rendered all assistance that he could to the Official Assignee and secured his discharge on the 8th December, 1930. After his suspension from practice he obtained a clerkship in the office of Mr. Shamanna, a well-known solicitor of Madras, and retained this post until 1934 when he obtained a clerkship with Messrs. King and Partridge, also well-known solicitors of this city. He has continued in their service ever since. Mr. Shamanna and Messrs. H. Maitland Jones and Leslie D. Miller of Messrs. King and Partridge have given the petitioner certificates of character. Mr. Shamanna says that while he was employed by him the petitioner was dealing with his cases and with his clients and that he found his conduct and dealings both with his clients and the other members of his establishment to be satisfactory, and guided by a high sense of probity. Mr. Maitland Jones says that while in the employment of his firm the petitioner has been entrusted with important work. Mr. Maitland Jones had many opportunities of observing his conduct which he says was excellent and in addition his probity was above suspicion. Mr. Miller says:

"From my knowledge of him, in spite of what happened in the past, I personally would place every confidence in his integrity."

The petitioner has also filed a certificate given to him by Mr. Nugent Grant in April of this year. Mr. Grant says that the petitioner has throughout the period of his exclusion from the profession exhibited a consciousness of the injury he has done to himself and the profession of which he was once an honourable member. Mr. Grant believes that he had made every endeavour to atone for his lapse from morality.

The act of professional misconduct committed by the petitioner was a very grave one and it was not possible to allow him to continue practising in an honourable profession. But that does not mean that the Court is precluded from reinstating him when adequate punishment has been imposed and he has shown that he has rehabilitated himself in such a manner that he is fitted to be admitted into his profession again. I consider that there is here ground for the Court holding that the petitioner has been fully punished and that he has regained his character to an extent that justifies his readmission as an advocate of this Court. For these reasons I would allow the petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 162—Statement of accused to Police Inspector after arrest—Discovery of articles connected with crime—Admissibility in evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 27.

After the accused was taken into police custody he made a statement to the Police Inspector in the presence of respectable persons which was reduced to writing. He said: "The billhook with which I murdered the deceased has been left by stone slab projection from the wall which is on the northern side of the strong room. If you follow me, I shall pick it up and produce it." He then went with the Panchayatdars to the said house and took and handed over to the Inspector a billhook which had blood stains on it. Subsequently other incriminating articles were also found in the same house.

Held, that the statement made by the accused to the Police Inspector after his arrest was admissible in evidence against him.

Statements made by the accused persons while in the custody of the police and apparently admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act are not shut out by S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code.

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—The two accused in this case have been convicted of the murder of Boya Baligadu. The first accused has been sentenced to death and the second accused has been sentenced to transportation for life. The accused file separate petitions of appeal. In the referred trial, the question for decision is whether the sentence of death passed upon the first accused should, if his appeal fails, be confirmed.

There is no doubt on the night of the 25th of October, 1938, the deceased was murdered while he lay asleep in the pial of a temple near his house. The cause of death were four great wounds in the neck which must have been caused by a heavy cutting weapon. The Inspector of Police arrived at the village at 5-30 p.m. on the 26th. Suspicion was directed towards the first accused and search was made for him but he was not found till the 28th. On the 28th he was taken into custody and he made a statement to the Inspector in the presence of respectable persons which was reduced to writing. He then went with the Inspector and the Panchayatdars to his maternal uncle's house where he lives. From a loft in this house, he took and handed over to the Inspector a billhook which had blood stains on it. That house was immediately searched and in a box in one of the rooms, two blood-stained articles were found, namely, a banian and an upper cloth. These three articles were examined by the Chemical Examiner and the Imperial Serologist and were found to be stained with human blood. It was conclusively proved that the first accused was carrying on an intrigue with the younger daughter of the deceased and that the deceased had very strongly objected to such conduct. It was also satisfactorily proved that the second accused, a washerman, was affording the first accused opportunities and facilities to carry on this intrigue and that the deceased was equally angry with him for that reason. The evidence on this point has not been challenged on appeal. P. W. 10, the uncle of the first accused, deposed that on the night of the crime, the first accused went to sleep on the pial outside his house and in the early morning he found that the accused had shifted his position and was sleeping outside the house. He also deposed that the first accused absconded in the morning when the crime was discovered. P. W. 7, who is the concubine of the second accused, says that on the night of the crime at midnight, the first accused came to the house where she and second accused were sleeping and woke up the second accused and took him away for some purpose.

Thus, there is evidence that the first accused had a motive to murder the deceased, that the first accused was abroad on the night of the crime and that two days after the crime, the first accused knew the hiding place of a weapon of the kind which must have been used to commit the crime and which was proved to be stained with human blood; also that a banian belonging to the accused—see the evidence of P. W. 10—was stained with human blood and was found in the house where the first accused lived. In addition to that evidence, the statement made to the Inspector in the presence of several respectable persons has been put in evidence against the first accused under S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. That statement certainly complies with the provisions of S. 27. It was a statement which led to the discovery of the weapon with which the crime was committed. The accused said:

"The billhook with which I murdered the deceased has been kept by me in the house in which I am living on a stone slab projection from the wall which is on the northern side of the strong room. If you follow me, I shall pick it up and produce it."

In the record of this statement Ex. K which was made at the time and which is signed by three of the Panchayatdars, the opening words of the accused are, "The yatakodavali which I used in this case", but obviously the accused would not use an expression like that. The Inspector says that what the accused actually did say was:

"I shall show the billhook with which I murdered the deceased and which I have kept in Bandarlapalli in my house."

The expression "used in this case" is clearly a paraphrase of these words.

It is argued by learned Counsel that statements made by accused persons while in the custody of the police and apparently admissible under S. 27 of the Indian Evidence Act are shut out by S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code. Learned Counsel relies on a very recent case decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the 20th of January last, namely, Narayanaswami v. King-Emperor. That was a case relating not to a statement made under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, but to a statement made by an accused person before he was taken into custody and the Judicial Committee has held that under S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it could not be put in evidence. There are however certain observations in the judgment of the Judicial Committee relating to S. 27 of the Evidence Act and to the question now raised by the learned Counsel whether statements admissible under S. 27 are barred by S. 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But there is no ruling on the point. What the Privy Council says in this judgment, is:

"The words of S. 162 are in their Lordships' view plainly wide enough to exclude any confession made to a police officer in course of investigation whether a discovery is made or not. They may therefore pro tanto repeal the provisions of the section which would otherwise apply. If they do not, presumably it would be on the ground that S. 27 of the Evidence Act is a 'special law' within the meaning of S. 1 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that S. 162 is not a specific provision to the contrary. Their Lordships express no opinion on this topic."

It has been the opinion of several learned Judges of this Court that the provisions of S. 27 have not been repealed by S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code—see the case in *Thimmappa v. Thimmappa*¹ and the case in *Syamo Maha Patro, In re*². The ground on which the opinion has been based is that S. 27 embodies the special rule while S. 162, Criminal Procedure Code, is the general rule and the latter according to the principle referred to by the Judicial Committee does not derogate from the former. We do not think that the aforesaid judgment in *Narayanasami v. King-Emperor*³ prevents us from following the decisions and precedents of this Court. We therefore think the statement made by the accused in this case to the Inspector after his arrest, about the authenticity of which there can hardly be any doubt, was admissible in evidence against him.

We think that the evidence in this case apart from the statement aforesaid was sufficient to warrant the conviction of the first accused for murder of the deceased and the statement being, in our opinion, admissible makes the case against him doubly strong. We reject his appeal and in the circumstances no other sentence but the death sentence is appropriate. We confirm that sentence.

As regards the appeal of the second accused, we think, it must succeed. The only evidence against him is that he produced a stick and made a certain statement about that stick. But the relevancy of that evidence is not apparent. All that the discovery of the stick amounted to was that the second accused had a stick; it did not mean that anything was discovered relating to the commission of the crime. There was other evidence against this accused, namely, that of P. W. 7, his concubine, but it was very contradictory and learned Public Prosecutor concedes that no reliance can be placed upon it. In these circumstances, the appeal of the second accused is allowed and the second accused is directed to be set at liberty forthwith.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT MADRAS.

PRESENT:—MR. JUSTICE MOCKETT AND MR. JUSTICE KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR.

Ramayya Goundan .. Appellant (Plaintiff)*

v.

Kolanda Goundan and others .. Respondents (Defendants).

Hindu Law—Joint family properties—Partition of properties, outstandings of business and ancestral lands—Consciousness of partition only to that extent and not to include income acquired individually—Income of individual member not joint family property liable to be partitioned—Analogy between income of widow and income of individual male member.

If a member of a joint Hindu family has been entrusted with a block of joint family property for the purpose of mere management on behalf of the family and not for exclusive enjoyment or if he, against the will of the manager, takes and retains possession of it and derives income out of it, it may well be that that income will partake of the joint family character. But where the joint family acting through the manager has made an allotment of property to a member in order that he may maintain himself out of it without having to bring its yield into the family granary for common consumption, it is not possible in such a case to make the member accountable for the income of the property so allotted. The idea undoubtedly when an arrangement of this kind is made, is that while the corpus of the property should continue to remain joint, the income should exclusively belong to and be at the disposal of the member concerned.

Where a family of Goundans became admittedly divided in status and the brothers executed muchilikas to the arbitrators with a view to obtaining division of the family, but it was remarkable that the brothers wanted only a division of the family outstandings belonging to the moneylending business of their father and of the ancestral lands and did not put forward a claim for partition of the acquisitions of individual members, Held, that the consciousness would undoubtedly seem to be that the income which each brother derived out of the portion of property cultivated by him was to be his entirely.

There is no difference in principle between a maintenance arrangement in favour of a female member of the family and that made almost in similar circumstances to a junior male member of a joint Hindu family.

JUDGMENTS. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for partition which was tried and decided by the Subordinate Judge of Salem. The appellant is one of four brothers and was admittedly entitled to a fourth share of the joint family properties. The only question in appeal is, what are the common properties movable and immovable which belonged to the joint family and liable to be divided between the appellant and his three brothers who are respondents 1 to 3 in the appeal? A decree for partition has been passed by the Subordinate Judge in respect of such only of the immovable properties as according to his finding formed the ancestral estate. The plaintiff's claim, however, extended further and covered items of properties standing in the names of the individual defendants as also monies outstanding in their names. As regards these items of properties and outstandings the learned Subordinate Judge held against the appellant and to that extent negatived his claim. Before us, the arguments advanced on behalf of the appellant were confined to these disallowed items.

The admitted facts are these: The appellant and the three respondents are the sons of one Kali Goundan who died in 1926. The family admittedly became divided in status on the 22nd August, 1925, on which date the brothers executed a muchilika in favour of certain arbitrators with a view to obtain a division of the family properties. The execution of the muchilika without more was effective enough to bring about a disruption. Whether a severance in status had taken place at an earlier date is a matter in controversy, but it is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to decide it. The parties belong to the caste of Goundans and, according to the undisputed evidence in the case, it would seem that in this community as soon as a son marries he leaves the family residence, sets up for himself and begins to live separately with his wife in a separate house or a portion of a house allotted to him by the father or manager of the family. Commensality ceases but no separation in estate follows. It often happens that a portion of the family lands is allotted to him in order that he may cultivate it and maintain himself, his wife and children out of its income. Such an arrangement makes for convenience and harmony and tends to promote the continuance of goodwill while avoiding at the same time the kind of friction that often occurs in a growing family living together under a common roof with a common mess. The custom appears to have been acted upon in the family of the parties to this litigation. Each one of the brothers as soon as he married was allowed to set up separately for himself being given a portion of the family property approximating roughly to his share for his own exclusive enjoyment. The first and the second defendants must have begun to live separately a long time back and cultivate and enjoy for themselves the lands that were allotted to them by the father. At the date of the suit it would appear that the first defendant was about 55 years old or thereabouts and he must have started to live separately years before. The plaintiff was himself about 40 years at the time and his marriage appears to have taken place about 15 years prior. The allotments made to the brothers of what, I have no reason to doubt, were but reasonable portions of the family lands by way of a fair provision for their maintenance have never in fact been challenged at any time.

I think it is perfectly within the competence of the manager of a Hindu family to allot to individual members a sufficient portion of the family property having regard to its status and circumstances in order to enable them to maintain themselves out of its income. So long as the provision is fair and reasonable and the manager acts in good faith without making the occasion a pretext for favouritism or injustice the arrangement would be upheld by the Court as within the powers of the managing member. For it cannot be denied that every member of the family while it remains joint has a right to be maintained out of the common assets. When the manager proceeds bona fide to satisfy such a claim which is plainly the inherent right of every member, he is merely discharging a duty incumbent upon him under the law. In fact, the propriety of his act in this behalf cannot be questioned. For when the manager acts in such circumstances, it must be regarded as the act of the entire family not capable of being impeached at the instance of a single dissentient member. His consent will be presumed for every dealing with the family estate by the manager dictated by the necessities of the family or of the individuals composing it.

Mr. Sesha Aiyangar, the learned counsel for the appellant, has not argued that the provision made for each one of the brothers in this case as and when he married and began to live apart, was either extravagant in itself or incommensurate with the size of the family estate. But what he did urge was that, irrespective of these considerations, the Hindu Law stamps the savings derived from every portion of the joint property with the character of joint family property so as to make them as much divisible among the members as the family property itself. It is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to go into the larger question as to the character of the income in general derived from a portion of the joint family property when it happens to be in the hands of an individual member. If a member of the family has been entrusted with a block of joint family property for the purpose of mere management on behalf of the family and not for exclusive enjoyment or if he, against the will of the manager takes and retains possession of it and derives income out of it, it may well be that that income will partake of the joint family character. That however is not the kind of question that confronts me in the present case. As I have said, the joint family acting through the manager has made an allotment of property to the member concerned in order that he may maintain himself out of it without having to bring its yield into the family granary for common consumption. In such a case it is impossible to argue that the family could have intended to make the member accountable for the income of the property so allotted. The idea, undoubtedly when an arrangement of this kind is made, is that while the corpus of the property should continue to remain joint the income should exclusively belong to and be at the disposal of the member concerned.

In this case there is every reason for thinking that the acquisitions by the brothers were as much the result of their own industry, labour and thrift as they were the natural product of the land itself. The acquisitions claimed represent savings extending over a fairly long period. Years after the allotment and years after the acquisition it is scarcely just or equitable that the acquirer should be forced to share the product of his thrift and industry with, it may be, an indolent or ease-loving coparcener. I do not think that there is any principle of Hindu Law which tends to the perpetuation of such gross injustice and in the absence of definite authority, I am not prepared to accede to such a proposition. In fact there is authority to the contrary in a decision of a Bench of this Court reported in *Bengal Insurance and Real Property Co., Ltd. v. Velayammal*¹. At the bottom of page 1001, the learned Judges observe as follows:

Ramayya
Goundan
v.
Kolanda Goundan.
Krishnaswami
Aiyangar, J.

"The question then is, whether any profit made out of money paid to a member of a joint family by the manager for his personal use, which he is free to spend as soon as he receives it, must because he chooses to invest it for some purpose which is clearly not intended to be for the benefit of the family, be deemed to be a family acquisition. A profit made by the member of a joint family from the enjoyment of joint property without detriment to it is his separate self-acquired property; *Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein*². When money is given to a member of a family by the manager from family funds to be spent by him for his personal use, it seems to us that any profit made by him can hardly be said to be in detriment of the joint property."

This decision does support the conclusion that I have myself reached though it seems to proceed on a somewhat different principle. I may observe that in this case emphasis is laid on the fact that the acquisition was made without, as it was termed, detriment to the family property. It seems to me that it would be more appropriate to look at this question from the point of view of the right of each individual member of the family to be maintained out of the common assets and the duty of the manager to maintain or make a reasonable provision for the maintenance of, the junior members. A provision so made must be held to be binding upon the family and every member of it. I may in this connection perhaps refer to the analogical case of a widow to whom property is often handed over for her enjoyment in lieu of maintenance. It cannot be suggested that any savings for the income of such property can be called back by the family which made the provision. The corpus of the property would no doubt in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, revert back to the family, but the savings out of the income will not; not even at her death unless incorporated with the property itself by a consentient act of hers. I am unable to see any difference in principle between a maintenance arrangement in favour of a female member of the family and that made almost in similar circumstances to a junior male member of the family. I am therefore of opinion that there is no substance in the appellant's contention, and I must accordingly negative it.

I may also point out that the plaintiff and the other members of the family seem all along to have proceeded upon the footing that the income derived by each member from out of the lands allotted to him was his own and not that of the family. In 1925 the four brothers executed a panchayat muchilika in favour of certain arbitrators with a view as I have already mentioned to get the family properties partitioned between them. It is remarkable that in this document the brothers wanted a division only of the family outstandings belonging to the moneylending business carried on by the father and of the ancestral lands and did not put forward a claim for the division of the acquisitions of the individual members. It is conceded that on this date there were individual acquisitions in the shape of both outstandings and immovable properties standing in the names of each of the brothers, and yet nobody ever thought of advancing a claim to divide them. To my mind this is a striking piece of evidence against the present contention of the appellant. The consciousness of the members of this family therefore would undoubtedly seem to be that the income which each brother derived out of the portion of the property cultivated by him was to be his entirely. I am accordingly of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs of respondents 1 and 3.

Though a plaintiff bases his suit on title, relief can be given on the strength of his possession alone. In certain circumstances a decree can be passed on the strength of plaintiff's possession though it is not specifically made a ground of relief.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Appellant.P. S. Narayanaswami Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the respondent for a permanent injunction restraining the appellant from interfering with his enjoyment of the suit property and, in case it was found that the respondent was not in possession, for delivery of possession free from the obstruction of the appellant. The respondent claimed title under an Inam grant alleged to have been made to his predecessors-in-title by the Carnatic rulers for the supply of Tulasi to the Kallalagar Devasthanam in the Madura District. The respondent also alleged that in or about the year 1918 the trustees of Ramalingaswami Mutt falsely set up title to the suit properties and at the instance of some mediators, the dispute with them was settled by the trustees giving what is described as a release sale deed relinquishing all their interest in the suit properties, and recognising the respondent's title thereto. Since then, the respondent claimed to have been in possession and enjoyment of the suit properties down to the year 1933 when the appellant disturbed his possession under colour of a sale deed obtained by him from one Singaram Pillai. The appellant denied the title as well as the possession put forward by the respondent and pleaded that the property originally belonged to one Narayana Paradesi from whose successor-in-title he obtained the property by sale deed dated 14th February, 1933.

The trial Court found that the Inam grant put forward by the respondent related only to the Melwaram interest in the land but that he acquired the right to the land itself by virtue of the release deed executed by the trustees of Ramalingaswami Mutt and thus became the full owner of the suit property. As regards the respondent's possession, he held that the evidence on record was not sufficient to establish an acquisition of title by the respondent by adverse possession if the respondent was held to have no title otherwise.

On appeal the learned District Judge confirmed the finding of the District Munsif that the Inam grant was only of the Melwaram but disagreed with him on the question of the respondent's title. He held that the release deed Ex. B could not confer a valid title on the respondent because only two out of the four trustees of the Mutt executed it, and besides it was not shown to have been executed for any necessary purpose binding on the Mutt. He, however, held that the respondent got possession of the properties under Ex. B and continued in possession till he was disturbed in such possession by the appellant in 1933 and that the respondent was entitled to a decree on the basis of his possession irrespective of any question of title. As the Mutt was not a party to the suit, the learned Judge thought it was unnecessary to decide whether the respondent had acquired title by adverse possession against the Mutt.

The learned Counsel for the appellant raised two contentions before me. First he urged that when a plaintiff bases his suit on title, he cannot claim relief on the strength of his mere anterior possession even alternatively; he could rely upon possession only as evidence of the title put forward by him but not as an independent ground of claim by itself. For this somewhat startling proposition, he relied upon a decision of the Bombay High Court, Govindbhai v. Dahyabhai. There the trial Court found that the plaintiff in that case had more or less a precarious possession for a short period and it was with reference to that finding which the learned Judges described as tentative that they made their observations at page 208 of the report. I do not understand that decision as laying down what in effect would be a new rule of misjoinder not warranted by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Karuppanan
Ambalam
v.
Sundara
Raja
Aiyar.

The learned Counsel next contended that even if it is permissible to put forward mere previous possession as a ground of claim, in the alternative, in a suit based primarily upon title, no such case having been expressly set up by the respondent in this case in his plaint, the learned District Judge erred in law in granting the respondent a decree on the basis of his prior possession after negating the title that was specifically set up. The learned Counsel cited in support of his proposition *Maikal Servai v. Thambuswamy Servai*¹, *Somasundaram Chetty v. Vadivelu Pillai*², *Venkatasami Naick v. Kali Samatan*³, *Ramalinga Pandaram v. Anthonimuthu Vathiar*⁴ and certain other decisions more or less to the same effect. In some of these cases, the suits were no doubt dismissed on the ground that the title set up by the plaintiff was not established, and that no decree could be granted on the strength of mere possession as no possessory title had been put forward in the plaint. But I do not regard these decisions as laying down an inflexible rule that under no circumstances can a decree be passed on the strength of plaintiff's possession unless such possession is specifically made the ground of relief in the plaint. I regard them merely as illustrations of the salutary principle that parties should ordinarily be confined to the case raised by them in their pleadings and that no relief should be awarded on the basis of a new case not disclosed in the pleadings. The underlying principle is, of course, that no party should be taken by surprise but should have a fair and adequate opportunity to meet the case of his opponent. Judged by this principle, it cannot be said in this case that the appellant was prejudiced to any extent by any new case being sprung upon him without any previous indication thereof in the plaint. In paragraphs 7 and 8 of the plaint, after referring to the release deed by the trustees of the Mutt and delivery of possession by them, the respondent definitely and clearly alleged:—

"From that time till this day, the plaintiff himself is enjoying the suit land and is paying the kist, etc., due thereon. The patta also has been registered in his name. Nobody else had, at any time, any right to, or enjoyment of, the said land."

And the appellant, in paragraph 8 of his written statement, traversed these allegations and Issue 5 and the additional Issue, relating to the respondent's acquisition of title by adverse possession and his having been in possession within 12 years before the suit, also clearly raised the question of the respondent's possession of the suit property. Evidence was let in by both the parties on these issues and the matter also was elaborately considered by both the Courts below. In these circumstances, I am unable to see any ground for complaint that the appellant was prejudiced by the decree having been passed on a new case which the appellant had no sufficient opportunity to meet.

The respondent's learned counsel has drawn my attention to a decision of the Privy Council in *Ismail Ariff v. Mahomed Ghous*¹, where also, as far as could be seen from the summary of the plaintiff's case in their Lordships' judgment, the suit had been based upon the plaintiff's title and no mere possessory title had been specifically put forward as such. But allegations of possession by the plaintiff and his predecessors-in interest had, of course, been made. The High Court refused to declare the plaintiff's title under S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, though they found that the plaintiff was actually in possession for over six years prior to the suit. But their Lordships reversed the decision of the High Court and granted a declaration of the plaintiff's title on the strength of his possession alone, leaving the question of the plaintiff's title undecided.

I am therefore of opinion that the decree of the lower Court was rightly made and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Leave refused.

S. 17 of the Registration Act requires non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, any right, title or interest in immovable property to be registered. If such an instrument is not registered it cannot be given in evidence by reason of the provisions of S. 49 of the Act.

Where a declaration, made on dissolution of a partnership, that the three persons who had constituted the partnership had equal rights in the properties which had been purchased out of the profits, the fact that the agreement embodying the terms of the dissolution was entered in the daybook of the firm and not drawn up separately makes no difference. The words written in the book constitute the agreement in writing. The agreement is an instrument which creates a title and not a mere recital of fact, as pointed out by Lord Dunedin in *Bageshwari Charan Singh v. four items was purchased in the name of the appellant's father and another lot comprising three items was purchased in the names of the appellant's father and the first respondent's brother. On the dissolution it was agreed that the immovable properties should not be divided among the partners, but should be held by them as joint tenants with equal rights. The terms of the dissolution were set out in full in the firm's daybook and the statement (Ex. A) was signed by all the partners. The appellant's father died in 1921 and the first respondent's brother in 1918. The immovable properties eventually came into the possession of the appellant. In 1928 the first respondent filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Gooty for partition of the properties and delivery to him of the one-third share which he claimed therein. The appellant resisted the claim. He contended that the properties did not belong to the partnership, but to his father; that the suit was barred by the provisions of Art. 106 of the Limitation Act not having been brought within three years of the dissolution of the partnership, and that Ex. A could not be admitted in evidence by reason of non-registration, which precluded any claim being made under it. The District Munsif rejected the appellant's contentions and decreed the suit. On appeal the District Judge of Anantapur held that the properties in suit were not partnership properties, but properties which belonged exclusively to the appellant's father. He also held that the suit was barred by limitation and that Ex. A required registration. The appeal was therefore allowed and the suit dismissed. The first respondent then filed a second appeal which was heard by Varadachariar, J. The learned Judge restored the decree of the District Munsif. He held that the District Judge had entirely failed to appreciate the evidence which showed conclusively that the properties belonged to the partnership, that the suit did not fall within Art. 106 of the Limitation Act and that the law did not require Ex. A to be registered. The learned Judge having granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent the appellant has filed the present appeal.

It is not necessary to decide whether Varadachariar, J., was justified in reversing the decision of the District Judge on the question of the ownership of the properties because we consider that the appellant is entitled to succeed on his contention that Ex. A required to be registered.

Ex. A, after describing the immovable properties purchased by the firm out of the partnership assets proceeds:—

“Panyam Yerakalanna, Alasyam Nettakalappa and Voruganti Basappa, these three individuals, have rights for equal shares in the amount of Rs. 1,106-3-1 mentioned in the balance sheet from Nos. 1 to 9, and to the lands mentioned in pages 232-233.

Particulars of the amount of debts to the extent of Rs. 2,597-8-9 mentioned in pages 10 to 13 which have to be paid by us three, mentioned in numbers 14 to 16—particulars thereof:—

		Rs.	A	P.
No. 14 Panyam Yerakalanna	..	700	11	9	with interest thereon.
No. 15 Voruganti Nagappa	..	649	10	5	„
No. 16 Alasyam Nettakalappa	..	1,247	2	7	„

We the three aforesaid individuals have agreed thereto and settled the accounts.”

There is here a declaration, made on the dissolution of the partnership, that the three persons who had constituted the partnership had equal rights in the properties which had been purchased out of the profits. The fact that the agreement embodying the terms of the dissolution was entered in the day-book and not drawn up separately makes no difference. The words written in the book constitute an agreement in writing. Varadachariar, J., held that Ex. A did not require registration because it did not operate to transfer property from the partnership to its members. He referred to the provisions of S. 253 of the Contract Act which states that partners are joint owners of the properties purchased out of partnership funds, and to the decision in *Samuvier v. Ramasubbier*¹, which deals with this section. The learned Judge treated Ex. A as being merely a statement of existing facts.

S. 17 of the Registration Act requires non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, any right, title, or interest, in immovable property to be registered. In our opinion Ex. A is an instrument which declares the rights in the properties from the date of dissolution of the partnership and therefore should have been registered. As it is not registered it cannot be given in evidence by reason of the provisions of S. 49 of the Act. In *Bageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagannath Kuar*², the Privy Council accepted the interpretation of the word “declare” given by West, J., in *Sakharam Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji*³, where he said that the word implies a declaration of will and not a mere statement of fact. Lord Dunedin who delivered the judgment of the Board pointed out that the distinction is between a mere recital of a fact and something which itself creates a title. We regard Ex. A as being within the latter category.

As I have already indicated part of the properties were purchased in the name of the appellant's father and part in the names of the first respondent's brother and the appellant's father. Up to the time of the dissolution the partners must be regarded as joint owners of the properties within the meaning of S. 253, but they were not entitled to specific shares and the rights they possessed were subject to the liabilities of the partnership on dissolution. Until an account had been taken and provision had been made for the discharge of the liabilities no partner could claim to be entitled to have a definite share in a particular asset. When allotting on a dissolution what remains after making provision for the firm's debts and the remaining assets include immovable properties, it does not follow that the partners will take the immovable properties in equal shares, even if they had equal rights in the partnership. What each partner receives will depend on the circumstances and the nature of the assets which remain for division. A partner, for instance, may have overdrawn his account and disentitled himself to equal division. It so happened in this case that it was possible to arrange that the immovable properties should be held by the persons who had formed the partnership as joint tenants with equal rights, but it might have been otherwise. Ex. A was drawn up and signed in order that the post dissolution rights should be declared and placed beyond dispute. In our opinion the declaration clearly falls within S. 17 of the Registration Act, which means that the document cannot now be admitted in evidence. This being the case the Court can only regard the properties as being partnership assets and the suit is consequently hopelessly time barred. The appeal will therefore be allowed with costs throughout.

Under the Mitakshara Law the father's interest in the family estate devolves by survivorship on his son or sons as the case may be. If the father dies leaving no property apart from his interest in the joint estate he dies leaving no estate. Consequently a creditor has not got the right to bring a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased Hindu who was joint with his son and died leaving no property apart from his interest in the family estate

The Chief Justice.—The question which is raised in this appeal is whether a creditor has the right to bring a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased Hindu who was joint with his son and died leaving no property apart from his interest in the family estate. One Arunachalam Chettiar, a member of the Nattukottai Chettiar community, died in February, 1930, being survived by a widow and a son (the second respondent). The first respondent, who claims to be a creditor of the deceased, filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Devakottai for the administration of his estate. The widow and the son and 18 creditors were made defendants. The appellants who were the fourth and fifth defendants challenged the right claimed by the first respondent to bring a suit for administration. In addition to denying that the plaintiff-respondent was a creditor of the father they averred that a suit for administration would not lie because the family estate had devolved upon the son by survivorship under the Mitakshara law and consequently there was no separate estate to administer. The case of the plaintiff-respondent was that the property in the possession of the son was the self-acquired property of the father and he had ample estate. The District Munsif found that the property was the self-acquired property of the father and granted a decree for administration. The appellants appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Devakottai, who reversed the finding of the District Munsif, holding that the property was family property and that it had passed by survivorship to the son. It is not open to the plaintiff-respondent to challenge this finding. The Subordinate Judge, however, was of opinion that despite the fact that the father left no separate estate the plaintiff-respondent was entitled to maintain the suit. The appellants then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Lakshmana Rao, J., who upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge, but gave leave to appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The learned Judge in holding that the administration suit could be maintained relied on the provisions of Ss. 50, 52 and 53 of the Code of Civil Procedure and on the decision of Horwill, J., in Kavuri Anjayya v. Alapati Ankamma.

S. 50 of the Code of Civil Procedure allows a decree-holder to execute his decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, and provides that the legal representative shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of. S. 52 relates to the position where a decree has been obtained after the death of the judgment-debtor and has been passed against his legal representative. Where the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of his property. S. 53 says that for the purposes of S. 50 and S. 52, property in the hands of a son or other descendant which is liable under Hindu law for the payment of the debt of a deceased ancestor, in respect of which a decree has been passed, shall be deemed to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son or other descendant as his legal representative. S. 50 was S. 234 of the Code of 1882 and S. 52 was S. 252. S. 53 is new. It was inserted in the present Code because there was a conflict of judicial opinion in India on the question whether it was necessary for the holder of a decree against a Hindu father to bring a suit to realise his decree after the death of the judgment-debtor or whether he could proceed to execute against the family property in the hands of the son without filing a suit. There is nothing in these sections which justifies the conclusion that a suit for administration will lie where a Hindu father dies leaving no property of his own.

Under the Mitakshara law the father's interest in the family estate devolves by survivorship on his son or sons as the case may be. If the father dies leaving no property apart from his interest in the joint estate he dies leaving no estate. If there is only one son the son becomes entitled to the whole of the family property in his own right, subject to any lawful charges which may have been created and to the conditions imposed by his personal law. Under his personal law he has to satisfy out of the family property coming into his hands debts incurred for a family necessity. By reason of the pious objection rule he can also be called upon to pay the debts of his father if they have not been incurred for immoral or unlawful purposes. These conditions do not, however, derogate from the nature of the son's estate on his father's death. If he is the only son the family estate becomes his entirely, subject to the conditions which I have indicated. This being the position a suit for the administration of father's estate cannot be maintained unless the father leaves separate property. It does not mean that a suit may not be filed. A creditor cannot be prevented from filing a suit for the administration of the father's estate and may get a preliminary decree for account, but if it appears on the taking of accounts and the making of the usual inquiries that there is no property apart from what was before the father's death the joint family estate the proceedings cannot be carried further.

There is considerable authority in support of the view which I have just expressed. In Gangaram Keval v. Nagindas Kushaldasi, a joint Hindu family consisted of a father and two sons. The father died having incurred certain debts. Later, the elder of the two sons died. A creditor of the father then filed a suit for the administration of the father's estate. It was shown that the father had left no separate estate. The Court treated the suit as a suit for the administration of the estate of a living person and therefore did not lie. The Calcutta, Allahabad, Patna, Rangoon and Lahore High Courts have all held that a surviving member of a Hindu family is not entitled to letters of administration in respect of the estate of a deceased member of the family when he has left no separate property: Vide Durgaprasad Barhai v. Jewdhari Singh, Balmukund Dubé, In re³, Kali Kumar v. Nunabali Kumari, *Gopalaswami Pillay v. Meenakshi Ammal*⁶ and *Uttam Devi v. Dina Nath*⁶. The same principle is involved here. To quote from the judgment in *Gopalaswami Pillay v. Meenakshi Ammal*⁶:

"A member of an undivided Hindu family during his life is entitled to the beneficial interest in the family estate, but on his death that interest immediately ceases and the whole beneficial interests in the estate belong to the other members of the family. There is no succession to the deceased's estate because he has left nothing to succeed to. No part of the joint family estate is therefore the deceased's estate within the meaning of S. 218 of the Succession Act."

In Kavuri Anjayya v. Alapati Ankamma, Horwill, J., held that a creditor of a Hindu father dying undivided from his son is entitled to bring a suit for administration against the son. The learned Judge considered that the obligations of the son are precisely those of an heir, for he is liable for the lawful debts of his father to the extent of the assets of the joint family property which come into his hands. He also expressed the opinion that the very reason that would make it equitable and desirable to enable a creditor to file an administration suit would make it equitable and desirable that a creditor should be allowed to bring an administration suit against an undivided son of the debtor. We must express our dissent. The son is not the father's heir so far as the family property is concerned and "equitable consideration" cannot turn his property into his father's estate. The decision in *Kavuri Anjayya v. Alapati Ankamma*¹ will therefore be overruled.

In the course of the argument our attention has been drawn to the Full Bench decision of this Court in *In the matter of Desu Manavala Chetty*². In that case the family property consisted in part of shares standing in the name of the father. On the father's death these shares devolved upon the son under the rule of survivorship, but the company which had issued the shares refused to recognise the son's right to them unless he obtained letters of administration. In these circumstances he applied for letters of administration of his father's estate and the question which the Court was called upon to decide was what amount he should be called upon to pay as stamp fee. It was held that as he wanted letters of administration the letters would only be issued to him on paying the stamp fee based on the full value of the shares. The Court consisted of Benson, Miller and Sankaran Nair, JJ. Benson, J., made no reference to the right of the son to apply for letters of administration nor did Sankaran Nair, J. They regarded the question involved as relating merely to the amount of stamp fee the applicant should pay. Miller, J., did say that the son was a person to whom letters could be issued, but in spite of this we cannot regard this case as being an authority in support of the contention of the plaintiff-respondent that the present suit can be maintained. The decision was merely concerned with the amount of stamp duty to be paid for letters of administration which were required to enable the son to get possession of the shares which were his by right.

Mr. Patanjali Sastri on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent has asked us to regard the family estate in a case of this nature as representing a fund from which a father's debts can be paid, and he says that in these circumstances the family estate should be looked upon as being his estate. This argument cannot be accepted in the face of the very definite rule of the Mitakshara law that on the death of the father the son takes the father's interest in the joint estate not as his heir but by the right of survivorship.

The appeal succeeds and the suit will be dismissed with costs in favour of the appellants both here and below.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 8—Promissory note of 1930 in favour of A—Renewal in name of B for A in 1933—Suit by B's indorsee—Decree thereon—Application to scale down as a debt of 1930 under S. 8—Debtor if precluded from proving that renewal was benami for A—Ss. 120 and 121 of Negotiable Instruments Act—Scope of—If bars proof of renewal.

On the strength of a promissory note executed on 19th February, 1933, a decree was obtained on 2nd May, 1936. The judgment-debtor sought to prove that the note was in renewal of a note of 1930 and that therefore the debt must be deemed to be one incurred prior to 1st October, 1932, and accordingly liable to be scaled down under S. 8 of the Act. The renewal was in the name of the wife of the payee under the earlier note of 1930 and it was therefore contended that it was not permissible to prove that it was a renewal benami in the name of the wife.

Held, that Ss. 120 and 121 of the Negotiable Instruments Act make it clear that the exclusion or estoppel is only in suits or proceedings to enforce a claim on the negotiable instrument and not a general exclusion or estoppel applicable to all proceedings, whether based on the negotiable instrument or not. It does not apply to applications the object of which is not to recover the amount due on the instrument, but to get relief from debt under the Agriculturists Relief Act.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tiruvannamalai dated 4th October, 1938 and made in I. A. No. 447 of 1938 in O. S. No. 65 of 1936.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition by the Official Trustee of Madras on behalf of a minor who is the judgment-debtor in the decree in O. S. No. 65 of 1936 on the file of the District Munsif of Tiruvannamalai. That decree was obtained by the respondent on the strength of a promissory note executed on 19th February, 1933 and the decree itself is dated 2nd May, 1936. The petition is to revise the order of the District Munsif on an application under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, IV of 1938, praying to amend the decree after scaling down the debt. It is not disputed that the petitioner is an agriculturist entitled to the benefits conferred upon agriculturist debtors by the new Act, and the Court below has actually amended the decree by scaling down the debt in accordance with the provisions of S. 8 of the Act treating the debt as one incurred after the 1st October, 1932, the suit promissory note being itself subsequent in date to the 1st of October, 1932.

Anandam
vs.
Muthu-kumara-
Mudali.

The petitioner's contention was, and is, that the suit promissory note was merely a renewal of a former promissory note of the year 1930 and that therefore the debt must be deemed to be one which was incurred prior to 1st October, 1932, and that the scaling down should be in accordance with the provisions of S. 8 of the Act. The point, therefore, for decision in this petition is whether the petitioner is entitled to claim to have the debt scaled down in accordance with the provisions of S. 8; in other words, whether the debt which ripened into a decree in 1936, to use the language in S. 8 of the Act, was a debt incurred before 1st of October, 1932. On the facts the petitioner succeeded in the Court below in showing that the subsequent promissory note of 1933 was really a renewal of the original promissory note of 1930, but, though the truth of the case was on the side of the petitioner, the lower Court did not give him the benefit of the truth of his case on the ground that he was really precluded from establishing the truth of the case by reason of a special rule of law applicable to promissory notes which precluded him from contending that the renewal was taken in the name of the respondent's indorser by her husband who was the payee under the original note. The arguments therefore before me have more or less been confined to this aspect of the case, namely, whether there is this estoppel standing in the way of the petitioner which prevents him from establishing that as a matter of fact the note of 1933 was a renewal of the note of 1930. On the side of the respondent reliance is placed on the Full Bench decision in *Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ and on the petitioner's side reliance is placed on certain observations including comments on the decision in *Subba Narayana Vathiyar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*¹ in the later Full Bench decision in Venkatarama

Ananda

Reddiar v. Valli Akkali. Apart from these decisions, the sections which are relied upon on behalf of the respondent, namely, Ss. 120 and 121 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, make it clear that the exclusion or estoppel is only in suits on the negotiable instrument, the material words being:

"No maker of the promissory note shall in a suit thereon be permitted to deny."

It is not a general exclusion or estoppel applicable to all proceedings, whether based on the negotiable instrument or not. The provisions of the English Act do not contain these qualifying words, "in a suit thereon" which are found in the Indian enactment and it does not seem useful to examine the English decisions in order to find out what these words which are found in the Indian enactment actually mean. It seems to me that, the words being themselves simple and clear, there ought not to be any difficulty in ascertaining their meaning. The meaning of the words "suit thereon" is fairly clear to my mind. They mean some legal proceeding or other the object of which is to enforce the claim on the basis of the negotiable instrument. The proceeding need not be actually registered in the Court as an original suit or any other kind of suit, but it is clear that it must be some legal proceeding based on a negotiable instrument the object of which proceeding is to recover the money due thereon, and these words cannot, in my judgment, be extended so as to cover applications the object of which is not to recover the amount due on the instrument, but to get relief which the Legislature has thought fit to grant to debtors of a particular description who were considered to be deserving of such relief for reasons which obviously have nothing to do with the peculiar character of negotiable instruments. The object of the new Act was to give relief to agriculturist debtors and it did not matter for the purpose of granting that relief whether the original debt was incurred under a negotiable instrument or otherwise. There is no reason to suppose that it was the intention of the new Act to make a difference in the matter of scaling down of debts in cases where the original debt was, as it were, borrowed on a negotiable instrument. It is thus clear that so far as the new Act is concerned, there is no justification for regarding a debt incurred under a promissory note in a different way from other debts, and so far as the Negotiable Instruments Act is concerned, the provisions therein do not, in my opinion, apply to applications under S. 19 of the new Act for relief of debtors. The words "suit thereon" clearly show that the proceeding intended to be denoted by these words was a proceeding initiated by some one who was entitled to sue or take legal steps to recover the money due on a negotiable instrument, that is to say, by the promisee or payee, and they cannot, in my opinion, apply to proceedings initiated by the maker or promisor for relief under a special enactment like the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. I am therefore of opinion that the view of the learned District Munsif on this point is wrong and that there is no estoppel in the way of the petitioner which prevents him from establishing that, as a matter of fact, the debt in this case was incurred in 1930; that is to say, before 1st October, 1932.

It follows from this that the petition must be allowed to this extent, namely, that the debt should be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938 and not under S. 9 thereof. The order of the Court below is amended accordingly and the lower Court is directed to amend its decree accordingly. The petitioner is entitled to have his costs in this Court and his costs of the application in the Court below from the respondent.

Petition allowed and remanded.

the Act that such right of control over a paricharaka was vested in the holder of the archaka office is inconsistent with the statutory provision in S. 43 and must therefore be treated as abrogated and of no effect to that extent. The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal involves a consideration of the effect of a decree in a suit of 1896 wherein the holder of the archaka office in the suit temple obtained a declaration that he was entitled both to the office of archaka and paricharaka and to appoint fit and proper persons to the office of paricharaka, and to dismiss them and generally control the paricharaka so appointed in the temple during his term. By virtue of this decree the first respondent (the archaka) appointed an individual as paricharaka. The appellants, trustees, were dissatisfied with the conduct of this paricharaka and ejected him from office. Thereupon the first respondent brought an application, claiming that the appellants should be punished for disobedience to the decree of 1896. When the application was actually heard, the only relief claimed actually was a recognition of the first respondent's right under the decree and costs. Both the Courts below have held that by virtue of the decree of 1896 the archaka is solely entitled to appoint, control and dismiss the person who performs the functions of paricharaka.

In appeal it was contended that even under the terms of the decree this sole right was not vested in the archaka but that the general powers of the trustee enabled the trustee also to exercise disciplinary control. I cannot accept this contention. The decree seems to me to be perfectly plain as conferring the right of appointment, dismissal and control solely on the archaka.

It remains, however, to consider whether this decree is in full force and effect, having regard to subsequent judicial and statutory changes. In a suit of 1912 there was a scheme framed for the temple whereunder powers of appointment of non-mirasi servants and punishment of mirasi servants were vested in the additional trustee. This scheme appears to have been referred to in the proceedings in the Court below but the actual instrument was not exhibited. It is not, however, necessary to go in detail into the effect of the scheme decree, for there has been a subsequent statutory enactment which has substantially the same effect. S. 43 of the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act provides that:

"All office-holders and servants attached to a temple or in receipt of any emolument or perquisite from the temple shall be under the orders and control of the trustee; and the trustee may fine, suspend, remove or dismiss any of them for breach of trust, etc."

S. 79 of the same Act provides that:

"Save as otherwise expressly provided in or under this Act, nothing herein contained shall affect any established usage of a mutt or temple, etc."

It is argued that S. 79 has the effect of saving this decree of 1896 which is not expressly affected by any provision of the Act. I cannot accept this contention. It seems to me that the terms of S. 43 contain an express provision vesting solely in the trustee a power of disciplinary control which is entirely inconsistent with, and abrogatory of, the power given under the decree. It is argued that the paricharaka is not an office-holder but a mere deputy for the archaka in whom the paricharaka office is vested. This argument seems to me to ignore the facts. The person who actually performs the functions of the paricharaka office is the person who has been ejected from office by the appellants. It is true that he was admitted into the office owing to the appointment by the first respondent. But having been so appointed, so long as he performs the functions of the paricharaka office, it being certainly an office attached to the temple, he is an office-holder attached to the temple and by virtue of S. 43 of the Act the power of punishment and dismissal in respect of that office-holder vests in the trustee. It cannot, I think, be contended that the inconsistent power of control based on the decree of 1896 can any longer have force in view of the express statutory provision under S. 43 of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. In this view I allow the appeal and dismiss the execution petition with costs throughout as against the first respondent here.

Mortgage—Want of due proof of execution—Unsustainability of decree on mortgage—If money decree can be passed on the personal covenant in the document.

Where a mortgage-deed has not been proved to be duly executed and a decree on the mortgage cannot be sustained it is open to the Court to pass a money decree on the strength of a personal covenant contained in the document.

Rao, J.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the learned District Judge of West Godavari in a suit instituted on a mortgage executed by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the plaintiff. The second defendant is the son-in-law of the first defendant. The property mortgaged is a house in Ellore. It is the case of the plaintiff that the property solely belongs to the first defendant. It is the case of the first defendant that the property belonged to her husband. It is not necessary to determine that question. The second defendant admitted the claim. The main defence of the first defendant was that the mortgage was not executed by her, that she was an ignorant and illiterate woman and the second defendant was in a position to dominate her and the suit document was vitiated by fraud and undue influence. The learned Judge on a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the first defendant had not made out the case of fraud and undue influence. He found in favour of the plaintiff in regard to the execution of the mortgage and gave a decree for the amount claimed. This appeal is by the first defendant.

Koda Nayakamma
v.
Venkayya.
Venkata-

Rao, J.

In appeal the main point urged before us is that the mortgage is unenforceable because the plaintiff failed to prove due execution of the suit document. The contention is that under S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act a mortgage of the description sued on must be signed not only by the mortgagor but must be attested by two attesting witnesses in the presence of the executant and there is no proof of such a valid attestation. When a defendant denies execution of the mortgage alleged to have been executed by him, it is incumbent on the mortgagee, to prove due execution of the same, that is, execution in accordance with law. He must prove that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of two attesting witnesses who must have seen the executant sign the document or received an acknowledgment from him of his having signed the document and each one of the attestors must have signed the document in the presence of the executant. The mortgage-deed in this case purports to be attested by two witnesses, P. W. 1 and one Perimella Venkatasubba Rao. Only one attesting witness has been called, that is, P. W. 1. He has deposed that he saw the first defendant put her thumb impression on the document but he does not depose that he signed it in her presence. He did not say anything about the other attesting witness signing it. In order to supply this lacuna Mr. Ramachandra Rao on behalf of the mortgagee sought in aid the deposition of P. W. 2, the writer of the document, one Turimella Suryanarayana. He contends that a writer can be an attesting witness. Whether a writer can be an attesting witness depends on the circumstances of each case. Assuming the writer can be treated as an attesting witness, the one essential element of attestation is wanting in this case. The writer does not depose that he signed the document in the presence of the executant. Mr. Ramachandra Rao submits that, having regard to the circumstances of this case, it is open to us to presume that P. W. 1 and the writer must have affixed their signatures in the presence of the executant. So far as P. W. 1 is concerned it seems to us to be very doubtful whether he was actually present at the time when the first defendant put her

Venkata-
ramana

thumb impression. A suggestion was made in the cross-examination of P. W. 1 that he did not attest the document in the residence of the plaintiff but elsewhere. In the cross-examination of P. W. 2 it was elicited that when the document was being written P. W. 1 was not there but the second defendant brought P. W. 1 as he was going along the road to attest the document. The evidence as to the presence of P. W. 1 at the time of execution is unsatisfactory. With regard to P. W. 2, on an examination of the document it will be seen that he does not sign the document as a writer but there is a statement that the writing of the document is of Turimella Suryanarayana. It cannot be said that that statement amounts to attestation within the meaning of the law. The statement indicates that it was not intended that he should sign as an attesting witness. But even assuming as we have said that he intended to sign that document as an attesting witness, he does not depose that he wrote the said statement in the presence of the first defendant and all that he says is that the first defendant was present when he was writing Ex. A. On the evidence we are not inclined to presume that all the attesting witnesses including the writer were present at the time when the first defendant put her thumb impression and that all persons being at the same place it would have been possible for the first defendant to witness the signature by the attesting witnesses and the writer. We are therefore reluctantly forced to come to the conclusion that the mortgage-deed has not been duly proved to be executed by the first defendant and a decree on the mortgage cannot be sustained and must be set aside. But Mr. Ramachandra Rao contends that there is a personal covenant in the document and on the strength of that personal covenant it is open to us to pass a money decree in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed. This can be done. (Vide *Kunhu Moidin v. Madhava Menon*1.) Therefore, while we set aside the mortgage decree as passed by the lower Court, we pass a decree against the defendants for the amount claimed in the plaint with interest at the contract rate up to date of plaint and at 6 per cent. from date of plaint.

As far as costs are concerned as this point was not specifically raised in the Court below the proper order we should pass is to direct the parties to bear their costs in this appeal but the plaintiff will have his costs in the Court below as decreed.

Both the defendants claim they are agriculturists and they are entitled to get relief under the Agriculturists Relief Act. The petitions filed by them will be sent down to the lower Court for an enquiry into the question whether the defendants are agriculturists; and if they are found to be agriculturists, the lower Court will give them relief under the Act and the decree we have passed against them will be subject to the relief they will get on the said petitions. It is open to the plaintiff to oppose the said petitions and raise all objections which are open to him.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 66-A (2)—Application under S. 66 (3) on refusal by Commissioner of application under S. 66 (2) read with S. 33—Reference to Full Bench—Latter holding order prejudicial—Order under S. 66 (3) directing reference—Appeal to Privy Council—Application for leave—Competency—Jurisdiction of High Court to grant certificate—Letters Patent (Madras), cls. 39 and 40.

The Commissioner of Income-tax having refused to state a case under S. 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act read with S. 33, on a question arising under S. 25 (3), the assessee applied to the High Court under S. 66 (3). The High Court, feeling some doubt as to the correctness of a prior decision relied on by the Commissioner, made a reference to a Full Bench of five Judges, who held that the prior decision was wrong, and that an order refusing to interfere with a prejudicial order was itself prejudicial. The High Court, on receipt of this answer of the Full Bench, directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on the point of law involved. The Commissioner then applied for a certificate permitting an appeal to the Privy Council.

Held, (1) that High Court had no jurisdiction to grant a certificate of appeal under S. 66-A (2) of the Income-tax Act;

(2) that an appeal did not lie under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated and referred to the Court under the Act, since the decision was merely advisory, and, therefore, was not a final judgment, decree or order within the meaning of the clause;

The Court delivered the following

Leach, C.J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—This is an application for a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of this Court in an income-tax matter. The respondent has taken the preliminary objection that this Court has no power to grant a certificate in this case.

The respondent applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on a question arising under S. 25 (3) of the Income-tax Act. The Commissioner, relying on the decision of this Court in *Venkatachalam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*², refused to state a case on the ground that the order was not prejudicial within the meaning of S. 66 (2) read with S. 33. In *Venkatachalam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*², an application was filed in the office of the Income-tax Officer for a refund of income-tax under the provisions of S. 48 of the Act. The application was rejected and the Commissioner refused to interfere by an order under S. 33. The applicant then applied to this Court under S. 66 (3). As the order of the Commissioner was not one enhancing the assessment and as it was considered that it was not "prejudicial" to the petitioner the Court held that the application by him to the Commissioner under S. 66 (2) was incompetent. As some doubt was felt as to the correctness of this decision when the case out of which the present application arises came before the Court a reference was made to a Full Bench of five Judges, and the answer given to the reference was that an order refusing to interfere with a prejudicial order was itself prejudicial.

2. (1934) 68 M.L.J. 227: I.L.R. 58 Mad. 367 (F.B.).

Consequently it was held that *Venkatachalam v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹, had been wrongly decided. On receipt of the answer given by the Full Bench to the question referred the Bench dealing with the petition directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on the point of law involved. The Commissioner of Income-tax desires to challenge the correctness of the decision of the Full Bench in an appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Leach, C.J.

S. 66-A (2) provides that an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any judgment of the High Court delivered on a reference made under S. 66 in a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for appeal. Mr. Patanjali Sastri, on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax, concedes that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under S. 66-A (2), but says that it has power to do so under cl. 40 of the Letters Patent. Cl. 40 has to be read in conjunction with cl. 39. Cl. 39 gives a right of appeal to the Privy Council in a matter not being of criminal jurisdiction, from a final judgment, decree or order made on appeal and from a final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the High Court or of a Division Court from which an appeal does not lie to the High Court under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Then follows a proviso to the same effect as the provisions of Ss. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Cl. 40 provides that the Court, at its discretion, may grant leave to appeal from a preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree or order, in a proceeding contemplated by cl. 39, subject to the same rules, regulations and limitations which apply to appeals from final judgments, decrees or orders.

In the case of *Tata Iron and Steel Company, Limited v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay*², the Judicial Committee held that an appeal did not lie under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court (which corresponds to cl. 39 of the Letters Patent of this Court) from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated and referred to the Court by the Income-tax Act, 1918, since the decision was merely advisory, and therefore was not a final judgment, decree or order within the meaning of the clause. In that case it was not argued that the decision was an interlocutory judgment, order or decree within the meaning of cl. 40, but the argument is advanced here. It is said that the judgment of this Court in the Full Bench reference constitutes an interlocutory judgment within the meaning of that clause and that the order directing the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case based on the judgment of the Full Bench is also within the clause. In my opinion these contentions cannot be maintained. If there is no appeal from a final order in an income-tax matter, apart, of course, from the appeal now given under S. 66-A (2), it is difficult to understand how there can be an appeal from an interlocutory order in such a matter. I regard the direction which was given to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case as being an interlocutory order in a matter in which the Court was required to act in an advisory capacity and the reference to the Full Bench formed part of the interlocutory proceedings. *Tata Iron and Steel Company, Limited v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay*¹ is final on the question whether there is an appeal when the Court is acting merely in an advisory capacity under the Income-tax Act and it covers the present case.

The opinion which I have expressed receives support from the decisions in *E. M. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax*² and *Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi*³ and Mr. Patanjali Sastri admits that this Court has followed the decision in *E. M. Chettyar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax*² in an unreported case. There is a decision of the Lahore High Court—*Feroze Shah v. Commissioner of Income-tax*⁴—which conflicts with the decisions I have just mentioned, but it is not necessary to discuss it because we are bound by the decision of this Court.

For these reasons I would hold that the objection taken by the respondent is well-founded and that as the case now stands this Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate. The respondent is entitled to the usual costs, Rs. 100.

Gentle, J.

Gentle, J.—I agree and wish to add a few words. It is conceded that under S. 66-A (2) of the Income tax Act there is no authority for this Court to grant a certificate in this matter

2. (1930) I.L.R. 8 Rang. 435.

3. (1927) 2 I.T.R. 439.

4. (1931) I.L.R. 12 Lah. 166 (F.B.).

permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council, and the application is really based upon the provisions of cl. 40 of the Letters Patent. This clause does provide an appeal from a preliminary or interlocutory decision "as aforesaid." "As aforesaid", it is conceded by Mr. Patanjali Sastri refers to the proceedings contemplated by cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. In my opinion this matter is not a final judgment, decree or order within the contemplation of cl. 39. Since it has been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *Tata Iron and Steel Company, Limited v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay*¹, that there is no appeal under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent from a decision of the High Court in an income-tax matter it must follow that there can be no appeal and no authority for this Court to grant a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of cl. 40 of the Letters Patent. For these reasons I agree with the views expressed by my Lord the Chief Justice that this application should be dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182 (5)—Final order—Meaning of—Order to remedy defect—Whether 'step in aid' of execution.

The wording in Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act 'the date of the final order, passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court' means the last final order. It cannot mean merely last in point of time. That article does not seem to provide for the case where an order is passed by the Court on a defective application. An application which does not conform to the requirements of O. 21, rr. 11 to 14 and which for that reason has to be kept in abeyance, if the judge so wishes, to permit the defect to be remedied, is not an application made in accordance with law. Even, therefore, if the direction allowing time for the remedy of the defect is regarded as an 'order' of the Court, it would not be an order passed on an application made in accordance with law.

Burn, J.

JUDGMENTS. Burn, J.—The only point in this appeal is one of limitation. The appellant's father got a decree in O. S. No. 157 of 1924 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Trichinopoly on the 29th of June, 1925. The appellant is his adopted son. He presented his petition in execution (E. P. No. 216 of 1936) on the 27th of June, 1936, and the learned Subordinate Judge has held that it was barred by limitation on the ground that it was not presented within three years after the final order passed on a previous application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution—Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act.

The execution petition presented on the 27th of June, 1936, is the fifth of the execution petitions presented by this decree-holder. The first was filed on the 3rd of November, 1927, praying for arrest of the defendant; it was dismissed on the 7th of January, 1928, as the judgment-debtor was not found for arrest. The second execution petition was presented on the 3rd of November, 1930. This was returned on the 4th of November, 1930, with an endorsement requesting the petitioner to show how he was entitled to attach a sum of money in deposit in O. S. No. 6 of 1925. After two extensions of time had been given, learned Counsel for the petitioner re-presented this petition on the 24th November, 1930, with an explanation. The petition was then returned on the 26th of November, 1930, with an endorsement that the permission of the Court must be obtained to proceed against the properties in the hands of the Receiver appointed by the Court. Two weeks' time was allowed for this. This endorsement was not complied with. The next application was filed on the 3rd of March, 1931 and the second E. P. was 'filed' along with it with the remark:

"On 3rd November, 1930, petition was put in, but it was returned. It was not re-presented, it is filed herewith."

On this petition, on the 5th of March, the lower Court again required the petitioner to obtain the permission of the Court to proceed against the properties in the hands of the receiver appointed by the Court in O. S. No. 6 of 1925 and allowed two weeks' time for complying with this. After two extensions, this was re-presented on the 6th of April with an application for permission to proceed against the receiver. It was again returned by the lower Court on the 7th of April with a requisition that the description of property sought to be attached should be amplified and that the extent and Survey Numbers should be given. One week's time was allowed for this. On the 15th of April, the petitioner's pleader prayed for 15 days' time to obtain the necessary extracts from the Survey registers. On the 25th of June, 15 days' further time was prayed for and granted by the Subordinate Judge in his order dated the 30th of June, 1931. The requisition was however not complied with and this petition did not come back to the Court until the 30th of June, 1934, when the fourth E. P. was filed. In that, as in the third, the petitioner stated that he had put in previous execution petitions on the 3rd of November, 1930, and the 3rd of March, 1931, but they had been returned to him and therefore he said, they were presented along with the fourth. This was returned on the 3rd of July, 1934, with an endorsement requiring the petitioner firstly to file an affidavit with regard to the legal representatives of the decree-holder (this petition was presented by the present appellant the adopted son of the original decree-holder); secondly, to obtain the consent of the vakil who had appeared in the prior execution proceedings; thirdly, to put in a guardian petition for the minor legal representatives of the judgment-debtor; and fourthly, to produce the Revenue extracts which had already been called for on the previous two execution petitions. The petitioner did not comply with these requisitions but appears to have applied for further time, for, on the 18th July, 1934, the lower Court has endorsed, "Time granted till 9th August, 1934." The petitioner having taken this petition back, nothing more was heard of it until the 27th of June, 1936, when he presented E. P. No. 216 of 1936. He then produced the second, third and fourth petitions with an endorsement on each of them in these words:

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that none of the orders passed on the second, third and fourth execution petitions can be considered to be a “final” order within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. The last final order on an execution petition is dated the 7th of January, 1928, and the execution petition presented on 27th of June, 1936, is long out of time.

Hence this appeal by the decree-holder. His contention is that his E. P. No. 216 of 1936 is not barred by limitation because it was presented within three years from the 30th of June, 1934, when the fourth E. P. was finally returned to him; the fourth E. P. was presented within three years of the 30th June, 1931, when the third E.P. was returned to him, and the third E.P. was presented within three years of the 26th of November, 1930, when the second E.P. was finally returned to him. The second E.P. was presented on the 3rd of November, 1930, within three years of the 7th of January, 1928, on which date the first E.P. had been dismissed.

The question is: what is the meaning of the words “final order” in Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act? Learned Counsel for the appellant contends that it means simply the last order in point of time. He relies on the decision of Mr. Justice Pandrang Row in *Mottaya Padayachi v. Rajagopalan*¹ and the decision of Mr. Justice Stodart in C. R. P. No. 682 of 1933 reported in the same page. On the other hand, learned Counsel for the appellant recognises that there are two decisions of Division Benches of this Court subsequent to these decisions of single judges in which it has been held that ‘final’ does not mean merely last in point of time. These are the cases of *Kesavuloo v. Official Receiver, West Tanjore*² and *Muthu Rama Reddi v. Motilal Daga*³. There is also a decision of my own sitting singly, reported in *Municipal Council, Tanjore v. Sundaresan*⁴. In the case of *Kesavuloo v. Official Receiver, West Tanjore*², Venkatasubba Rao and Cornish, JJ., have shown that ‘final’ in

2. (1936) 71 M.L.J. 336.

4. (1939) 1 M.L.J. 87.

Art. 182 (5) cannot be taken as meaning merely last in point of time. Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao points out that the word 'final' occurs not only in cl. (5) of Art. 182 but also in cls. (2) and (6) and the meaning of the word 'final' in cl. (2) has been considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Batuk Nath v. Munni Deit and *Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal*¹. The latter case, in my opinion, is very much in point. Art. 182 (2) provides that the three year period of limitation for execution of a decree shall run, when there has been an appeal, from:

"The date of the final decree or order of the appellate Court. . . ."

In the first of the cases before the Privy Council, an appeal was preferred to the Privy Council and it was dismissed for want of prosecution under r. 5 of the Order in Council of 1853. It was contended on behalf of the assignee-decree-holder that the date on which the appeal had been dismissed by the Privy Council was the date of the final decree or order of the appellate Court, and that the decree could be executed within three years from that date. This contention was disallowed by their Lordships. They held that in such case, there was no final order of the Privy Council within the meaning of Art. 179 (2) as it was then, corresponding now to Art. 182 (2). In the latter case again it was contended that the date of the dismissal by the Privy Council was the date of the final order or decree. Lord Moulton observed that:

"The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised authoritatively that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that therefore he was in the same position as if he had not appealed at all."

In my opinion, this is the test to be applied in cases like the present. If an execution petition is returned to the decree-holder for some amendment, it is his duty to re-present it within the time allowed, or to get an extension of the time allowed, or to show cause why he should not comply with the requisition, or to pursue the matter in some way until he gets what can be properly described as a final order upon it. If having received back his execution petition, he takes no further action upon it, then he should be treated in my opinion as if he had never put in his petition at all. This is what I said in my judgment in Municipal Council,

*Tanjore v. Sundaresan*¹. It is not, in my opinion, permissible for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to re-present an execution petition returned for rectification. The proper way to deal with such a petition as that is to treat it as not having come into existence at all. In the present case, the first execution petition, as I have already said, was dismissed on the 7th of January, 1928; the second execution petition was filed on the 3rd of November, 1930, and was last returned to the petitioner on the 26th of November, 1930, requiring him to get the Court's permission to proceed against the properties in the hands of the receiver and giving him two weeks' time to do so. Now he did not bring this back until the 3rd of March, 1931, and when he brought it back, he did not comply with the requisitions; he did not pray for excusing the delay in complying with the requisitions; he did not ask that anything whatever should be done with the second execution petition; he merely filed it with the third execution petition presented on the 3rd of March, 1931. Now, on the 3rd of March, 1931, execution was barred because that was already more than three years after the 7th January, 1928, when the first execution petition had been dismissed. As I have already said, the third execution petition was dealt with in the same way as the second and therefore no judicial determination of it has been made but it is quite conceivable that if the third execution petition had been re-presented in proper time, it would have been dismissed as barred by limitation. Certainly it would have been necessary to dismiss the second execution petition as barred by limitation when it was re-presented on the 3rd March, 1931, unless the petitioner had been able to persuade the Court to excuse the delay in re-presentation. If the delay were not excused, then this petition would have had to be treated as if it had been presented for the first time on the 3rd March, 1931, and that was beyond the period of limitation. Learned Counsel has suggested that we should refer this matter to a Full Bench because Mr. Justice Pandrang Row, in spite of the decision of a Bench of this Court in *Kesavuloo v. Official Receiver, West Tanjore*², in 1936, still adhered in 1937 to his former opinion—vide *Chidambara Nadar v. Rama Nadar*³ and again in *A. K. Narasimha Aiyar v. Veerappa Chettiar*⁴. I regret I do not consider that this is a sufficient reason for referring this matter to a Full Bench. As I have already said there are two Benches which have already expressed the view that 'final' in Art. 182 (5) cannot be interpreted as being merely the last in point of time. With respect, I think those decisions are correct. 'Final' is a word which has many meanings but all of them I think involve the notion of putting an 'end' to something. It is not possible to call an order a "final order" unless it puts an end to something or other. Now, in my opinion, it is impossible to say of any of these orders of return on the second, third and fourth execution petitions that they put an end to anything. They were expressly orders requiring the petitioner to do something more in order that the Court might proceed with his execution petition. They did not contemplate the end of that execution petition at all. Learned Counsel for the appellant wishes us to say that such orders as these ought to be construed as if they contained further clauses. He says that when an execution petition is returned for amendment within 15 days it ought to be read as if it contained a statement that in default of re-presentation within 15 days, it should stand dismissed. I am not able to accept this contention. Art. 182 (5) refers expressly to "the date of the final order". It is not possible for this purpose to bring in some fictitious date of an order which has not been passed. Learned Counsel for the appellant has relied strongly upon the case of *Pitambar Jana v. Damodar Guchait*¹. But that case was before the amendment of the Act in 1927 as the ruling shows. It is therefore not applicable to this case. Learned Counsel has also referred to the decision of Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair in *Muhammad Abu Bakkar Maracair v. Ramakrishna Chettiar*². What is stated in that decision is that so long as the Court does not dismiss a petition, it must be deemed to be still pending. With respect I do not think that that principle can be applied to execution petitions of this kind where there is a period of limitation prescribed. If that view is taken, it is possible, as I have pointed out elsewhere, for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation at his will by presenting a defective execution petition, and on its return to him by refraining from re-presenting it. This course could be taken before the amendment of Art. 182 in 1927. In 1927 it was the date of an execution petition that gave the start for the period of limitation of three years. Any execution petition presented within three years of the date of the presentation of a former execution petition was in time. It was therefore possible to present an execution petition with no intention of proceeding with it, and to take no further steps upon it, for two years and 364 days and then to come in with another execution petition. Pandrang Row, J., in *Mottaya Padayachi v. Rajagopalan*¹ has expressed some views about the policy of the amending Act passed in 1927. With respect it is not quite self-evident to me that the policy underlying the amendment was to give the decree-holder more time. I would prefer to follow the views on this subject expressed by Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao in *Kesavuloo v. Official Receiver, West Tanjore*². I do not think, therefore, that there is any sufficient reason for putting this matter before a Full Bench. I am quite satisfied that the execution petitions which were returned for amendment and which were not re-presented within the proper time cannot save limitation.

The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, in my opinion, correct, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—I agree with my learned brother. I think that my decision in C. R. P. No. 682 of 1933 was wrong. In that decision I held that the expression 'final order' in Art. 182 (5) of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act must be construed as the 'last order' and that a direction of the Court that an application made to it in execution should be amended as if the amendment was never made the 'last order' on that application. On further consideration I think that such a direction is not final in the sense in which that word should be construed, namely, as putting an end to the application: and I would go further and hold that such a direction is not an order at all. It is simply an intimation to the applicant that his petition cannot be admitted and acted upon unless he supplies the Court with further particulars or observes some formality which he has omitted to observe. There are in my opinion only three ways of dealing with an application for the execution of a decree: and these are unambiguously defined in O. 21, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code. If the application conforms to the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 it must be admitted which means that it receives a serial number in the execution petition Register and comes on in the usual course in open Court for the orders of the Judge. In such a case there will be a final order which will effectively dispose of the matters raised in the application. Secondly, if the application does not comply with the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 it may be forthwith rejected. Thirdly, and this is the case now under consideration, if the application does not comply with the provisions of rr. 11 to 14, the Judge, instead of rejecting it forthwith, may allow the defect to be remedied and if necessary may grant time to enable the applicant to do this. The practice universally followed by the Courts is to embody a direction to this effect on the application itself and to return it to the party. If within the time allowed, the application is not presented nothing more is heard of it. In my opinion the direction of the Court, stating that the application is defective, that the Court allows the defect to be remedied and that the Court grants time for that purpose—generally a certain number of days—is not an order at all, much less a final order. It sometimes happens that a decree-holder makes an application for the execution of a decree not with any idea of realising anything towards his decree, but in order to extend the time during which it is lawful for him to execute his decree. Such an application may be perfectly bona fide. He may know at the time that the judgment-debtor is not able to pay anything: or he may wish to give the judgment-debtor further time to pay, either at the request of the judgment-debtor himself or for a variety of other reasons. Nevertheless, in his own interests, it is necessary to present an application for the execution of the decree to the proper Court lest he should lose his remedy altogether. Since the amendment of the Limitation Act in 1927 (Act IX of 1927) the mere presentation of an execution application to the proper Court is not sufficient to extend the period of limitation. Surely enough time has now elapsed for decree-holders to realise that the law has been changed and that they must not only present an application but must see that it conforms to the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 of O. 21 and that it is admitted and finally disposed of by an order of the Court. It may occasionally happen that an application does conform to the requirements of rr. 11 to 14 but is nevertheless not admitted but is held in abeyance pending the furnishing of some further information which the Court requires but which should not properly be called for till a later stage is reached. In that case the attention of the Court may be drawn to the fact that the application is one which should be under the provisions of r. 17 admitted and disposed of in the ordinary course. Lastly I would like to say that in my opinion Art. 182 (5) of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act does not seem to provide for the case where an order is passed by the Court on a defective application. The relevant words are:

1. (1936) M.W.N. 547.

2. (1936) 71 M.L.J. 336.

"The date of the final order, passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court."

But an application which does not conform to the requirements of O. 21, rr. 11 to 14 and which for that reason has to be kept in abeyance—if the Judge so wishes—to permit the defect to be remedied, is not in my opinion an application made in accordance with law. Even therefore if the direction allowing time for the remedy of the defect is regarded as an 'order' of the Court, it would in my view not be an order passed on an application made in accordance with law. If the application on the other hand were not defective it would necessarily be admitted and a final order would be passed on it in due course. When it is defective and no order can be passed on it except an order—if order it can be called—that the defect can be remedied in a certain time, it seems to me that it falls altogether outside the provisions of Art. 182 (5).

I agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Kurikkal,

Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act (I of 1900), S. 19—Clause in a kanom demise—Landlord stipulating for full value of trees felled by tenant, when not for improvement—Clause valid—Full value payable to landlord by tenant.

Where a kanom demise contained the following clause:

"If I cut trees such as veeti, teak, jack, etc., from the parambas without obtaining the written consent of the kovilagam, I shall be answerable for the costs of such trees and shall surrender the properties irrespective of the twelve years term, if the kovilagam demands it" and the appellant claimed by virtue of this clause to recover the full value of the trees felled by the respondent, when no improvement was effected to the land by such cutting.

Held, that there is no limitation in the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act preventing the landlord and tenant to agree upon such terms of the tenancy as the clause above contains. There is nothing which contravenes the provisions of S. 19 in charging the full value of the trees.

Kels Nair v. Piyathan Mahadevi, (1923) 16 L.W. 310, followed.

Apart from there being no statutory prohibition of such a clause, it is only right that a landlord should be allowed to make a stipulation for payment of the full value when the felling is not an improvement within the meaning of the Act.

Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair, (1916) 32 M.L.J. 295: I.L.R. 40 Mad. 603 (F.B.), referred to.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Venkataramana Rao, J., dated 20th November, 1936 and passed in S. A. No. 1853 of 1931 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut in A. S. No. 200 of 1930 preferred against the decree in O. S. No. 316 of 1929, District Munsif's Court, Manjeri.

K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar and P. K. Manavikraman Raja for Appellant.

N. R. Seshu Aiyar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellant was the plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal arises. He is the owner of certain lands in Malabar and in 1923 executed a kanom demise of the lands in favour of the respondent, who executed a counter-part (kychit). The demise, which was a renewal of an earlier demise, was for the usual period of twelve years. Although this period has expired, the respondent is still in possession of the property. The suit was filed by the appellant to recover a sum of Rs. 643 from the respondent. Of this amount Rs. 37-7-7 was claimed on the ground that the appellant had been compelled to pay to Government the land revenue owing to default by the respondent. The demise provided that the land revenue should be paid by the tenant. The balance of the claim, Rs. 605-5-5, represented a claim for damages for the wrongful selling of 75 teak trees growing on the property. It is common ground that the trees

v.
Kurikkal.

had not been sown by the tenant, but had grown spontaneously. It is also common ground that the appellant's claim for compensation did not exceed the value of the trees as timber. The kanom demise contained the following clause:—

The appellant contended that by virtue of this clause he was entitled to recover the full value of the trees, there being nothing in the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act, 1899, to deprive him of this right.

The case was tried by the District Munsif of Manjeri, who found that the respondent had not defaulted in the payment of land revenue and dismissed the suit so far as this claim was concerned. He held that the appellant was entitled to compensation for the trees which the respondent had cut down, but limited the amount to Rs. 37-8-0, which represents 8 annas per tree. The appellant accepted the decision of the District Munsif so far as it concerned the claim in respect of the money paid to Government, but appealed to the Subordinate Judge of Calicut on the finding of the District Munsif that he was only entitled to compensation at the rate of 8 annas per tree. While holding that the appellant was entitled to an amount of compensation larger than that awarded by the District Munsif, the Subordinate Judge refused to accept the contention that he was entitled to the full value of the trees. He held that the appellant was entitled to Rs. 187-8-0 being a quarter of the amount claimed. In arriving at this decision the Subordinate Judge apparently had regard to the provisions of S. 10 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act. The appellant then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Venkataramana Rao, J., who refused to interfere with the decree of the Subordinate Court. The learned Judge considered that the provision in the kanom demise for the payment of the full value of the trees was penal and contrary to S. 19 of the Act. In his opinion the appellant was only entitled to “reasonable” compensation and the amount awarded by the Subordinate Judge was reasonable.

The question which falls for decision is whether the Act precludes a landlord and a tenant from agreeing that the tenant shall pay full compensation when he fells trees spontaneously grown during the tenancy and the felling does not constitute an improvement to the estate. The scheme of the Act is to provide for compensation being paid to a tenant for improvements when he is required to quit the land held by him. The main sections relating to the payment of compensation are Ss. 9, 10, 13 and 19. S. 19 relates to an improvement producing an increase in the value of the annual net produce. When the improvement is not an improvement to which S. 13 applies and has caused an increase in the value of the annual net produce of the holding, the Court shall determine, as nearly as may be, the average net money value of the increase and the number of years during which the increase may reasonably be expected to continue, and shall then ascertain the present value "at 6 per cent. of an annuity equal to such money value for such number of years", and shall also determine the cost of making the improvement. If the present value of the annuity does not exceed the cost of making the improvement, the present value shall be the compensation to be awarded. If the present value of the annuity exceeds the cost of making the improvement, the compensation to be awarded shall be the cost together with one half of the excess. S. 10 deals with the case where the improvement is not an improvement within the meaning of S. 9, but consists of timber trees or other useful trees or plants spontaneously grown during the period of the tenancy or sown or planted by the tenant, or any of the other persons mentioned in S. 5. Where the improvement is of the nature contemplated by S. 10 the compensation to be awarded shall be three-fourths of the sum which the trees or plants might reasonably be expected to realise, if sold by public auction to be cut and carried away. Therefore, under this section if at the end of the tenancy there are trees which have been spontaneously grown or sown by the tenant the tenant gets three-fourths of the value of such trees as timber and the landlord one-fourth. By virtue of S. 13 when the improvement consists in the protection and maintenance of timber or fruit trees or of other useful trees or plants not sown or planted by the tenant or of such trees or plants spontaneously grown prior to the commencement of the tenancy, the compensation to be awarded shall be the proper cost of the protection and maintenance. S. 19 says that nothing in any contract made after the first day of January, 1886, shall take away or limit the right of a tenant to make improvements and to claim compensation for them in accordance with the provisions of the Act. As I have already indicated the learned Judge in holding that the appellant was not entitled to the full value of the timber felled by the respondent relied on this section. I fail, however, to see how S. 19 can apply to a case like the present one. The section merely prevents a tenant from entering into a contract which takes away or limits his right to make improvements and on the termination of the tenancy to claim compensation for them in accordance with the Act. When the tenant is required to quit, his landlord must pay him three-quarters of the value of the trees which have grown spontaneously, but that does not mean that the tenant is entitled to commit waste and the respondent here committed waste. It was the appellant's case that the respondent had deliberately cut the timber for the purpose of selling it to a timber merchant. Before giving his decision Venkataramana Rao, J., called for a finding on the question whether the felling of the trees was in itself an act of improvement within the meaning of the Act. He also called for a finding whether the felling was for the purpose of building farm houses or making any other improvements. The Subordinate Judge recorded evidence and answered the questions in the negative. It was not necessary for him to hold that the respondent had cut down the trees for the purpose of selling the timber for his own benefit and confined his findings to the wording of the issues framed by Venkataramana Rao, J. Before us the learned advocate for the respondent conceded that the trees were felled and that the timber was sold by the respondent for his own benefit. He, however, contended that the respondent was entitled in law to do this. This argument cannot be maintained, as the landlord's right to compensation for waste committed by the tenant is left unaffected by the Act. Even if the respondent had not sold the timber his action in felling the trees would still be waste as it did not lead to an improvement to the estate.

The learned Judge in the course of his judgment, discussed at length the decision of this Court in *Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair*¹. In that case the following question was referred to a Full Bench for decision:

"Whether a provision in a Malabar lease that a tenant shall pay kuttikanom or some fee to his landlord in respect of trees cut down is contrary to the provisions of S. 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act."

The Full Bench consisted of Wallis, C.J., and Abdur Rahim, Oldfield, Srinivasa Aiyangar and Phillips, JJ. They all answered the question in the negative. By kuttikanom is meant a customary fee of eight annas per tree or some such sum as may be agreed upon. It is common ground that the word 'kuttikanom' only implies the payment of a small charge per tree felled. This case is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that S. 19 of the Act does not prevent the parties from entering into an agreement by which the tenant shall pay a small fee in the event of trees being felled by him for the purpose of making an improvement. The judgment in *Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair*¹ did not deal with the position where the felling is not for an improvement, but for the tenant's own purposes. Venkataramana Rao, J., considered that the Court dealt with the question on the footing that the felling of trees was not an improvement, but this is not so. The Court was only concerned with the case of felling of trees for the purpose of improvement and deciding whether in such a case the landlord was entitled to be paid a small fee in respect of each tree felled, notwithstanding the provisions of S. 19. The judgment does not support the judgment now under appeal.

The right of a landlord and a tenant to agree upon the terms of the tenancy can only be limited by statute. The agreement entered into by the parties in this case does not run contrary to the Transfer of Property Act or the Contract Act, and unless there is a provision in the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act which prevents the appellant from recovering from the respondent the full value of the timber felled by him the appellant is entitled to succeed. There is clearly no such limitation in the Act and therefore I hold that the appellant is entitled to the full amount of the compensation claimed by her.

I am supported in my opinion by the judgment of Ramesam, J., in Kelu Nair v. Viyathan Mahadevi a case in which the landlord was allowed the full amount claimed by him as compensation in respect of trees felled by the tenant. Ramesam, J., dealt with the case where the act of felling of trees was an act of improvement and the case where it was not. In the first case the imposition of a small kuttikanom fee would, he said, relying on the decision of the Full Bench in Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair,¹ not contravene the provisions of S. 19, but if the fee imposed was the full value of the trees it would, he said, contravene the section. In a case falling in the second category there was nothing which contravened the provisions of S. 19 in charging the full value. An examination of the record in the case decided by Ramesam, J., discloses the fact that the clause in the kanom demise there was of the same nature as the clause in this case.

Apart from there being no statutory prohibition of such a clause it is only right that a landlord should be allowed to make a stipulation for the payment of the full value when the felling is not an improvement within the meaning of the Act. If the trees were allowed to grow to maturity the landlord would be entitled to one-fourth of the value of the matured trees at the termination of the tenancy. The felling of trees before reaching maturity would clearly affect his pocket. The Court is only concerned here with the felling of trees spontaneously grown during the tenancy and my observations are limited to a case like the present one.

For the reasons indicated, I would allow the appeal and grant a decree for the full value of the timber, namely, Rs. 605-5-5, with costs here and below on this amount.

to the provisions of S. 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act."

The Full Bench consisted of Wallis, C. J., and Abdur Rahim, Oldfield, Srinivasa Aiyangar and Phillips, JJ. They all answered the question in the negative. By kuttikonam is meant a customary fee of eight annas per tree or some such sum as may be agreed upon. It is common ground that the word 'kuttikanom' only implies the payment of a small charge per tree felled. This case is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that S. 19 of the Act does not prevent the parties from entering into an agreement by which the tenant shall pay a small fee in the event of trees being felled by him for the purpose of making an improvement. The judgment in Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair did not deal with the position when the felling is not for an improvement, but for the tenant's own purposes. Venkataramana Rao, J., considered that the Court dealt with the question on the footing that the felling of trees was not an improvement, but this is not so. The Court was only concerned with the case of felling of trees for the purpose of improvement and deciding whether in such a case the landlord was entitled to be paid a small fee in respect of each tree felled, notwithstanding the provisions of S. 19. The judgment does not support the judgment now under appeal.

The right of a landlord and a tenant to agree upon the terms of the tenancy can only be limited by statute. The agreement entered into by the parties in this case does not run contrary to the Transfer of Property Act or the Contract Act, and unless there is a provision in the Malabar Compensation for Tenants Improvements Act which prevents the appellant from recovering from the respondent the full value of the timber felled by him the appellant is entitled to succeed. There is clearly no such limitation in the Act and therefore I hold that the appellant is entitled to the full amount of the compensation claimed by him.

I am supported in my opinion by the judgment of Ramesam, J., in Kelu Nair v. Viyathan Mahadevi a case in which the landlord was allowed the full amount claimed by him as compensation in respect of trees felled by the tenant. Ramesam, J., dealt with the case where the act of felling of trees was an act of improvement and the case where it was not. In the first case the imposition of a small kuttikanom fee would, he said, not contravene the provisions of S. 19, but if the fee imposed was the full value of the trees it would contravene the section, relying on the decision of the Full Bench in Rajah of Cochin v. Kittunni Nair. In a case falling in the second category there was nothing which contravened the provisions of S. 19 in charging the full value. An examination of the record in the case decided by Ramesam, J., discloses the fact that the clause in the kanom demise was of the same nature as the clause in this case.

Apart from there being no statutory prohibition of such a clause it is only right that a landlord should be allowed to make a stipulation for the payment of the full value when the felling is not an improvement within the meaning of the Act. If the trees were allowed to grow to maturity the landlord would be entitled to one-fourth of the value of the matured trees at the termination of the tenancy. The felling of trees before reaching maturity would clearly affect his pocket. The Court is only concerned here with the felling of trees spontaneously grown during the tenancy and my observations are limited to a case like the present one.

For the reasons indicated, I would allow the appeal and grant a decree for the full value of the timber, namely, Rs. 605-5-5, with costs here and below on this amount.

language in legal effect from that which it originally spoke, which changes the legal identity or character of the instrument either in its terms or the relation of the parties to it' is a material change. An alteration in the date of a bill of exchange has been stated by the corresponding section of the Bills of Exchange Act to be material. Although the Indian Act does not clearly say so, yet there is no reason to hold that what would be regarded as a material alteration in England should not be held to be so in India.

The alterations referred to in S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act refers to a deliberate alteration by a party to the instrument or by one on whom his interest had devolved and not by a stranger, particularly, when no conduct can be imputed to the party in whose interest the alteration has been effected or from which either his complicity, laches or negligence may be inferred.

Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation v. Lo Lee Shi, (1928) A.C. 181: 55 M.L.J. 627 (P.C.); Hutchins v. Scott, (1837) 2 M. & W. 809: 150 E. R. 984 and Halsbury's Laws of England, para. 287, relied on.

S. 87 would not therefore stand in the way of a plaintiff, who was a minor when the alterations were effected, in getting relief on the original cause of action. In view of the above interpretation of S. 87 it is unnecessary to order an amendment and grant relief on the basis of the consideration paid.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted on the basis of a promissory note dated the 15th October, 1928, executed by the defendant-respondent in favour of one Brojo Padhi who died shortly after its execution leaving him surviving an adopted minor son the plaintiff-appellant in this case. A sum of Rs. 10 seems to have been paid by the defendant on the 12th October, 1931. This payment was endorsed on the back of the promissory note and the endorsement was duly signed by the defendant. The suit was instituted on the 22nd October, 1934, while the plaintiff-appellant was a minor. It appears however that two dates in the promissory note were altered before the suit was brought. The first alteration was that the figure "1" in 15, that is, the date on which the promissory note was executed was altered into 2 and thus the promissory note would now read as if it was executed on the 25th October, 1928, and not on the 15th October. The second alteration was that the figure "1" in 12 was substituted by 2 and thus the endorsement by the defendant of the payment of Rs. 10 would appear to have been made on the 22nd October, 1931, and not on the 12th October, 1931, the date on which the endorsement was actually made by the defendant. The District Munsif passed a decree against the defendant as the plaintiff was held to have been unaware of these alterations but the learned District Judge accepted the appeal on the ground that having regard to the provisions of S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, it was not possible to found an action on a promissory note which was proved to have been altered in material respects. The plaintiff now appeals.

In support of his appeal the first contention raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that the alteration in the promissory note was not material in character and the motive with which the alteration might have been made was wholly irrelevant. His second contention is that even if the alterations are held to be material his client who was, as stated above, a minor at the time when the suit was instituted, did not know anything about them and could not in the absence of any conduct of his, either fraudulent or negligent, be held to be debarred from suing on the basis of the promissory note—particularly when the dates of the promissory note and of the endorsement of payment were correctly stated in the plaint and no advantage was attempted to have been taken on account of these alterations. The third contention raised on behalf of the appellant is that even if his first two contentions do not prevail, he should at all events be allowed to fall back on the original consideration as although the promissory note might have to be declared void and unenforceable on account of the alterations, yet it does not become inadmissible in evidence and the debt could not in any case be held to have been extinguished. It was admitted that the suit, as framed, was not based on the original consideration but this defect should be, it was alleged, cured by a formal amendment which might be allowed by the Court even at this stage. Lastly it was urged that a decree should have been passed against the defendant on the admission made by him as a witness to the effect that the money in regard to the promissory note in suit had not been paid and was still outstanding.

The first question to decide is whether the alterations made in the promissory note were material in character?

Since it was conceded on behalf of the respondent that the suit could have been instituted, on account of the plaintiff's minority, not only on the date on which it was actually brought but even later, it was vehemently argued on behalf of the appellant that the alterations could not be regarded as material. I am not however impressed by this argument although it must be admitted that the motive of the person making the alterations is to a large extent immaterial. In order to decide the material character of the alteration, one will have to obviously confine himself to the alteration and the effect it is shown to have produced on the document itself. If the legal identity or the character of the instrument have been affected or if the liability has been attempted to have been extended by the alteration, it must be held to be material and this would be so irrespective of the fact whether the alteration is to the prejudice of the promisor or the executant of the instrument or not. The reason behind the rule is based on sound sense and is intended to prevent persons from tampering with valuable securities under the penalty of not being able to found their claims on them if the alterations are found to be material. If the integrity of a contract has been broken and its identity changed either by a party to the contract or by one who is entitled to sue on it or with their connivance and possibly even when their negligence has contributed to the alteration, the instrument incorporating such a contract must be held to have been vitiated. This rule can be deduced from a number of cases cited at the bar. It is unnecessary however to refer to all of them and it would be sufficient to refer to three English and one old Calcutta case on which reliance was placed by learned Counsel for the respondent. (See *Davidson v. Cooper*¹, Gardner v. Walsh, Master v. Millers and *Gogun Chunder Ghose v. Dhuronidhur Mundul*².) It was held in the first case (*Davidson v. Cooper*¹) that a party who has the custody of an instrument made for his benefit, is bound to preserve it in its original state, and that any material alteration will vitiate the instrument." Lord Denman, C.J., in delivering his judgment laid down as a test for determining the materiality of the alteration whether the addition gave a different legal character to the writing and whether it would change the nature of the relation of the parties towards each other and their remedies upon it. In the second case the promissory note had been altered by adding another party to it. The alteration was apparently of no disadvantage to the defendant and yet the promissory note was held to be invalid as against the defendant. Lord Campbell, C.J., observed:

"We conceive that the defendant is discharged from his liability if the altered instrument, supposing it to be genuine, would operate differently from the original instrument, whether the alteration be or be not to his prejudice."

The same rule was stated in Master v. Miller. A study of these cases would show that the rule has now been well established that any alteration or change in an instrument which "causes it to speak a different language in legal effect from that which it originally spoke, which changes the legal identity or character of the instrument either in its terms or the relation of the parties to it" is a material change. It might not be out of place to mention that an alteration in the date of a bill of exchange has been stated by the corresponding section of the Bills of Exchange Act to be material. Although the Indian Act does not clearly say so yet I do not think that there is any reason to hold that what would be regarded as a material alteration in England should not be held to be so in India. I am, for the above reasons, of opinion that the alteration of dates was a material alteration.

As for the second contention it was conceded on behalf of the respondent that the alterations in the promissory note were not made either by the minor or by his adoptive father who had died shortly after the execution of the promissory note in his favour. There was no suggestion that they were made by or with the knowledge of his next friend either who is no other than his adoptive mother and with whom the minor was living. It was however alleged that the alterations were effected by the plaintiff's natural father who had appeared as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff. There is no evidence on the record from which it could be concluded that the promissory note was altered by him although the learned District Judge has on account of certain circumstances hazarded that guess. I have considered these circumstances carefully. They are inconclusive in my opinion and the expression of opinion by the lower appellate Court must be regarded to be in the nature of a surmise. There is no evidence on the record that these alterations were made by the plaintiff's natural father. That is why the trial Court abstained from giving a definite finding in regard to the person who had effected them. The learned District Judge refused to believe the statement made by P.W. 1 and since as a natural father he was to some extent interested in the plaintiff and he was the last person who had admitted to be in possession of the promissory note before the suit was brought, the conclusion was drawn that these must have been made by him. I have already said that it would not be safe to draw this conclusion; but even assuming this to be correct, would this be enough to debar the plaintiff from maintaining his suit? Learned Counsel for the respondent contends that this would be so and urges that the question whether these alterations were made with the knowledge of the minor plaintiff or with that of his next friend is wholly immaterial. The language of S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does, if literally construed, seem to support his contention but in view of the fact that this construction would lead to most undesirable and absurd results, the question is whether one should not have a little measure of freedom in construing this section somewhat liberally. But before interpreting the language of this section in the light of certain decided cases, it is essential to ascertain whether there is anything in evidence which would show whether these alterations were made either with the knowledge or complicity of the plaintiff or even with that of his next friend. The plaintiff, as observed before, was a minor at the time when the suit was instituted and there is nothing on the record which would suggest his knowledge or complicity. The same must be said, although it is not perhaps necessary, of his adoptive mother, who was the plaintiff's next friend when the suit was instituted. Moreover there is nothing to show that they, that is, the plaintiff and his adoptive mother, were guilty of laches or negligence in permitting the promissory note to go out of their custody. The plaintiff was a minor and the next friend was an old Indian lady who would have found it difficult to look after the estate left by her deceased husband without the help of servants and persons who took an interest in their affairs. The question to decide is whether the plaintiff should be held to be debarred from suing on the basis of the promissory note which had been proved to have been materially altered although without his or even his next friend's knowledge or complicity. It must be remembered in this connection that no advantage was taken of these alterations when the suit was instituted and the dates on which the promissory note was executed or the endorsement made were correctly stated. The cause of action was also stated to have arisen on the dates when the promissory note had actually come into existence and when interest had been paid and endorsed by the defendant. It is thus clear that nothing has been done either by or on behalf of the plaintiff which would induce the Court to withhold the relief asked for on the ground that he had not come to Court with clean hands. It may be however contended that this is not a case where it is discretionary with the Court to grant or refuse the relief asked for or in other words the Court was not being asked to dismiss the suit on any equitable grounds but on account of a clear bar created by the statute. This takes me to the language employed in S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. A careful study of the words used in this section leads me to the conclusion that the obvious intention of the legislature was to render the negotiable instruments to be void which were materially altered either by the party in whose favour the document was executed or the person on whom its ownership had devolved on account of a contract or by operation of law. The Legislature intended or may be presumed to have intended to take both the parties to the instrument or their representatives in interest into consideration and was providing a penalty for the unauthorised alterations effected by one of them without the consent of the other. The section did not obviously relate to an alteration by a stranger or contemplate a consent to the alteration by both the parties but only by one of them for the act of the other. Moreover as observed by Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes at page 198 in Chapter IX, 7th Edition;

"When the language of a statute in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction leads to absurdity, hardship or injustice, presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words and even the structure of the sentence. This may be done by departing from the rules of grammar by giving unusual meaning to particular words, by altering their collocation, by rejecting them altogether, or by interpolating other words, under the influence, no doubt of an irresistible conviction that the legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify and the modifications thus made are mere corrections of careless language and really give the true meaning The rules of grammar yield readily in such cases to those of common sense."

This is however not all. When the corresponding section of the Bills of Exchange Act where the language was almost identical with S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act came up for construction before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation v. Lo Lee Shi, it was held by their Lordships that the words of the section related only to alterations effected by the will of the person by whom or under whose directions they were made and that they did not apply to a change due to a pure accident such as the document being mutilated and defaced by the wash and ironing of the garment in which it was left or by the ravages of the white ants or the seal of a deed being torn off by a child or eaten off by rats or burnt by the hot-end of a cigarette. If cases of pure accident were not found to fall within the terms of the corresponding section of the Bills of Exchange Act, is there any reason to interpret S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act in such a manner as to debar an innocent person from maintaining an action simply because the promissory note was taken away without the knowledge or consent of its owner by a stranger who made some alterations in the instrument either knavishly or foolishly. In *Hutchins v. Scott*¹, Anderson, B., remarked:—

"It is difficult to understand why an alteration by a stranger should in any case avoid the deed, why the tortious act of a third person should affect the two parties to it unless the alteration goes the length of making it doubtful what the deed originally was or what the parties meant."

The question "suppose the stranger destroyed it instead of altering it?" put by Lord Abinger during the course of the arguments in the above case discloses the view the noble Lord wastaking of the case. There is no doubt that an action would lie on a destroyed bill both at common law and under the Indian Act. The rule has been stated thus in paragraph 287 of Halsbury's Laws of England (Halsbury's edition):—

"If an alteration (by erasure, interlineation, or otherwise) is made in a material part of a deed, after its execution, by or with the consent of any party thereto or person entitled thereunder but without the consent of the party or parties liable thereunder, the deed is thereby made void. The avoidance, however, is not ab initio, or so as to nullify any conveyancing effect which the deed has already had; but only operates as from the time of such alteration, and so as to prevent the person, who has made or authorised the alteration, and those claiming under him, from putting the deed in suit to enforce against any party bound thereby, who did not consent to the alteration, any obligation, covenant or promise thereby undertaken or made (h).

A material alteration is one which varies the rights, liabilities or legal position of the parties as ascertained by the deed in its original state, or otherwise varies the legal effect of the instrument as originally expressed (i), or reduces to certainty some provision which was originally unascertained and as such void (k), or may otherwise prejudice the party bound by the deed as originally executed (l).

The effect of making such an alteration without the consent of the party bound is exactly the same as that of cancelling the deed (m). The avoidance of the deed is not retrospective, and does not re-vest or reconvey any estate or interest in property which passed by the deed (n). And the deed may be put in evidence to prove that such estate or interest so passed, or for any other purpose than to maintain an action to enforce some agreement therein contained (o)."

For the above reasons I would hold that the alteration referred to in S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act refers to a deliberate alteration by a party to the instrument or by one on whom his interest had devolved and not by a stranger particularly when no conduct can be imputed to the party in whose interest the alteration has been effected or from which either his complicity, laches or negligence may be inferred.

The third contention raised on behalf of the appellant was that he might be permitted to fall back on the original consideration. It must be remembered in this connection that the promissory note, even if my interpretation of S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act be assumed to be incorrect can only be declared to be void under S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act but does not become inadmissible in evidence as would have been the case if the document were not duly stamped. It is unnecessary to say what the effect would have been if the alteration had been made fraudulently by the plaintiff himself but in the absence of fraud it does not seem to me possible to hold that not only the note but the original debt is also destroyed. He could in my opinion fall back on the original consideration since the promissory note was a valid document and remained so for a long time after it came into existence. A subsequent alteration in the document by a stranger would not deprive the person, who had advanced the money or to whom the money had become payable subsequently, on account of the promisee's death, of his remedy to bring a suit for the money advanced to the defendant by way of loan. As already observed, it might be remembered in this connection that the dates mentioned in the plaint both of execution and in regard to the payment made by the defendant towards interest were the original dates and not those which were subsequently altered and the cause of action also was stated to have arisen on the dates on which it would have been stated if no alteration had taken place. If therefore no claim was made on behalf of the plaintiff upon the promissory note as altered, there is no reason to hold that the document would not be admissible in evidence in proof of the original right which had come into existence at the time when the money was paid. *Sutton v. Toomer*¹ may be referred to in this connection with advantage. It has been argued that since S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act appears in Chapter VII which relates to discharge from liability on notes, bills and cheques it must not be taken to have rendered the document void only but also to have discharged the liability which arose at the time when the promissory note was executed. The argument is not correct in my opinion for two reasons. First of all, the Chapter relates to discharge from liability on notes, etc., and not to discharge from liability altogether. The suggestion that after a note has been avoided on account of a fraudulent conduct of a party the party will not be entitled to sue on it may be plausible but this does not mean that the party has no right to bring a suit on the original cause of action also. Moreover in this very section the second part states that an endorser's liability would be discharged if his indorsee made an alteration. If the alteration was meant to discharge the liability of every person under the negotiable instrument, where was the necessity of referring to an indorser's liability in the second paragraph of the section. Why did not the section, it may well be asked, clearly provide that the liability of every person under the instrument would be discharged—if that was the intention of the legislature? The case decided by the Full Bench reported in *Perumal Chettiar v. Kamakshi Ammal*², on which reliance was placed on behalf of the respondent has no application to this case for the simple reason that the promissory note which had been materially altered has not been declared by law to be inadmissible in evidence. It may have become unenforceable by operation of law—this being all that could be said against it —and thus incapable of forming the basis of a suit but it would not entail the penalty of depriving the drawee or promisee or their representatives in interest from maintaining an action on the original consideration unless specifically declared to be so by the legislature. One may not be able to enforce the terms contained in the instrument but there can be no objection to the Court looking at it and granting the relief on the basis as if the document had not come into existence. The promissory note having become void, the defendant who had received an advantage under the instrument is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it. There seems to be no reason why the Court should not act in such a case on the principle embodied in S. 65 of the Indian Contract Act.

S. 87 would not therefore in my opinion stand in the plaintiff's way of getting the relief on the original cause of action. The application for amendment, made in this Court would have to be determined therefore on the ordinary principles contained in O. 6, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, and there is no reason why in the circumstances of this kind the plaintiff should not have been permitted to amend the plaint so as to fall back upon the original consideration if the second contention had not been decided in his favour. In view of the interpretation I have placed on S. 87 it is unnecessary to order the amendment and grant relief on the basis as if no promissory note had come into existence.

The third position taken upon on behalf of the appellant was that a decree should have been passed by the lower appellate Court on the admission made by the defendant. As I stated above I am not concerned in this case with what would have happened if the plaintiff had been guilty of fraud or had come into Court with unclean hands. But in this particular case nothing has been or can be said either against the plaintiff or his next friend which would show that he was not entitled to the relief when the defendant had admitted it in his statement before the Court as a witness that the debt due under the promissory note was still outstanding.

For these reasons, I set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed by him with costs in this and in the lower Courts.

Leave granted.

The form of adoption prevailing in Malabar amongst Nair community resembles the krittrima form only in this, that the adoption is based purely on secular motives and it has no religious significance. But there is no authority for the position that the adoptee in Malabar does not lose his or her rights of inheritance in the natural family, as in the krittrima form of adoption recognised in the Mithila country. A custom to that effect, if set up, must be proved and each case will have to be decided on the evidence put before the Court.

Where a member in a Malabar tarwad acquired Putravakasam properties with an intention that his wife and children should be benefited by them and gifted those properties to them and one of his daughters was adopted into another family, Seetha and Pattu were two members of a tarwad called the Machingal Pottai Veettu tarwad. The second defendant is the son of Pattu. In 1866-67 Valia Parvathi and Kunju Menon (a female and a male), two children of Seetha, were adopted by Pangi Menon Kandi Achan who was the sole remaining member in his tarwad known as Tekkai Veettu tarwad. The plaintiffs in the present suit are the descendants of Valia Parvathi through her daughter Seetha (see the Genealogical tree given in paragraph 9 of the Munsiff's judgment). The suit properties cover 20 items. Of these, items 1 to 12 are Putravakasam properties granted to Seetha, the mother of Valia Parvathi, by her husband Chathu Achan who ultimately became the Palghat Raja, items 14 to 20 belong to the Pottai Veettu tarwad. Admittedly the plaintiffs are members of the Tekkai Veettu tarwad. They, however, claim maintenance from the defendants, who are members of the Pottai Veettu tarwad on the ground that Valia Parvathi, their ancestors, though given in adoption to the Tekkai Veettu tarwad, continued to retain her original status as a member of the Pottai Veettu tarwad. They contended that in spite of the adoption the adoptees still remained members of their original family. They also contended that the adoptees and their descendants acquired, apart from status, right to the properties of Pottai Veettu tarwad on pleas such as estoppel and prescription. This latter contention was raised in issues 11 and 13 which are as follows:—

11. Have the adoptees or their descendants acquired apart from status any right to the properties of Pottai Veettu?

13. Can a right to maintenance be acquired by prescription and have the adoptees and their descendants acquired such a right to the properties of Pottai Veettu?

They also raised various other contentions which need not be considered for the purposes of this second appeal.

On the first contention which was the subject-matter of issue 9:

"What was the result of the adoption on the status of the adoptees with regard to the membership in Pottai Veettu?"

the District Munsiff found that the adoptees lost their status as members in Pottai Veettu tarwad as a result of their adoption. On issue 11 the learned District Munsiff recorded the following finding:—

"I therefore held that the defendants are now estopped from denying that plaintiffs have all the rights which the members of Pottai Veettu have over the properties thereof. As Valia Parvathi had for over the statutory period dealt with the properties of Pottai Veettu as a member would have done, she and her descendants through her have acquired by prescription all the right which they would have had if they had (not?) been adopted. Both by prescription and by estoppel the rights of plaintiffs have been perfected."

Seetha
Neithyar
v.
Kalu Menon

In view of the findings on issues 11 and 12 no separate finding was recorded on issue 13. As a result of the findings on issues 11, 12 and 13 a decree for maintenance was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. The finding on issue 11 was based on a consideration of the evidence which related, amongst other things, mainly to the dealings of the properties of the Pottai Veettu tarwad by Valia Parvathi after the adoption.

In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the District Munsiff in his view that Valia Parvathi and Kunju Menon, the adoptees, lost their status as members of the Pottai Veettu tarwad as a result of their adoption by the Tekkai Veettu tarwad. On the second point, that is, the point covered mainly by issues 11 and 13, he differed from the District Munsiff and in the result the Munsiff's decision was set aside and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. But it must be mentioned that with regard to items 1 to 12 the learned Subordinate Judge held the plaintiffs have a joint right with some of the defendants but that that right cannot be enforced in this suit.

In second appeal, Mr. Variar's first argument on behalf of the appellants is that in spite of the adoption of Valia Parvathi and Kunju Menon by the Tekkai Veettu tarwad, they still retained their status as members in their natural family. On this point the main argument is that adoption under the Malabar Law amongst the Nairs, to which community the parties belong, is in the krittrima form, and as according to this form of adoption the adoptee does not lose his rights of inheritance in his natural family, Valia Parvathi and her descendants are still members of the Pottai Veettu tarwad. According to Moore's Malabar Law there are said to be three kinds of adoption in use in Malabar: (1) adoption by ten hands. This form of adoption is very rarely used except in Brahmin families. It is probably almost identical with the Hindu form of adoption. (2) Adoption by chammata, that is, by burning a pan of sacred grass. (3) Adoption by taking into the family. The last is the form commonly adopted by Brahmin widows and Sudras for the purpose of perpetuating the family when it is in danger of becoming extinguished. The learned author says:

"Whatever religious motive may be attached to the first two modes of

Seetha
Neithyar
v.
Ketu Menon.

adoption the third mode appears to be based on entirely secular motives and to be closely akin to the krittrima form of adoption which is still in force in the Mithila country."

To the same effect is the law stated in his Manual of Malabar Law by Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar. Arguments have proceeded on the assumption that the adoption in the present case was of the third type. Both these writers say that this kind of adoption is akin to the krittrima form of adoption, but they do not say that, in consequence, as in the krittrima form of adoption recognised in the Mithila country, the adoptee in Malabar does not lose her rights in the natural family. It is argued that this conclusion should be accepted by analogy. When they say that this form of adoption is akin to the krittrima form of adoption the two text writers refer to Mayne's Hindu Law. Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar refers to Ss. 182 to 187 and Mr. Moore refers to Ss. 184 to 190 in the 5th edition. In the latest edition of Mayne, 9th edition, pages 279 to 281 we find the following statement in S. 208:

"The systems of adoption in force in Malabar vary according as the adoptive family is governed by the Marumakkathayam or by the Makkathayam rule of inheritance."

In S. 209 it is stated that:

"Among families which trace descent by sons, three systems of adoption prevail. The first strongly resembled the krittrima."

The statement of the law contained in Mayne in the latest edition does not apparently support the statement of the above-mentioned two text writers that the third form of adoption is akin to krittrima form. What the statement of Mayne was in his 5th edition I was not able to gather as that edition is not available for reference. In the well-known case of Vasudevan v. Secretary of State for India, the learned Judges commenting on the evidence of the witnesses examined in that case point out that the appointment of an heir to an illom by a Nambudri widow is called krittrima adoption in contradistinction to pattu kayal dattu which is the regular and religious adoption prevalent among the Nambudris. (See page 177.) At page 174 they state that the krittrima form of adoption does not sever the adoptee from his natural family and that "this is precisely the effect of appointing a person as heir." When it is said that the krittrima form of adoption prevails amongst the Nairs, does it necessarily mean that the incident that the adoptees does not lose his rights of inheritance in his natural family, which is the consequence of that form of adoption in the Mithila country, should also be the consequence of the adoption in Malabar where the customary law of Marumakkathayam prevails? Their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in *Raman Menon v. Raman Menon*¹, that:

Seetha
Neithyar
Kelu Menon

"There is no sacred book or other writing having legal authority, and there is no series of decisions which can be appealed to in order to determine the circumstances under which and the consents if any subject to which the karnavan for the time being can adopt strangers to the family and thereby make them and their descendants heirs to its property."

In the same judgment their Lordships observed generally that:

"Litigation between Nayars in South Malabar has to be decided according to the laws and usages of these persons. These laws and usages are very peculiar; some of them are so well established as to be judicially noticed without proof. But others of them are still in that stage in which proof of them is required before they can be judicially recognised and enforced."

Malabar Law is essentially a customary law. In *Veluthakal Chirudevi v. Veluthakal Tarwad Karnavan*², it was observed by Sankaran Nair, J., that:

"In deciding questions as to customary law (in that case the question related to partition under Malabar law) if there are texts or series of decisions we should follow them; otherwise such a question has to be decided upon evidence."

It is admitted that there are no texts explaining the rights of adoptees under the Malabar law. The same in the case with regard to decisions also. As mentioned in Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar's book at page 31:

"As to whether as a rule the persons adopted lose their rights in their natural family or only gain rights in the family into which they are adopted without losing any of those rights, has not yet been finally decided."

Then the learned author gives the following summary of the decisions of this Court having a bearing on the point. In *Andale alias Shekhara Pisharodi v. Secretary of State*³, a case relating to Pisharodies, it was contended that the latter was the effect, but their Lordships held that such a custom was not made out. In S. A. No. 1555 of 1894, the District Judge of South Kanara sent down an issue, to be tried by the Court of first instance whether according to the rule of law and custom in Aliyasanthana families if a woman is adopted she retains her old rights or loses them. The Sub-Judge Mr. Chandu Menon found that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff to show that women of the caste of the parties adopted into other families did not lose their rights in their natural families, was good so far as it went but was insufficient to establish a custom. He found however that the conduct of the parties and the documentary evidence showed that in that particular case the adoption did not sever the status, and that as understood by all the parties from the beginning the adoption conferred on her a status in the new family in addition to that which she had at the time and not in supersession of it. In second appeal in giving effect to this conclusion their Lordships repel the argument of the appellants so far as it rested on the analogy of the Hindu Law by referring to *Chandu v. Subba*¹, and observing that even under that law there is the krittrima form of adoption in which the adopter retains his original status to which they liken the adoption in question. Having regard to the facts of the case the decision of the Travancore High Court in *Velayudam Eswaran v. Ramaswami Iyer*², cannot I think be extended to cases of adoption arising in Malabar; at any rate the learned Judges do not purport to base the decision on considerations applicable generally to Malabar as a whole. In the absence of decisions or texts bearing on the point, it is not safe to decide on the mere ground that the adoption in question has been compared to the krittrima form, that the adopted persons do not lose their rights of inheritance in their natural family. When the text writers say that the form of adoption resembles the krittrima form I think what they purport to emphasise mainly is this, that the adoption is based purely on secular motives and that it has no religious significance, and nothing more. As I have said, the law applicable to the case being essentially a customary law, the question can be decided only by having recourse to evidence as to custom in the absence of texts or express decisions of this Court. In neither of the lower Courts was the question raised as to whether according to the customary law of Malabar persons adopted lose their rights in the natural family. The point was raised in the plaint and denied in the written statement. The evidence, such as it is, says the respondents' learned Counsel, does not support the plaintiff's case. However, as the question is an important one, and as the learned Counsel for the appellants says that the appellants are prepared to give evidence on the point, I think this second appeal cannot be satisfactorily decided without calling for a finding from the lower Court on the question whether, according to the form of adoption prevailing amongst the Nair community in Malabar the persons adopted lost their rights in the natural family. It is open to both parties to adduce fresh evidence on this point.

2. 7 Travancore H.C.R. 66.

Seetha
Nelthyar
v.
Kalu Menon.

The next point raised relates to the dealings of the properties by the adoptees, which it is alleged, will show that they have acquired what may shortly be described as prescriptive title to these properties, even though as a result of the adoption they may have severed their connection with their natural family; and reliance is placed on Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Maguni Devan Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu. This is the question raised in issues 11 and 13 on which the learned District Munsiff after a detailed and careful examination of the documents gave his finding in paragraph 50 of his judgment which I have already quoted. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the point in paragraph 8 of his judgment somewhat summarily. He says, after referring to the points of attack against the District Munsiff's finding:

"With regard to properties belonging to Pottai Veedu, all that the documents show is that an attempt was made to combine the two tarwads so that while Valla Parvathi would retain her exclusive right to the Tekkal Veetu properties she might also gain to have an interest in the Pottai Veetu properties. I fail to see how any estoppel can arise."

He does not deal with the question of prescriptive rights considered by the District Munsiff. This part of the plaintiff's case was considered in considerable detail by the learned District Munsiff. That the plea is not an unusual or an unimportant one is clear from the fact that in S. A. No. 1585 of 1894 Mr. Chandu Menon though he found that there was no evidence to support the custom that the adoptees did not lose their rights in their natural family, yet held that "the conduct of the parties and the documentary evidence showed that in that particular case the adoption did not sever the status" and the High Court accepted the finding. The Subordinate Judge has set aside the finding of the District Munsiff on what appears to me a very meagre consideration of the question. I would therefore ask the lower Court to submit a fresh finding on the

Neithyar
v.
Kalu Menon.

question raised in issues 11 and 13 after discussing the evidence already on record. Mr. Anantharamier on behalf of the respondents says that even if the Subordinate Judge comes to the same finding as has been arrived at by the District Munsiff, still the plaintiff cannot in law claim right to the Pottai Veetu properties on account of any such ground as estoppel or prescription. This question may be argued after the receipt of the finding. As all the evidence on this point has been already adduced, I allow no fresh evidence.

In case the lower appellate Court finds that the plaintiffs are entitled to claim maintenance, the learned Subordinate Judge will record a finding as to the rate and amount of maintenance that may be claimed by them from all the suit properties. The learned District Munsiff has given his finding on this question but the Subordinate Judge has not considered it. To avoid any further remand the lower appellate Court will also record a separate finding as to what amount of maintenance the plaintiffs may claim from items 1 to 12 alone.

Whether the plaintiffs can in this suit claim maintenance at least from the admittedly Puthravakasam properties items 1 to 12 in any event, will be considered if necessary after the receipt of the findings.

Findings will be submitted within a month after the reopening of the High Court after the midsummer recess. Time for objection ten days.

Finding:—

* * * * *

The case coming on for final hearing after the finding the Court made the following ORDER.—The facts necessary for appreciating the point for decision have been already stated in my order calling for a finding. The findings called for have been submitted and now the second appeal has to be disposed of on the findings.

The first point relates to the question whether the plaintiffs, who are the descendants of Valia Parvathi who was adopted into the Tekkai Veetu tarwad, have any rights to the Pottai Veetu tarwad from which family Valia Parvati was taken in adoption. The evidence with regard to custom, in support of the contention of the appellants and against their contention, has been given; and the learned Subordinate Judge has submitted a finding that the plaintiffs have failed to show that according to the custom of adoption prevailing among the Nair community, a person adopted still retains his or her rights to the property of the family to which he or she belonged before adoption. The finding of the District Munsif and of the Subordinate Judge was to the same effect.

Seetha
Neithyar
v.
Kalu Menon.

It is argued by Mr. Variar appearing for the appellant that the evidence shows that though a person is adopted into another family, that person still retains the right to the properties of the original family. I have been taken through the evidence in the case. After giving my best consideration to it, I must hold that the evidence is very inconclusive to show that after adoption the adopted person retains the right to the properties of the family from which his adoption was made. I confine my remarks only to the facts of the present case and this decision on the question of custom should not be taken as a general decision which will cover all cases of adoption in Malabar. Each case will have to be decided on the evidence which the parties put before the Court in that case. I must say that there is a certain amount of evidence in support of the plaintiffs' case but that evidence, as I have said, is not conclusive enough to establish the custom set up.

The next point relates to the question of prescription. It was alternatively contended by the plaintiffs that if it is found that they did not retain their rights after adoption, they are still entitled to claim the properties, because for over 12 years the properties of the original family were dealt with by Valia Parvathi as if she had a right to those properties and therefore by prescription she has acquired rights to them. On this point, the District Munsiff found originally in favour of the plaintiffs and the appellate Court did not accept that finding. The learned Judge now records a finding against the plaintiffs. Now, that finding has been attacked by the Counsel for the appellants. The question, having regard to the evidence, is one of some difficulty to decide. From 1867 to 1880, it is clear that the two tarwads after adoption separated from each other. Then we have a set of documents to show that Valia Parvathi dealt with the original tarwad properties. When I say 'original' I mean the properties of the family from which she was adopted; along with one or other of the members of that family as if the properties belonged to her. Among the documents referred to

Neithyar
v.
Ketu Menon.

on the plaintiff's side, there is at least one document which shows that with respect to a portion of one of the items, no right was exercised by Parvathi, that is, the Paramba portion of item 20. But it is argued that the evidence with respect to the rest of the dealings are sufficient to show that Parvathi exercised rights with respect to the other tarwad items 14 to 20 which will show that her prescriptive rights is established to those properties and so the plaintiffs can claim a right in them. Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon has drawn my attention to a series of documents, which, he says, would show that with respect to the properties, dealt with in those documents members of the original family carried on transactions without any reference to Valia Parvathi at all. Some of those documents have not been printed. The lower Court has not considered those documents but relying on the documents of the plaintiffs themselves, it has come to the conclusion that the right claimed has not been established. As I said, of course, if the dealings, for over 12 years of the character described, that is, claiming right to the properties dealing with them have been established, then, a right by prescription can be declared in favour of the plaintiffs. Whether such a right has been established appears to me to be a question of fact, which should be judged on the evidence in the case. Now, the Judge has considered this matter very carefully and in second appeal, I must treat the finding as a finding of fact. The inferences drawn from documents on which the finding has been based are questions of fact which cannot be upset in second appeal. I would therefore accept as a question of fact the finding arrived at by the learned Judge on this point.

The third point relates to the question as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintenance from what are called the Puthravakasam properties with regard to items 1 to 12. There is no dispute that they are Putravakasam properties with respect to which the plaintiffs claim rights of maintenance. The plaintiffs also claim that they are entitled to claim money rights maintenance represented by Exs. A and B. It is alleged by the appellants that Exs. A and B are assignments of usufructuary mortgages over items 14 to 19 of the suit properties. The respondents state that Exs. A and B cover only portions of items 17 and 18 and that Ex. A is not an assignment at all. The Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal refers to these properties in three places in his judgment. In paragraph 5 he says:

"The money right which Exs. A and B represent must be taken to have been acquired by Chathu Achan for the benefit of all his children."

In paragraph 8 again he says:

"The properties which Chathu Achan acquired for the children (items 1 to 12 and the money rights as per Exs. A and B) were acquired in the names of all his children including Valia Parvathi."

Then in paragraph 10 he says:

"With regard to items 1 to 12 and the money rights represented by Exs. A and B, they are what may be described P. Putravakasam properties in which Valia Parvathi and her descendants, the plaintiffs, are jointly interested with the other descendants of Sitha senior and Chathu Achan."

There can be no question that items 1 to 12 and the money rights represented by Exs. A and B are Putravakasam properties from which the plaintiffs are entitled to claim maintenance. As regards items 1 to 12 there is no dispute at all. But as the parties cannot agree as regards the items which are covered by Exs. A and B, one side saying that Exs. A and B cover items 14 to 19 and the other side saying only portions of items 17 and 18, a finding has got to be called for from the lower Court as to the maintenance which the plaintiffs are entitled to from Putravakasam rights represented by Exs. A and B; and what rate of maintenance the plaintiffs are entitled to out of those properties. As regards items 1 to 12, the lower Court has stated that the plaintiffs are entitled to Rs. 60 per annum and the minor plaintiffs to half that rate. I accept that finding.

Now, I shall deal with the question raised by the respondents as to whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim maintenance at all from the Putravakasam properties. The argument advanced is this. These properties were acquired after the adoption, that is, after Valia Parvathi lost her rights by adoption in the original family. Therefore, it is argued that the present plaintiffs should be treated as only co-tenants of these properties and the right that they can claim is only for partition and not for maintenance. It appears to me that these properties were acquired by Chathu Achan with the intention that his wife and children should be benefited by them and though Valia Parvathi was adopted into another family, it does not make her any the less entitled to the benefits out of the properties acquired by Chathu Achan and gifted by him to his wife and children of whom she is one. The relationship which is natural and the

Neithyar
v Kelu Menon,

Seetha
Nelthiyar
v.
Ketu Menon.

right which is personal and individual as distinguished from the right to the properties of the tarwad cannot be disrupted by the adoption. In any event, it cannot be disputed that they are entitled to claim mesne profits on the properties, the only argument being that in this suit such a relief cannot be claimed but as I have said I do not think the affiliation of this Parvathi to another family can take away her and her children's right to claim maintenance from the Putravakasam properties. I must therefore overrule this argument.

The only point now remaining for decision after the finding will be what rate of maintenance the plaintiffs will be entitled to from the Putravakasam rights which they claim under Exs. A and B. The finding will be submitted within four weeks after the receipt of this order and ten days for objections.

FINDING of 15th October, 1937.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—No objections have been filed. I accept the finding. The result is that the plaintiff will be given a decree for Rs. 795-10-1 for the suit period with interest thereon at 6 per cent. from the date of plaint till the date of payment. The contesting defendants 1 to 26 will pay half the plaintiff's costs throughout.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These petitions arise out of execution proceedings which were started by the petitioner in the Court of the District Munsif of Udumalpet. The petitioner had obtained a decree against one Madha Naicken and his son on the 8th July, 1935, the decree amount being Rs. 2,702-12-0. On the 21st October, 1935, he filed an execution petition for attachment of the immovable properties of the judgment-debtors. The attachment was ordered on the 1st November, 1935. Subsequently on the 6th November, 1935, Madha Naicken, the father who was one of the judgment-debtors filed I. P. No. 199 of 1935 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Coimbatore for being adjudicated insolvent. On the 1st of September, 1936, he obtained an order of adjudication and the Official Receiver of Coimbatore was appointed interim receiver of his properties. Thereupon the Official Receiver in his capacity as interim receiver applied to the District Munsif on the 26th March, 1936, for stay of execution proceedings and his request was granted.

by the learned District Munsif. Against that order, the petitioner has filed C.R.P. No. 1381 of 1936. He had also appealed to the District Judge of Coimbatore who has upheld the order of the District Munsif staying execution proceedings. In his judgment the learned Judge has also upheld the contention urged on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lay, the petition of the Official Receiver before the District Munsif being in the nature of a claim petition. Against the order of the learned Judge the petitioner has filed C. R. P. No. 947 of 1937. He has also presented C. M. P. No. 3086 of 1937 to convert C. R. P. No. 947 of 1937 into a Civil Miscellaneous Appeal, should it be held that the order of the learned Judge is appealable and that consequently no revision petition lies to the High Court. It is however not necessary to deal with these aspects of the case since no technical objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent to anticipate which these different petitions have been filed.

The learned Advocate for the petitioner contends that the District Munsif of Udumalpet has refused to exercise a jurisdiction that is vested in him in making the order against which the first Civil Revision Petition is presented. To appreciate this argument, it is necessary to refer to the reasons given in the order of the learned District Munsif for staying execution proceedings. Subsequent to the insolvency of Madha Naicken, the petitioner was trying to bring the properties of Madha Naicken's son to sale in executing the decree that he had obtained against both the father and the son. His contention before the learned District Munsif was that he was entitled to proceed with the sale of the son's share because the son has not been adjudicated insolvent and consequently the son's share did not vest in the Official Receiver. He also contended that even if the Official Receiver wanted to proceed against the son's share on the ground that the father's right to dispose of the son's share had become vested in him on the insolvency of the father, that argument could be successfully met by the petitioner relying on the order of attachment of the son's share which, as already stated, was obtained by him on the 1st of November, 1936. This attachment being prior to the insolvency of the father, the Official Receiver's right if any to exercise the father's privilege of selling the son's share for his debts has been destroyed.

The contentions urged before the learned District Munsif on behalf of the Official Receiver were that the property that was sought to be attached by the petitioner was the self-acquired property of the father Madha Naicken and not his joint family property and that consequently the son of Madha Naicken did not have any interest in it. The learned District Munsif states in his judgment that the question which he has to determine is whether the properties are the self-acquisitions of Madha Naicken or the joint family properties of Madha Naicken and his son Ramaswami Naicken. Following the decision in *Official Receiver, Kistna v. Kodandaramayya*¹, he has held that the proper Court to determine this question is the Sub-Court at Coimbatore before which the insolvency proceedings took place as otherwise it might lead to multiplicity of proceedings of a conflicting nature. He granted a stay of execution proceedings as prayed by the Official Receiver and directed the petitioner to apply to the Sub-Court at Coimbatore under S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Viswanathan
Chettiar
v.
Official Receiver of Coimbatore.

The learned Advocate for the petitioner argues that by making this order the learned District Munsif has in effect upheld the contentions of the respondent that the properties that were sought to be attached are the self-acquisitions of Madha Naicken. He also argues that the decision quoted above does not debar the learned District Munsif from allowing the execution proceedings to continue as against the right, title and interest of Madha Naicken's son in the property sought to be attached whatever those rights may be. It seems to me that these contentions are well founded. The judgment reported in *Official Receiver, Kistna v. Kodandaramayya*¹ shows that the view taken is that it is only when the property proceeded against is the property of a person who has been adjudicated insolvent that the Court is bound to deliver it to the receiver. This is clear from the following sentences that occur in the judgment:

"Whatever has been proceeded against as the property of the person who was subsequently adjudicated insolvent has to be delivered to the receiver. . . . I am of opinion that the policy of S. 51 is really to put an end, as it were, to the powers of the executing Court to proceed against or do anything in respect of property against which it has issued execution as soon as it is found that the judgment-debtor as whose property it was proceeded against has been adjudicated an insolvent, and an application is made by the Receiver under S. 52 of the Act."

Therefore it is only where the property is sought to be attached as the property of the judgment-debtor who has been adjudicated insolvent that these observations can apply. In the present case the petitioner wanted to continue execution proceedings against the interest of the insolvent's son who was also a judgment-debtor and who admittedly has not been adjudicated insolvent. The judgment in the case mentioned above shows that there also the judgment-debtors were an insolvent father and his son and that the order that was upheld by Pandrang Row, J., was the order made by the Subordinate Judge permitting the Official Receiver in that case to take possession only of the interest of the insolvent father in the attached properties and allowing the decree-holders to proceed with the execution of their decrees so far as the insolvent's son's interest in the attached properties was concerned. Therefore as contended by the learned Advocate for the petitioner, the proper order was not to stay execution proceedings altogether but to direct a stay only so far as the petition related to the interests of Madha Naicken the insolvent. So far as the proceedings related to the interest if any of Madha Naicken's son in the attached properties they should have been permitted to be continued by the petitioner.

The petitioner's learned Advocate also invites my attention to the decision reported in *Arunachalam Chettiar v. Sabaratnam Chettiar*¹. That is a decision of a Bench of two judges of this Court. Reliance is placed on the following sentences in the judgment:

"The learned Advocate for the Official Receiver has quoted the decision of Pandrang Row, J. (sitting alone) in *Baluswami Naidu v. Official Receiver, Madura*². The learned Judge does appear to have formed the opinion that in the case of the insolvency of a Hindu father S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act does prevent the creditors of a son from attaching the son's share in the family property without the leave of the Insolvency Court. As I have indicated I do not share this view and as I have also indicated it is opposed to the decisions of two Benches of this Court. (*Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan*³ and *Manicka Pillai v. Vellayya Naicken*⁴.) The position is that while the interest of the son remains unsold or unattached, the Official Assignee has the right to sell the properties for the lawful debts of the insolvent father, but unless he exercises his right he may lose it and, he loses it if the interest of the son is attached by a creditor of the son."

4. A.A.O. No. 253 of 1939.

The present case seems to fall within the scope of the observations which form the basis of the decision in the case referred to.

The respondent's learned Advocate then contends that the petitioner has a remedy open to him, namely, to go before the Court in which the insolvency proceedings of Madha Naicken are pending and ask for suitable relief and that therefore he must not be permitted to resort to a Civil Revision Petition in which the granting of the relief asked for is discretionary. I am not able to accept this contention as well founded. When it is clear that the Court below has refused to exercise a jurisdiction that is vested in it, that is a typical case in which the High Court will interfere in revision. The petitioner had attached the interests of the insolvent Madha Naicken and his son prior to Madha Naicken's insolvency and his execution proceedings before the learned District Munsif were only in respect of the son's share in the attached properties and therefore even according to the decision reported in *Official Receiver, Kistna v. Kodandaramayya*¹, the learned District Munsif had jurisdiction to direct the execution proceedings to continue against the right, title and interest, if any, of Madha Naicken's son in the attached properties. The refusal of the learned District Munsif to make such an order cannot be supported. I therefore allow the Civil Revision Petitions and order that the stay granted by the learned District Munsif so far as it relates to proceedings in execution as against the right, title and interest of the insolvent Madha Naicken's son be cancelled and that the petitioner be permitted to continue his execution proceedings against such interest whatever that may be, in the Court of the learned District Munsif. The petitioner is entitled to his costs and I allow one set of costs in the three applications payable out of the estate.

PRESENT:—SIR ALFRED HENRY LIONEL LEACH, Chief Justice AND MR. JUSTICE PATANJALI SASTRI.In the matter of The Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882)

A trust of a fund from the income of which advances are to be made to Anglo-Indian students for purposes of higher studies, re-payable by them on certain terms (and secured by insurance policies to be taken by the recipients of the advances and to be assigned to the trustees) is a public charitable trust and therefore it is not open to a trustee to take out an originating summons for an order permitting a deviation of the trust as such a matter comes under S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and proceedings under that section can only be taken with the sanction of the Advocate-General.

On appeal against the judgment and decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gentle dated 24th August, 1937 and passed in C. S. No. 135 of 1937 (Original Side) in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court.

V. Sundararajan for Appellant.V. C. V. Varaghavachari for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This appeal arises out of a decision on an originating summons issued under O. 45 of the rules of the Original Side of this Court. The summons was taken out by the appellant, the sole remaining trustee of a trust known as the Richmond Educational Trust. The appellant sought an order of the Court permitting a deviation from the trust deed and asked for the appointment of two new trustees. The appellant regarded the trust as a private one and relied on the provisions of S. 34 of the Indian Trusts Act. The matter came before Gentle, J., who dismissed the summons so far as it related to the prayer for permission to deviate from the trust deed, but granted the prayer for the appointment of additional trustees. The appellant has appealed against the first part of the order as he contends that the learned Judge erred in not sanctioning the deviation. The main question, however, is whether this trust is to be regarded as being of a public or private nature. If it is a public trust the application did not lie.

Bower
v.
Hesterlow
Leach, C. J.

The trust was created by one Thomas Richmond, a member of the English and the Madras Bars, under a deed dated 11th April, 1918. The founder apparently regarded the trust as being of a private character. He was a member of the Anglo-Indian community and he formulated a scheme to help Anglo-Indian youths in their studies. He set aside Government securities of the face value of Rs. 30,000 as an endowment fund. The interest on the capital was to be devoted to making advances to Anglo-Indian youths who wished to qualify for professions or obtain higher education generally. The advances which were to be called "scholarships" were to be repaid by the recipients out of their earnings on completion of their education. The trust deed which was drawn up and executed provided that each recipient of an advance should take out a life insurance policy for a sum equivalent to double the advance and assign the policy as security to the trustees. The premium and other incidental expenses were to be met by the trustees and added to the amount of the loan. On repayment of the loan with interest at 4 per cent. the policy was to be re-assigned to the insured. In the event of the insured dying before the re-payment of the loan sufficient of the money due on the policy to discharge the debt was to be paid to the trustees and the balance paid to the person nominated by him "or otherwise according to the terms of the policy taken in the matter." There were to be certain restrictions and these are embodied in paragraphs 4 and 5 of the deed. These paragraphs read as follows:—

"(4) The candidate shall not be less than the age of 18 years on the date of the execution of the instrument for re-payment and must have passed either the High School Examination, the School Final Examination or any other Examination or Test qualifying the candidate to appear for the University Examinations or for professional Examinations or Tests in India, Great Britain or elsewhere."

"(5) The candidate's father, mother, guardian or himself shall have been a bona fide member of the Anglo-Indian Association, Southern India, for a period of one year before the award of the scholarship or the candidate an orphan brought up in an Orphanage in Southern India for a period of more than two years and who had won a Government Scholarship while in the Orphanage and has further been a recipient of a Scholarship from the Anglo-Indian Association, Government or other sources after his sixteenth year."

Mr. Richmond was one of the original trustees and acted as such until his death in 1930. Since the creation of the trust a large number of advances had been made to Anglo-Indian students. Unfortunately many of them have not fulfilled their obligations to the trust. In fact, we are told that only a very few of them have repaid their advances. The consequence has been that the trustees have had to keep up the payments under the policies in order to safeguard themselves. The payment of premia on the policies on the lives of those who have already benefited by the trust materially restrict the carrying out of the objects of the trust. There is at present outstanding about Rs. 44,000. The main object of the appellant in taking out the originating summons was to obtain an order from the Court permitting the trustees to change the form of security. It was proposed that a beneficiary should provide two sureties for the repayment of the loan made to him and the obligation to take out a life policy should be cancelled. If this were allowed it was anticipated that the trustees would be able to fulfil the objects which the donor had in mind.

The learned Judge refused to give any direction because he considered that the Court should not interfere with the provisions of a trust deed unless there were exceptional circumstances and in his opinion there were no exceptional circumstances here. He held that the donor must have had in mind when he decided on the conditions of the trust that a portion of the income would of necessity have to be devoted to the payments of premia on the lives of beneficiaries and in refusing to give the direction sought relied on the judgment of Romer, L.J., in In re New; In re Leavers; *In re Morley*¹. We are unable to share the view that the facts in this case did not warrant a deviation from the trust deed to the extent of permitting security to be given in another form and we can see nothing in the case cited which runs contrary to this view. If relief were not given in this case it would undoubtedly mean the frustration to a large extent of the objects of the trust. If the matter remained there we should have no hesitation in passing an order which would enable the trustees to take the security in the shape of surety bonds. The matter, however, does not remain there. There is the further question whether this is a public or a private trust? We are of opinion that this is not a private trust, but is a public trust and is therefore governed by the provisions of S. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The trust was created for the benefit of the Anglo-Indian community of this Presidency. The fact that the donor placed restrictions to the extent set out in cls. 4 and 5 of the deed which I have already quoted does not, we consider, make the trust any the less a public trust.

Bower
v.
Hesterlow.
Leach, C.J.

Authority for the proposition that a loan fund of this nature constitutes a charity is to be found in *In re Monk: Giffen v. Wedd*¹. In that case the testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to set aside £800 as a "coal fund" for the benefit of the inhabitants of his native village and to hold the rest of his residuary estate as a "loans fund" for the purpose of making loans to poor and deserving inhabitants of the village. It is true that in that case there was no interest to be charged on the loans and in this case the rules which have been framed in accordance with the trust deed do require interest at the rate of 4 per cent. to be paid by the beneficiaries on the amounts received by them. Considering that it was the intention to grant loans to Anglo-Indian youths without occupation merely on the security of life policies the interest to be charged was very low. A scheme of loans for educational purposes at such low interest must be regarded as a scheme of a charitable nature.

Holding as we do that this is a public trust it was not open to the appellant to take out an originating summons. The matter comes within S. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, and proceedings under that section can only be taken with the sanction of the Advocate-General. It follows that the order dismissing the appellant's application must stand because the application was not competent, but the trustees will be at liberty to take such other steps as they may be advised.

The costs of the trustees will come out of the estate.

On an examination of the state of authorities on the custom as to impartibility among Thiyyas of Calicut Taluk, Held, it cannot be said that the incident of impartibility has been recognised in judicial decisions so as to dispense with proof. It must be proved by the party setting up the incident of impartibility that it exists in the community or in the families in question.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar in A. S. No. 208 of 1935 preferred against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut dated 18th April, 1935 and made in E. P. No. 324 of 1933 in O.S. No. 6 of 1925.

K. Kuttikrishna Menon and K. N. Kumaran for Appellants.T. S. Anantaraman for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether the property of the debtors is impartible and if so whether the debt due to the decree-holder is recoverable from that property.

The respondent in this appeal obtained a money decree against one Baputty who died in April, 1926, leaving two brothers Velukutty and Choyi. The first of them died in 1926 and the second is still alive. In the execution petition filed by the respondent herein to execute his decree, the sons of the judgment-debtor Baputty were impleaded as his legal representatives. They are the appellants in this appeal. Objection was taken that the property of the family consisting of the deceased Baputty, his brothers and sons is impartible and that according to the customary law applicable to the Thiyyas of Calicut Taluk, such an impartible estate cannot be proceeded against in execution of a decree obtained against the deceased Baputty. By 'impartible' it is said that the property is not partible unless all the parties consent. It is urged that as it is not partible at the instance of one member against the wishes of the others, the property is such that it cannot be proceeded against in execution of a money decree obtained against that member.

Krishnan
v.
Ramanatha
Aiyar & Co.

The Subordinate Judge held that the effect of the decisions of the Madras High Court is that laid down in the decision in *Patukkayil Chakkutti v. Kothambra Chandukutti*¹, that the Thiyyas of Calicut are governed by the Makkatayam law of inheritance and that they are governed by customary law. If no evidence is forthcoming as to what is the rule of customary law on a particular point the rule of Hindu Law on that point must be adopted as the customary law obtaining in the community on that point. If a person alleges that the rule of customary law on any particular point is something different from the Hindu Law, the evidence which he adduces in support of his allegation ought not to be subjected to those well-known tests which are applied to the case of an alleged custom contrary to or in derogation of the law and should be viewed simply as evidence adduced to show what is the rule of customary law itself. Applying this principle, the Subordinate Judge discussed the evidence adduced by either party and came to the conclusion that it was proved by the objectors that the property was impartible and that it cannot be proceeded against in execution of a money decree obtained against Baputty. On appeal the learned District Judge of South Malabar came to the opposite conclusion. The learned District Judge applied the same test as the Subordinate Judge and weighed the evidence according to that standard. He came to the conclusion that the evidence on record was not such as to justify a finding in favour of the objectors. He reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge and directed execution to proceed. Against this decision, the present appeal is filed by the sons of Baputty. They urge that the decision of the District Judge is wrong.

It is argued by the appellants' learned Advocate that according to the decision of this Court, the incident of impartibility in the sense in which that expression is used as stated above is applicable to all cases of Thiyyas of Calicut Taluk. It

v.
Ramanatha
Aiyar & Co

is said that the law was laid down correctly in *Raman Menon v. Chathunni*¹, and that this incident has been judicially recognised so well as to dispense with actual proof of it in this case. This and the latter decisions were all referred to at length and discussed by Mr. Justice Waller and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair in the decision reported in *Patukkayil Chakkutti v. Kothambra Chandukutti*². As is pointed there when the matter came up before the High Court on the first occasion in Raman Menon v. Chathunni, the pleadings and the evidence were all vague and unsatisfactory, the issue that was raised was vague, the evidence that was adduced inconclusive, the witnesses were not even asked about the real questions at issue, and the Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion that the ordinary rule of Marumakkatayam against compulsory partition was applicable to the Thiyyas of Calicut on the authority of two unreported decisions. When the matter came before the High Court in Second Appeal the High Court observed that it should not have been decided in that way and they framed an issue whether according to the customary law followed by the parties to the suit, compulsory partition can be effected according to the wish of one member of the tarwad. When the matter went back, the Subordinate Judge based his finding upon the ground that there was no presumption of partibility of family property in the case of Thiyyas and that the evidence adduced before him was not sufficient to support the custom of partibility. Starting from that standpoint he examined the evidence adduced before him and held that the incident of partibility was not proved. When the matter came after the return of the finding, the High Court did no more than accept the finding. The Subordinate Judge really went too far in laying down that there was no presumption of partibility. In the first place, the presumption must be that all joint property is partible, that being the rule of equity recognised in the absence of any usage to the contrary, and secondly, the Hindu rule of partibility is also the same and hence the rule of partibility must prevail unless displaced by evidence that some other rule is recognised by the community as binding upon it. When the question came up with respect to another community who were also Thiyyas but belonged to Palghat, this Court refused to extend the rule laid down in the decision in *Raman Menon v. Chathunni*¹ and confined the case to the Thiyyas of Calicut, *Velu v. Chamu*¹. In Second Appeal No. 580 of 1917 Mr. Justice Phillips and Mr. Justice Krishnan observed that it was questionable whether a single decision in *Raman Menon v. Chathunni*², can be said to be a final decision binding on all Thiyyas of Calicut. The question came before Mr. Justice Waller and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair in *Patukkayil Chakkutti v. Kothambra Chandukutti*³. There the learned Judges went into the matter at great length and came to the conclusion that the decision in Raman Menon v. Chathunni must be confined to the facts and circumstances of that case and held that among the Thiyyas of Calicut there was no rule that the rule of impartibility was applicable unless it was proved to be so by evidence adduced in any given case. The question again came before this Court in *Kundan v. Andia*⁴ before Mr. Justice Wallace and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar. Wallace, J., followed without any reserve the decision of Waller and Madhavan Nair, JJ., and laid down the rule in the same terms. Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar though he was inclined to doubt whether the observations of Mr. Justice Waller and Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair were correct, applied the law as laid down by them and held that the evidence adduced in the case before him proved a custom of impartibility. This being the state of authorities it cannot be said that the incident of impartibility has been recognised in judicial decisions so as to dispense with proof. It must be proved by the party setting up the incident of impartibility that it exists in the community or in the families in question. As is pointed out at page 239 of Sundara Aiyar's Malabar Law impartibility is a rule that is incidental to common ownership, it is a rule of equity applicable to joint status and it is upon the person setting up that the property is impartible to allege and prove it.

1. (1893) I.L.R. 17 Mad. 184.

2. (1927) 53 M.L.J. 368.

Krishnan
v.
Ramanatha
Aiyar & Co.

I therefore hold that the question of impartibility has not been established by the evidence on record. On the other hand the evidence referred to proves the contrary. The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), S. 4—Land held on cantonment tenure—Buildings erected by grantee—Notification of resumption by Government—Offer of compensation for buildings refused—Notification by Government of intention to acquire buildings under Land Acquisition Act—Validity—Compensation—Method of valuation.

Where the Government has within the area of cantonments granted land to individuals who have erected buildings on it and has, in exercise of its powers in that behalf, issued notifications of resumption to the grantees, and where the grantees refuse the offers of compensation for the buildings contained in the notifications, a notification by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for the purpose of expropriating the owners of the buildings is valid notwithstanding that it is a notification for the acquisition only of buildings on the land and not of the land itself, for in the Act the expression "land" is stated to include benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth, and it would be of no purpose for the Government to state in its notification of acquisition under the Act that it proposed to acquire land which was its own property.

In such a case, the subject to be valued being a building apart from its site, the principle of fixing its value by ascertaining the cost of reproducing the building and then allowing for depreciation and cost of the repairs required apart from depreciation is a recognised method of valuation for purposes of compensation, and accordingly it cannot be objected by the grantees that the value of their buildings has been depreciated by the previous issue of the notification of resumption.

Where, as in such a case, the compensation has to be restricted to the value of buildings apart from the land on which they stand, no additional allowance should be made in respect of amenities such as trees, gardens, pathways and culverts and other things enjoyed by the owners of the buildings as useful amenities in connection with them.

Consolidated appeals from decrees of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, North-West Frontier Province, Peshawar, dated 28th July, 1936 (Middleton, J.C. and Kazi Mir Ahmad, A.J.C.) affirming, with slight modifications, eight out of twelve decrees passed on 15th February, 1935, by the District Judge, Peshawar.

J. M. Tucker, K.C., W. Wallach and Hon. Q. Hogg, for the Government.

* P. C. Appeal No. 39 of 1938.

30th June, 1939.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment.

30th June, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD MACMILLAN.—Their Lordships are invited in these 12 consolidated appeals to reconsider a number of awards made by way of compensation for the acquisition by the Government of certain bungalows in the Cantonment of Peshawar. In the Courts below a large number of questions were raised and debated in relation to the awards, but before their Lordships, Mr. Dunne, on behalf of the appellants, confined himself to two or three main issues.

As a matter of history the cantonments are regulated, so far as regards grants to individuals, by an Order of the Governor-General in Council dated so far back as 1836. That Order appears to have been carried forward to date by a series of subsequent Orders more or less identical in their terms. Where the Government grant any rights to individuals within the area of the cantonments one of the cardinal conditions of the grant is that the Government retain the power of resumption at any time on giving one month's notice. If they give that notice they are required to pay the value of such buildings as may have been authorised to be erected.

In this case the Government proposed to resume 12 or 13 of properties originally granted out, and they issued notifications of resumption, of which there is an example in the case of the first appellant Hari Chand's property. It runs as follows:—

"Whereas the land comprising the site of the property known as Bungalow No. 5, Fort Road, Peshawar Cantonment, belongs to Government and is held by you on Cantonment tenure under which Government are entitled to resume the said land subject to paying the value of such buildings as may have been authorised to be erected thereon; And whereas Government have decided to resume possession of the said land and to obtain possession of the buildings standing thereon: Take notice therefore that Government will under all powers enabling them in that behalf through their Agent on 15th October, 1932, resume possession of the said land and your occupation and any rights, easements and interests you may have in the said land and the buildings thereon shall cease as from that date."

The notification also contained an offer of compensation.

Apparently none of those to whom the notices were addressed was satisfied with the offer, and, while the natural and ordinary course would have been to proceed to arbitration for the purpose of assessing the compensation, for some reason or other that course does not seem to have been pursued or to have been acceptable to the parties, and the Government accordingly resorted to the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for the purpose of expropriating the owners of the bungalows on the terms of that Statute. Accordingly a notification was served on each of the proprietors of the bungalows, and in the recital of each notification it was set out that the Government claimed to be the owners of the land upon which the various bungalows and outhouses had been erected. That is set out as a matter of narrative in the notification. Then it proceeds to state that the Government have given notice that the land has been resumed by them and that they are desirous now of acquiring the buildings thereon and any other outstanding interest therein, and for that purpose they invoke the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894.

The first point taken here has been that the notification was bad because it was not a notification for the acquisition of the land, but a notification of an intention to acquire only buildings on the land. It was said that the Land Acquisition Act only authorised notification of an intention to acquire land and therefore that the whole proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act were fundamentally bad because the notification upon which the proceedings started was invalid. It has to be noticed, however, that in the Land Acquisition Act "the expression 'land' includes benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth." In the present case, the Government's position being that they were the owners of the site, it would have been manifestly idle for them to have proposed to acquire what was already their own, and therefore when they sought to put in force the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act they naturally requisitioned what was not their own but what they desired to acquire, namely, the buildings on the land. It appears to their Lordships that in any event this objection to the notification comes too late, because the parties proceeded under the Land Acquisition Act to follow forth all the procedure which that statute lays down, right up to and including the final determination of compensation. The Court that dealt with the matter was really a compensation Court, and if it had been intended to attack the whole proceedings as initially invalid this would more properly have been done before some other tribunal. The Court did, however, incidentally consider the question of the validity of the notice, and their Lordships agree with the view taken that the notification is not open to objection.

Junior counsel for the appellants sought to satisfy their Lordships that the statement in the recital, namely, that the site belonged to the Government, was in fact inaccurate, and that the claimants were entitled to the sites upon which the various bungalows were erected. One thing is quite clear from the legal point of view and that is that a claimant who desires to obtain compensation must establish his title, and in the case to which we were referred, the recent case of the *Secretary of State for India in Council v. Satish Chandra Sen*¹, where the question of cantonment tenure in Bengal was under consideration, it was made clear that a claimant must establish his title affirmatively. In the present case it may be that there might be some question as to the Government's title, but it was for the claimants themselves to establish affirmatively their title to the sites. The Court below which had the advantage of having documents before them which have not been before their Lordships, went very fully into the matter and satisfied themselves that the claimants here had not established their title to the sites. Their Lordships see no reason to differ from this conclusion.

That being so, the only remaining question is whether the compensation to which the claimants are entitled for the deprivation of their buildings has been ascertained according to law. It is not the practice of their Lordships to consider detailed criticisms of valuation. It is always open to an appellant before their Lordships to raise a question of principle relating to the method of assessment, and if their Lordships are satisfied that the compensation officer or the Court which reviewed his award has erred on a matter of principle then relief will be given. In the present instance the subjectmatter of valuation or compensation being the buildings and not the site, inasmuch as the site was already the property of the Government, the question is what was the appropriate method of valuing the buildings. It was made a matter of complaint that in consequence of the resumption notice having been served, the value of all these buildings, some of them no doubt attractive residences, had been seriously depreciated. Their Lordships could have appreciated that criticism if the principle of valuation adopted had been that of proceeding upon the rental value of the buildings, but in the present case the method adopted has been what is commonly known as the contractor's method. The subject to be valued being a building apart from the site, the principle of fixing value by ascertaining the cost of reproducing the building at the present time and then allowing for depreciation in consideration of the age of the building and for the cost of such repairs as might be required apart from depreciation, is quite a well-known and recognised method of valuing buildings for the purpose of compensation. That method was pursued here, and that method is not, as their Lordships conceive it, affected by the resumption notice, because the prices which would be taken and were taken in this case for the purpose of ascertaining the cost of reproducing the building would not be affected by the resumption notice at all. The buildings accordingly in their Lordships' view have been valued for the purpose of compensation on a perfectly admissible and perfectly legitimate principle, and that being so there would appear to be no valid objection on this score to the awards that were made.

One further point was taken, however, a point of detail, to which it is proper that allusion should be made. It is said that nothing has been given in the awards in respect of what might be called the appurtenances of the buildings, such things as roads, pathways, culverts, gardens, trees, and various things which were enjoyed by the occupants of the bungalows as useful amenities in connection with them. The Court below considered this matter and were of opinion that it was not proper to include any figure for these items in the awards, with one small exception; they did allow something, a small acknowledgment, in respect of what are described as necessary roads, presumably access which were necessary for the enjoyment of the bungalows, and a small addition was made to the awards under this head. Their Lordships do not feel called upon to comment upon that circumstance, but they are of opinion that in the case of premises such as had to be valued here and which were enjoyed throughout on terms which were certainly precarious, namely, that at any time the Government might resume the premises on giving one month's notice, and that all that the grantee was to be entitled to receive in the event of that power being exercised was the value of the buildings erected on the ground, anything which might be done by the grantee in the way of utilising the ground surrounding the building for the purposes of amenity or enjoyment was, as the Court below has held, associated rather with the site than with the building. If the compensation has to be restricted, as it has to be in this case, to the value of the buildings, their Lordships agree with the Court below that no additional allowance should be made in respect of amenities such as trees and gardens and so on associated with the enjoyment of the bungalows.

Mr. Dunne, on behalf of his clients, has brought before their Lordships all that could be advanced by way of criticism of the awards, but these criticisms, in their Lordships' opinion, fail. The result is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), S. 25—Judgment-debtor filing successive applications for conciliation—If entitled to obtain stay under S. 25 more than once.

Chettiar,
In re.

Though in the Debt Conciliation Act there is nothing to prevent a debtor filing one application after another and under S. 25 of the Act he can obtain stay of a suit or other proceedings so long as an application is pending before the Board, a judgment-debtor is not entitled to obtain stay under S. 25 of any individual suit or proceedings more than once.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Kallakurichi dated 21st November, 1938 and made in M. P. R. No. 987 of 1938 in O. S. No. 426 of 1936.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The District Munsif is clearly right.

The first application to the Board though nominally filed by the fourth defendant was clearly adopted by all the defendants. For they applied for and got stay of execution from the District

Ellappa Chettiar,
in re.

Munsif under S. 25 of the Debt Conciliation Act on the strength of that application.

It is also argued that having made another application to the Board, this time through the second defendant, the judgment-debtors are again entitled to stay.

To admit such a proposition would lead to absurd results. In the Debt Conciliation Act there is nothing to prevent a debtor filing one application after another and under S. 25 of the Act he can obtain stay of a suit or other proceedings so long as an application is pending before the Board. When he files an application before the Board a little time must elapse before it is dismissed. In that time under S. 25 he can obtain stay of proceedings in suits and other proceedings and so on indefinitely without limit of time, and obviously without any great expense.

In my opinion this is not the intention of the law. A judgment-debtor is not entitled to obtain stay under S. 25 of any individual suit or proceedings more than once. Petition is dismissed.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—One Kandaswami Pillai died in 1923 leaving a considerable amount of property, but large debts. He was survived by two widows and seven sons, of whom only two were majors. The eldest son was Sivagurunatha. On the 16th January, 1924, the second son, Chidambaram, and the widows purporting to act as the guardians of their respective sons, granted a power-of-attorney to Sivagurunatha to administer the estate of the deceased. Why it was necessary to execute this power-of-attorney is not apparent. Sivagurunatha was under Hindu law the manager of the family and lawful guardian of the minors. On the 18th January, 1924, Sivagurunatha sold certain immovable property belonging to the estate and five days later sold other estate property. On the 22nd February, 1924, a creditor applied for his adjudication in insolvency on the ground that the two transfers which he had effected in the previous month constituted fraudulent preferences under the insolvency law. The application was filed in the District Court of Coimbatore and the District Judge dismissed it. An appeal followed to this Court and this Court being of the opinion that the case had not been properly dealt with on the merits set aside the order of dismissal and remanded the case for further enquiry. When the case came before the District Judge on remand Sivagurunatha consented to an order of adjudication being passed against him and to an order vesting in the Official Receiver the properties which his father had left. Accordingly orders to that effect were passed on the 11th August, 1926. The Official Receiver took possession of the estate and has to a very large extent carried out the task of administration. Nearly all the properties have been sold and the creditors have been paid eight annas in the rupee.

The present petitioner is admittedly a creditor of the estate. He also claims to be a secured creditor under two bonds executed respectively on the 30th January, 1924 and 21st February, 1924, but the validity of these documents is being challenged by the Official Receiver. On the 18th March, 1932, the petitioner, as a counterblast, filed an application for an order annulling the adjudication. This application was heard by the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore and was dismissed. The petitioner appealed to the District Judge, who concurred in the order dismissing the petition and consequently dismissed his appeal. He then filed a petition asking this Court in the exercise of its revisional powers to set aside the adjudication.

When the case was before the District Judge the petitioner contended that the order was bad because Sivagurunatha had no personal liability in the matter and that in any event the Court had no power to order the vesting of the entire estate properties in the Official Receiver. On the first point the District Judge held that there was personal liability because when pressed for payment by a creditor Sivagurunatha had asked and obtained time to collect the outstandings. On the second point he held that the petitioner could have appealed against the vesting order, but as he had not done so it was too late to attack it. The petition now before us came in the first instance before Varadachariar, J., who referred it to be a Bench because he was unable to accept as correct the opinion of the District Judge that the mere asking for and the obtaining of time to collect the outstandings was sufficient to make Sivagurunatha personally liable for his father's debts. The learned Judge also considered that the language used in the judgment of this Court Muthu Veerappa Chettiar v. Sivagurunatha Pillai in setting aside the order dismissing the application for adjudication and remanding that application for inquiry was too general in character.

We are in entire agreement with Varadachariar, J., that the mere asking for and obtaining of time for payment would not make Sivagurunatha personally liable and if he was not personally liable he could not be adjudicated for his father's debts. But the question of what is the effect of time being asked for and granted really does not arise in this case. The position here is that Sivagurunatha accepted in the insolvency proceedings the contention that he was personally liable and had committed acts of insolvency. What was operating in his mind it is not necessary to inquire. It is far too late in the day for the petitioner to challenge the order of adjudication, and the same remark applies to his attempt to have the vesting order set aside. For over 11 years he and the members of Sivagurunatha's family have acquiesced in the adjudication and in the administration of the estate by the Official Receiver. Had he so desired the petitioner could have challenged on appeal both the order of adjudication and the vesting order. He accepted these orders as being proper orders and would not have come into Court to-day if the Official Receiver had not questioned his claim to rank as a secured creditor. This is certainly not a case in which the exercise of the Court's revisional powers are called for. The order of the District Judge was a proper one and the application for its revision must be dismissed with costs.

Where the propositus a Chinese Buddhist whose father had settled in Burma died leaving a widow and on her death a dispute relating to succession arose.

Held, that the law applicable is the Burmese Buddhist law and not the Chinese Customary law.

Appeal from a decree of the High Court, Rangoon, dated 1st March and 6th April, 1937 (Goodman Roberts, C. J. and Leach, J.) reversing a decision of Sen, J., given in the exercise of the Court's Original Civil Jurisdiction, and dated 3rd June, 1936.

The respondent, Khoo Soo Chong, was the nephew of one, Khoo Boon Tin, who was the eldest of four sons of a Buddhist Chinaman who had settled in Burma. Tin died childless in 1906 and his widow entered into possession of his property and carried on his business. She died in April, 1929, having made a will bequeathing inter alia a sum of money to the respondent, no bequest of the residuary estate having, however, been made. that two of the widow's sisters, and a brother, the present appellants, were each entitled to one-third of Tin's estate not disposed of by his widow's will, it being held on appeal that the law applicable to Chinese Buddhists was Chinese Customary law (*Tan Ma Shwe Zin v. Tan Ma Ngwe Zin*¹). In March, 1934, the present respondent instituted these proceedings, claiming that he was sole heir both to Tin and to his widow, on the footing that Chinese Customary law governed inheritance and succession in the case of Chinese Buddhists, and that the widow had accordingly no right to dispose of her husband's estate. The Courts below held that Chinese Customary law ruled the case, but the appellate Court reversed the decision of the trial Judge on the application of that law and held that the respondent was at Chinese Customary law entitled to the estate on his uncle's death. The present appeal to His Majesty was accordingly brought.

22nd June, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir George
 Rankin.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought on the 7th March, 1934, by the first respondent, Khoo Soo Chong, in the High Court at Rangoon in its original civil jurisdiction. The purpose of the suit was to establish that the plaintiff is the sole heir to the estates of his uncle, Khoo Boon Tin, and of Tan Ma Thin, this uncle's widow, either (1) as their adopted son, or (2) as the former's nephew. It has been held in the High Court, both at first instance and on appeal, that the plaintiff failed to prove that the alleged adoption was in fact made, and, though this issue has been raised again before the Board, their Lordships see no reason to disturb the concurrent findings on this point.

The facts which bear upon the plaintiff's claim as nephew may be shortly stated. His uncle, Khoo Boon Tin, was the eldest of four sons of a Chinaman who lived in Burma. The family professed the Buddhist religion, and Khoo Boon Tin married Tan Ma Thin, also a Chinese and a Buddhist. He died in 1906 childless. Of his three brothers, the second son had predeceased him leaving no children. The third Khoo Hwa Khan survived till 1917, and died leaving three sons of whom the plaintiff is the eldest, having been born on 31st March, 1905. The fourth son, Khoo Hine Htow, was alive at the time of the present suit and gave evidence at the trial for the plaintiff.

On the death of Khoo Boon Tin in 1906, his widow, Tan Ma Thin, entered into possession of his property, obtained letters of administration to his estate from the Chief Court, carried on his business, and engaged in other business. She died on the 14th April, 1929, having made a will dated the 29th June, 1927. Her estate was sworn at over two lakhs of rupees. Probate was obtained of the will from the High Court on the 24th August, 1929. By it she had made a number of charitable and other bequests, including a legacy of Rs. 2,000 to the plaintiff, but she had made no residuary bequest, and part of her property was not disposed of by her will. If the Indian Succession Act applied to her will, the charitable bequests were invalid under S. 118 thereof, as the will had not been deposited in accordance with the terms of that section.

On the 24th November, 1930, her sister, the first appellant, sued on the Original Side of the High Court for administration of her estate, claiming that the present appellants (that is, herself, her sister and her brother) were the only heirs and that the charitable bequests were invalid. The present plaintiff was not impleaded, and the suit proceeded against the other sister of the testatrix, her brother and her executors. The trial Judge upheld the charitable bequests on the ground that the will was governed by English law and not by the Indian Succession Act; but on appeal Page, C. J. and Cunliffe, J. [*Tan Ma Shwe Zin v. Tan Ma Ngwe Zin*¹] held that the law to be applied to "Chinese Buddhists" was Chinese Customary law and remanded the case. On remand it was held by Sen, J. (11th July, 1933), that the charitable bequests were valid and that each of the present appellants was entitled to one-third of the property not disposed of by the will.

Thereafter, on the 7th March, 1934, some 28 years after the death of his uncle and about five years after the death of his aunt, the respondent by his plaint in the present suit claimed that he was sole heir to both, on the footing that Chinese Customary law governed inheritance and succession to Chinese Buddhists in Burma, and that in any case the widow had only a limited interest in her husband's estate and had no right to dispose of it. In the High Court both the trial Judge (Sen, J.) and the Division Bench (Robert, C. J. and Leach, J.) on appeal from him, held that Chinese Customary law governed the case. But the trial Judge was not satisfied that under that law, a childless widow had no rights in her husband's estate or in her own personal estate acquired after the death of her husband. By his decree dated the 3rd June, 1930, he dismissed the suit.

The Division Bench, however, proceeding largely upon Jamieson's "Chinese Family and Commercial Law", held in favour of the plaintiff that on the death of his uncle the plaintiff should have been adopted by the agnates and was entitled to the inheritance; that a wife is entitled to no estate of her own as all she brings to her husband or receives vests in her husband's family; but that, as she is entitled to be in control of the inheritance during her life, time did not run against the plaintiff till the death of Tan Ma Thin in 1929. The result of this decision was an order that an account be taken to ascertain what the plaintiff was entitled to, with a direction that the only property to be excluded as property of Tan Ma Thin to which the plaintiff was not entitled, was "ornaments and jewellery and valuables of the like nature together with silk stuffs and all property of whatever kind as [sic] may have been given by her husband to her in his lifetime".

The plaintiff can maintain this decree only if he establishes (1) that Chinese Customary law governs the succession, (2) that under it the eldest son of the younger brother of the propositus takes in preference to his widow if he died childless, and (3) that in her lifetime the widow is entitled to possession of the estate so that her possession is not adverse to the nephew. By this appeal the two sisters and the brother of the widow challenge each of these propositions.

The first question is as to the law to be applied by the High Court at Rangoon to determine the person or persons entitled to succeed to the property in Burma of a Chinaman who was a Buddhist and who was domiciled in Burma at the date of his death. This question depends upon the true construction and effect of S. 13 of the Burma Laws Act (XIII of 1898):—

"(1) Where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution—

(a) the Buddhist Law in cases where the parties are Buddhists,

(b) the Muhammadan Law in cases where the parties are Muhammadans, and

(c) the Hindu Law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-S. (1) and of any other enactment for the time being in force, all questions arising in civil cases instituted in the Courts of Rangoon shall be dealt with and determined according to the law for the time being administered by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

(3) In cases not provided for by sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2), or by any other enactment for the time being in force, the decision shall be according to justice, equity and good conscience."

This section is in similar terms to those of Ss. 6 and 7 of Act VII of 1872, Ss. 4 and 5 of Act XVII of 1875 and S. 4 of Act XI of 1889. These enactments introduced into Burma a distinction which arose in Bengal as regards the law applied to Indians (1) throughout the province by the Company's Courts and (2) within the town of Calcutta by the Supreme Court. Sub-Ss. (1) and (3) of S. 13 above set forth correspond to the provision first made by Warren Hastings in 1772, later incorporated in S. 15 of Regulation IV of 1793, and now to be found in S. 37 of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887. This prescribed the law to be applied by the Civil Courts throughout the province of Bengal; it had special reference to what may be called family law and religious institutions leaving other matters to the general principles of justice; it contemplated two classes only—Mahomedans and Hindus. In applying it to Burma the Indian Legislature put Buddhists on the same footing as Mahomedans and Hindus, and "the Buddhist law" on the same level as the Mahomedan and Hindu laws. It introduced at the same time an express saving for custom which the Bengal enactments had never contained. Sub-S. (2) above cited points to the provision made by S. 17 of 21 Geo. III, c. 70, whereby jurisdiction within Calcutta was given or confirmed to the Supreme Court over Indians, but the law of England which would otherwise have been the general rule of decision applied by the Court within Calcutta was excluded in favour of the Hindu or Mahomedan law so far as regards the matters mentioned in the section. This provision when re-enacted in 1915 in the Government of India Act, S. 112, was generalised and is not now limited by any specific reference to particular races or religions. It was never at any time confined to family and religious matters; it included "all matters of contract and dealing between party and party".

That these two different methods should have existed side by side for so long and should from 1872 have been applied to Burma is a remarkable fact—only in part explained by the consideration that over a wide field express legislation has in the interval superseded both; statutory codes like the Indian Contract Act and the Transfer of Property Act having provided for many matters a law common to all races and religions. As the present suit was instituted in the High Court, if not concluded by the provisions of sub-S. (1), it will fall to be decided if possible under sub-S. (2).

In the application of sub-S. (1) of S. 13 above cited, difficulty has arisen out of the immigration into Burma of Chinamen some of whom profess the Buddhist faith. It does not appear that there is any Chinese form of Buddhist law, and as regards succession and inheritance the Chinaman who is a Buddhist is in China governed by customs or laws which are not connected with the religious beliefs of Buddhists and are applied equally to Chinamen who are not Buddhists. This is referred to as Chinese Customary law, though it would seem that in or about 1930 a new code was introduced in China and that parts of the "Customary law" have from of old been codified. For a number of years the Courts in Burma have been in doubt as to the effect to be given to sub-S. (1) in these circumstances. In 1881 the difficulty was noticed by Sir John Jardine in *Hong Ku v. Ma Thin*¹:

"We all know that the Courts apply different systems of both Hindu and Mahomedan law to people belonging to different races, countries or sects. I doubt therefore whether it is obligatory on our Courts here to apply the Burman Buddhist law to Buddhists from Ceylon or China."

In Fone Lan v. Ma Gyees, Sir Charles Fox considered that by the words Mahomedan law and Hindu law the legislature meant "the laws applicable to such Mahomedan and Hindu parties whencesoever such laws may be derived" and that "the terms Buddhist law must be read in the same way—namely, as meaning the law of succession, inheritance, marriage, etc., applicable to the Buddhist parties in the case". "The personal law", he held, "is left to all who are exempted from the operation of the Indian Succession Act". Accordingly he applied the Chinese Customary law to the claim of the plaintiff to be an adopted daughter and to succeed to the estate of a Chinese Buddhist. This view was followed in a considerable number of cases though it had been dissented from in *Apana v. Ma Shwe Nu*¹. In *Man Han's case*², Chari, J., considered that Chinese Customary law had been applied as equity under sub-S. (3): he doubted the equity of this but agreed that Burmese Buddhist law should not be held applicable:

1. Select Judgments, Vol. I, pp. 135, 144.

2. (1903) 2 L.B.R. 95.

"The provision of the Burma Laws Act that Buddhist Law shall apply in cases where the parties are Buddhists presupposes the existence of a Buddhist Law applicable to the particular class of Buddhist before the Court."

In the case of *Ma Yin Mya*³, Maung Ba, J., referred to a Full Bench the question of the law to be applied to marriages in Burma between Chinese Buddhists. The question seems to have related to the form or ceremonial of marriage, and the discussion was to some extent clogged with questions as to mixed marriages between Chinamen and Burmese women. It was held that the Burmese Buddhist law was applicable as the lex loci contractus and that to escape from it a Chinaman must prove a custom contrary thereto. Thereafter the Division Bench which dealt with *Man Han's case*² on appeal (V. R. M. A. L. Chettyar Firm v. Man Han)⁴ applied Burmese Buddhist law to the question whether a judgment creditor of a Chinese Buddhist could levy execution on the wife's share of their joint property.

In *Chan Pyu v. Saw Sin*⁵, Pratt, J., regarded the Full Bench decision as applicable to the "law of marriage" only and not to the "law of inheritance," and agreed with what Sir Charles Fox had said in *Fone Lan's case*⁶, which he regarded as settled law. Cunliffe, J., disagreed with the Full Bench decision but thought it binding, though only as to marriage. He appears to have considered that "Buddhist law" could not mean Burmese Buddhist law unless "Buddhists" was confined to Burmese Buddhists.

Thereupon in *Phan Tiyoek v. Lim Kyin Kauk*¹ there was referred to a Full Bench the question: Does Burmese Buddhist law govern the succession to the estate of a Chinese Buddhist born in China but who was domiciled and died in Burma? All five members of the Full Bench answered this question in the negative; but they varied in opinion as to the law which does govern such succession. The suit in that case had been brought in the District Court of Amherst. Otter, J., considered that Chinese Customary law was to be applied though a Chinese Buddhist was just as much a Buddhist as a Burmese Buddhist. Heald, A. C. J. and Chari, J., thought that Chinese Buddhists were not Buddhists within the meaning of the section or of the exceptions to the Indian Succession Act, and that the Indian Succession Act applied to them proprio vigore. Maung Ba, J. and Brown, J., thought that the Chinese Buddhist is a Buddhist within the section but that the provisions of the Indian Succession Act applied to him as a matter of justice, equity and good conscience under sub-S. (3).

In 1932, as already mentioned, the suit brought by the first appellant in the High Court to administer the estate of her sister Tan Ma Thin came before Page, C. J. and Cunliffe, J. The appeal was from Dunkley, J., who had held that English law must govern the succession as a matter of justice, equity and good conscience under sub-S. (3). The Division Bench did not regard itself as bound by the Full Bench decision in *Phan Tiyoek's case*¹ to apply the English law or the rules of the Indian Succession Act, as the only question referred to the Full Bench had been the question whether Burmese Buddhist law applied. Page, C. J., with whom Cunliffe, J., agreed, held that a Chinese Buddhist is a Buddhist within the meaning of the Burma Laws Act and the Indian Succession Act, and that the case fell accordingly within the first sub-section of S. 13. Applying sub-S. (1) he proceeded on the ground that it was a fundamental principle of British policy that the particular habits and customs of the various communities under British rule should be recognised and respected:

"But the language in which the section is couched is unfortunate for there is no law by which all Hindus or all Mahomedans are governed, and in the strict sense of the term no Buddhist law at all. The system of law applicable to Sunni Mahomedans differs from that to which Shiah Mahomedans are subject; Hindus who follow the Benares school are governed by the Mitakshara, those who follow the Bengal school by the Dayabhaga; while in the religious system known as Buddhism no rules of law concerning secular matters are laid down or prescribed. Bearing in mind the object that the Legislature had in view, however, the meaning and effect of the expressions 'Buddhist Law', 'Mahomedan Law' and 'Hindu Law' in S. 13, in my opinion, is plain and S. 13 (1) must be construed as laying down that in 'any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution' where the parties profess the Buddhist or Mahomedan or Hindu religion the rule of decision shall be the personal law that governs the community or religious denomination to which the parties belong, except in so far as their personal law in Burma 'has by enactment been altered or abolished or is opposed to any custom having the force of law'. In my opinion it would be neither reasonable nor feasible to construe the section in any other sense."

This decision was regarded by both of the tribunals in India who dealt with the present case as settling the law in the sense that Chinese Customary law must in Burma govern the succession to a Chinese Buddhist. Had there in fact been a settled course of judicial decision in Burma upon the question, their Lordships would have been loath to disturb it. But from their review of the decisions it is abundantly clear that the important question now before the Board cannot be answered upon the mere principle of stare decisis. At the highest it may be said that there is a substantial preponderance of opinion against applying Burmese Buddhist law to the case of a Chinaman who is a Buddhist. As to the consequences of this opinion—the choice between Chinese Customary law and the principles of English law or the Indian Succession Act—the decisions are not settled but conflicting. The matter must now be determined upon the words of S. 13 as a question of construction.

Their Lordships are in agreement with Page, C. J., that a Chinaman who is a Buddhist comes within the term "Buddhists" in cl. (a) of sub-S. (1) of S. 13, and cannot be excluded therefrom either on the ground that he is not a Burmese Buddhist or because the law which governs him in China is not a specifically Buddhist or even a religious law. The same is true of the word "Buddhist" in the Indian Succession Act, 1865 and in the present Act of 1925. It follows from this view, as the learned Chief Justice noticed, that sub-S. (1) must be applied to such a case as the present. There would be little difficulty, were it shown that different schools of Buddhist law obtained in different places or among different peoples, in applying to Buddhist law the principle that in each case the appropriate school of law is that to which the propositus or the persons concerned owned allegiance. As regards Hindu Law, indeed, this principle has never been in doubt. Ample authority for it is to be found in decisions of the Board—as regards Mahomedan law in *Rajah Deedar Hossein v. Rane Zuhoor-oon-nissa*¹; as regards Hindu law, in *Rutheputty Dutt Iha v. Rajunder Narain Rae*², *Soorendronath Roy v. Heeramonee Burmoneah*³, *Parbati Kumari Debi v. Jagadis Chunder Dhabal*⁴ and Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao.

But this principle does not justify the Court in applying as Buddhist law a law which is not Buddhist at all, merely because it is applied generally in China to Chinamen without any special exception for Buddhists. The law which is described in the statute as “the Buddhist law” is, like the Hindu and Mahomedan law, intended to be applied by the Court as a law known to the Court, and administered by the Court of its own skill and competence. If the phrase lex fori be used in this sense, the Buddhist law, as Sir John Jardine observed in *Hong Ku's case*⁵, becomes under the Act one of several leges fori. It cannot be confounded or identified with a foreign law which has to be proved as matter of fact in each case by the appropriate evidence. It is doubtless true of the provisions made for Buddhists, Hindus and Mahomedans by the sub-section, as it was of the parallel provisions for Hindus and Mahomedans previously in force in Bengal, that the general intention of the legislature is that persons coming within these classes should be governed by their own law. That is the intention which has always been attributed to Regulation IV of 1793, and to the Civil Courts Acts which took its place. It was never, perhaps, better stated than by Sir William Jones, advocating the passing of such a Regulation:—

“Nothing could be more obviously just than to determine private contests according to those laws, which the parties themselves had ever considered as the rules of their conduct and engagements in civil life: nor could anything be wiser than by a legislative Act, to assure the Hindu and Mussulman subjects of Great Britain, that the private laws which they severally hold sacred, and violation of which they would have thought the most grievous oppression, should not be suppressed by a new system, of which they could have no knowledge, and which they must have considered as imposed on them by a spirit of rigour and intolerance.” [Lord Teignmouth's Life of Jones, p 106]

"They can conceive nothing more likely to give just alarm to the Mahomedan community than to learn by a judicial decision that their law, the application of which has been justly secured to them, is to be over-ridden upon a question which so materially concerns their domestic relations."

The same principle is at the root of the decisions, already referred to, applying to Hindus and Mahomedans the school of law applicable to their particular family or sect. Baron Parke, in a Hindu case, based this construction of S. 15 of Regulation IV of 1793 on the consideration that "the law of succession of the Hindoos partakes greatly of their religious opinions and is part of their system" (Rutcheputty Dutt Iha v. Rajunder Narain Rao) and in a Mahomedan case said:—

"Such is the natural construction of this Regulation, and it accords with the just and equitable principle upon which it was founded, and gives effect to the usages of each religion which it was evidently its object to preserve unchanged." (*Rajah Deedar Hossein v. Ramee Zuhoor-oon-Nissa*².)

The principle was most succinctly stated by Sir Erskine Perry in the well-known *Cutchi Memon case*³ with reference to similar provisions in the statute establishing a Supreme Court at Bombay and Madras (37 Geo. III, c. 142, S. 13) as "the principle of uti possidetis."

But while the policy or general purpose of the Legislature in prescribing "the Buddhist law in cases where the parties are Buddhists" is not in doubt, and has full effect upon the general population of Burma, it is not open to the Courts to adopt some other law for particular classes of Buddhists by reason that the prescribed method will not in such cases attain the desired result. The statute has made such exceptions to the enforcement of Buddhist law as were considered necessary, including a highly important saving as to custom, and it does not admit of being interpreted in such a sense that Buddhist law is only to be applied to Buddhists if it be the law prevailing in the country of their origin. The historical considerations to which their Lordships have alluded do not suggest that the intention of the sub-section is to prescribe for each Buddhist whatever law is found to govern him, but rather that all Buddhists shall be governed by a religious law which is deemed to be theirs as Buddhists. This assumption may be in some respects ill-founded. The influx of Chinese into Burma may not have been anticipated, or the relation between religion and law in China may have been imperfectly understood in 1872 when the rule now contained in the statute of 1898 was first introduced, or in 1865 when Buddhists were excepted from certain provisions of the Indian Succession Act. There may be difficulty and inconvenience in applying to Chinese Buddhists a law which is different from that which is applicable to them in China. It may therefore be that there is something here for reconsideration by the legislature. But it is a problem de lege ferenda and is not to be solved by interpreting the section in a sense of which it does not admit. Nor is a true construction of the section advanced by entertaining doubt whether the Buddhist law as it obtains in Burma really deserves so to be described in view of its Indian origin and of the indirectness of the influence of Buddhism thereon.

Some assistance is to be derived from the view taken by the Board in *Abraham v. Abraham*¹ which was distinguished in *Jowala Baksh v. Dharum Singh*². In the former case, before the Indian Succession Act of 1865, a Hindu family converted to Christianity had no law of inheritance imposed on them by statute, and, as a matter of equity and good conscience, its members were held to be governed by the law and usages which they had either retained or adopted. But it was held in the later case that this reasoning did not apply to a Hindu family which had embraced Islam because "the written law of India has prescribed broadly that in questions of succession and inheritance the Hindu law is to be applied to Hindus and the Mahomedan law to the Mahomedans" (p. 537). Hence Hindu law could not be applied to them save on proof of special usage controlling the Mahomedan law which was not in that case forthcoming.

Their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the view which was taken by the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Burgess, in the case of a Buddhist native of Chittagong who had settled in Burma, that "prima facie as a Buddhist deceased would come under the Buddhist law of the country at large, and the burthen of proving any special custom or usage varying the ordinary

2. (1866) 10 Moo. I.A. 511.

Buddhist rules of inheritance would be on the person asserting the variance" (*Ma Tin v. Doop Raj Banna*¹.) In *Fone Lan's case*², Sir Charles Fox cited these words and added, "If by the words 'country at large' he meant 'the province of Burma' I venture to doubt the proposition"; but their Lordships think that the proposition is well founded. As a question of construction this view is greatly to be preferred to the view that there is really no such law as Buddhist law but only Burmese Buddhist law; and the consequences which it entails are not less reasonable or convenient than are arrived at by applying to a Chinese Buddhist in the name of justice, equity and good conscience, those English principles of succession from which the Indian Succession Act exempted Buddhists.

To what extent and on what conditions the provision as to custom may enable a Chinaman who is a Buddhist to retain the usages of his country of origin as regards matters mentioned in the sub-section are questions of considerable moment upon this construction of sub-S. (1). As observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, delivering the judgment of the Board in a case under the very similar provision of S. 16 of the Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873) "In India custom plays a large part in modifying the ordinary law" (*Mohammad Ibrahim Rowther v. Shaik Ibrahim Rowther*³). The importance of kulachar or family custom in the case of Hindus has given rise to a line of decisions by British Indian Courts applicable to migrating families. Some of these have already been mentioned in this judgment, and *Mailathi Anni v. Subbaraya Mudahar*⁴ may be added as an instance of migration from without into British India. There are, moreover, cases of Hindu converts to Islam where it has been held that Hindu law "had been engrafted as a custom on the Mahomedan law" (per Lord Dunedin in *Khatubai v. Mahomed Haji Abus*⁵) and the effect of migration as to these was considered by the Board in *Abdurahim v. Halimbai*⁶. Such matters require special consideration of the individual facts of each case as well as of the nature and character of the laws or usages of the country of origin. The tenacity of customs of succession even under the strain of migration has been repeatedly recognized. "An adherence to family usages is a strong Oriental habit: it is in most places not a weak one" (per Sir James Colvile in *Soorendranath Roy's case*¹).

In the present case it is not in dispute that the propositus Khoo Boon Tin and his wife Tan Ma Thin were Chinese Buddhists and that unless the plaintiff can show that the law applicable in Burma to them in questions of succession is Chinese Customary law his suit cannot succeed. Their Lordships are of opinion that the Burmese Buddhist law is the law applicable to them, and it is not contended that according to that law the plaintiff has any claim to be the heir of either.

Their Lordships are further of opinion that, on the evidence adduced in the present case, it is not proved that according to Chinese Customary law the plaintiff as nephew would be entitled, although not in fact adopted to succeed as heir of Khoo Boon Tin in preference to the widow. No reliable expert witness was called to speak to this question, and though the book relied on by the Division Bench may have been admissible under S. 60 of the Indian Evidence Act the conclusion drawn from its contents is drawn precariously and from material both obscure and inadequate. The order of succession which is essential to the plaintiff's case is not established by the evidence either as matter of foreign law or as a custom and his suit must fail.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the Division Bench be set aside, and that the decree of the trial Judge, including his direction as to costs, be restored. The plaintiff will pay the appellants' costs of the appeal to the Division Bench and of this appeal.

In a suit for partition the trial Court passed a preliminary decree awarding certain shares to each of the parties to the suit. On appeal the shares were altered and as a result the shares of some were reduced. But in the interval partition was actually made and the parties had drawn from Court various sums of money under certain conditions imposed by the High Court on a stay petition. The trial Court instead of repartitioning allowed the parties to retain the shares as originally allotted but imposed a charge for the restitution amounts on the shares of the parties whose shares were reduced. The son of one of such defendants applied under S. 20 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act for stay of execution against him on foot of the charge. The defendant himself had become an insolvent long ago and a dividend had been declared in his insolvency. It was contended (i) that there was no debt to entitle the petitioner to apply as there was no personal liability; (ii) that as the decree was against the father and not against the son the applicant, he cannot apply under S. 20; and (iii) that as a dividend had been declared in the father's insolvency, the father cannot apply and therefore his son cannot apply by reason of S. 21.

Held, (i) the charge was a substituted liability in the place of the original personal liability of the father to make restitution. The definition of the word "debt" in the Act does include a liability to make restitution and it is wide enough to cover the case of every person who is in any manner liable either because he is personally liable or because he is liable on account of the possession of property and takes in his heirs, legal representatives or assigns.

(ii) The decree passed against the father in respect of a family liability must be deemed in law to be a decree passed against the son also and the son is entitled to maintain an application under S. 20.

(iii) The exclusion of an insolvent enacted in S. 21 must be limited only to the insolvent and the debts payable by him and even if the same debt is payable by another, say, his son, the son cannot be regarded as being virtually excluded by S. 21.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of West Tanjore at Tanjore dated 27th October, 1938 and made in E. A. No. 308 of 1938 in E. P. No. 20 of 1937 in O. S. No. 3 of 1919.

S. V. Venugopalachariar for Petitioner.

A. V. Viswanatha Sastri for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the District Judge of West Tanjore dated 27th October, 1938, on a petition presented under S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act IV of 1938 praying for stay of execution of the decree in O. S. No. 3 of 1919. The suit was one known as the Tanjore Palace Estate suit which was last dealt with in this Court so far as the present controversy is concerned. In the case reported in Arunachalam Chettiar v. Pratapasimha Rajah Sahib, the facts necessary for understanding the present dispute are stated, at least, most of them. The present application under S. 20 of the new Act was made by the son of the twenty-ninth defendant in the suit. The twenty-ninth defendant belonged to one group of defendants to whom the preliminary decree in the suit passed on 1st July, 1918 (the suit had been originally instituted as O. S. No. 26 of 1912) awarded 3/4th share. In appeal, this share was reduced, but in the interval, the twenty-ninth defendant as well as others belonging to his group had taken away from Court various sums of money under certain conditions imposed in the order made on a stay petition. Instead of however restitution being made as a result of the appellate Court's modification of the first Court's decree, the partition having been made actually in the interval, the first Court allowed the parties to retain the shares originally allotted to them but imposed a charge in respect of certain amounts on those shares in the case of those who had received more than their proper share according to the appellate Court's decree. The present execution petition in connection with which the application for stay was made was for the purpose of enforcing this charge. The twenty-ninth defendant became an insolvent long ago and it is conceded that a dividend also has been declared by the Official Receiver.

The application of the petitioner was dismissed by the learned District Judge on several grounds. So far as one of the points is concerned, namely, that the petitioner is not an agriculturist, it is clear that this finding that he is not an agriculturist cannot remain as it stands for the simple reason that the parties had no real opportunity to adduce evidence on this point. It would seem as if the petition was posted for hearing on points of law leaving the question of fact, namely, whether the petitioner is an agriculturist to be decided later on, if necessary. Unfortunately, however, the learned District Judge happens to have lost sight of this fact and recorded a finding, so to say, on this point against the petitioner by saying that no evidence had been produced on this point and it is not conceded on the other side. It is not as if there is a clear and definite finding on the point, but I wish to make it clear that if there is a definite finding against the petitioner, that finding cannot stand for the reason that the parties had no reasonable opportunity to adduce evidence relating thereto, and if on other grounds, the petitioner succeeds, this point will have to be decided afresh by the Court below after giving an opportunity to both parties to adduce evidence.

Vasantha
Rao Sahib
Bhonsle
v.

Aiyar.

It has been argued that there is no debt in this case which would entitle the petitioner to apply under S. 20 of the Act. No doubt the charge does not make the petitioner personally liable nor indeed his father personally liable for the amount charged. But it must be remembered that the charge was, as it were, a substituted liability in place of the original personal liability of the father to make restitution. The definition of the word 'debt' found in the Act does, in my opinion, include a liability to make restitution. All that the definition says is that if there is a liability in cash or kind due from an agriculturist whether payable under a decree or order of a civil or revenue Court or otherwise, it constitutes a debt. There was here an undoubted liability on the part of the twenty-ninth defendant to pay in cash as restitution whatever amounts he had drawn from Court in excess of what he was ultimately found to be entitled to under the decree of the appellate Court. Moreover, as pointed out by the petitioner's advocate, it has been held in *Perianna Goundan v. Sellappa Goundan*¹ by a Bench that the definition of 'debt' in the Act cannot be restricted to cases where a person is personally liable and that it is wide enough to cover the case of every person who is in any manner liable either because he is personally liable or because he is liable on account of the possession of property, and takes in his heirs, legal representatives or assigns. On the other side, the decision of a single Judge reported in *Narayanachari v. Annamalai Chettiar*¹ has been brought to my notice. That is to the effect that a puisne usufructuary mortgagee who is made a party to a suit by the first mortgagee which is decreed, is not a debtor within the meaning of the new Act. The judgment in that case is a very short one and the reason there given is that an usufructuary mortgagee is not a debtor, because in no sense of the word he is a debtor. That is so because qua mortgagee he could not be regarded as a debtor but only as a creditor. There is also a sentence following to the effect that the decree is not against him for a debt payable by him but in his favour allowing him a right in equity to redeem the first mortgage and therefore he was under no liability under the decree. In other words, the decree in that case was one which gave him an opportunity to do something but which did not make him liable to pay anything in cash or in kind. That being the case, that decision cannot support the respondent's contention in this case where there is undoubtedly an attempt made by him to execute a decree, by enforcing the charge allowed by the decree against properties which are in the possession of the judgment-debtor's son. I have little doubt in my mind that this is a case in which so far as S. 20 of the Act is concerned, assuming that the petitioner is an agriculturist, there is a debt in respect of which he is entitled to get relief; but at the last moment, so to say, it has been contended by Mr. Viswanatha Sastri on behalf of the respondent, abandoning for the time being the contention that there is no debt, that S. 20 can be availed of only if there is a decree passed against a person entitled to the benefits of the Act, and that the petitioner is not such a person because there is no decree passed against him even assuming that he is entitled to the benefits of the Act. This contention can be shortly met by the remark that a decree passed against the father in respect of a family liability, that is to say, a liability enforceable against the family property must be deemed in law to be a decree passed against the son also. The subsequent insolvency of the father does not make the decree any the less a decree passed against the son. Whether the effect of the insolvency deprives the son of any of the benefits which he would otherwise be entitled to is not a question that falls to be decided at present. At present the only point for decision is whether the petitioner is entitled to maintain an application under S. 20 and not to determine the exact relief to which he may be entitled. That question has to be, and should be, left to be decided later on if and when an application is made under S. 19 of the Act.

Mr. Viswanatha Sastri has also relied on the case reported in Mottai Meera v. Abdul Kadir, but that case is really not in point because the decision there was not on the basis that the liability was not a debt at all from a general point of view but that it was not a debt under the Act and that for the special reason that the liability arose by reason of the fact that one of several co-owners was in possession of common property and therefore liable to account. As pointed out by Varadachariar, J., at page 528, the relationship between such co-owners of whom one is in possession of common funds is not that of creditor and debtor. Dealing with the claim to interest in that case, it was observed that interest could be claimed only on the basis of some breach of trust and that by reason of that fact, the liability could not be regarded as a debt under the Act solely by reason of the specific provision in clause (f) of S. 4 of that Act which excludes from the operation of the Act liabilities arising out of any breach of trust.

The learned District Judge appears to have relied also on S. 21 of the Act as a ground for dismissing the petition for stay. That section merely says that:

"Nothing in this Act shall apply to the debts payable by any person who has been adjudicated an insolvent, if prior to the coming into force of this Act, a dividend has been declared out of his assets."

It may be that the debt in the present case is one payable by the father and he is an insolvent in whose insolvency a dividend has been declared long ago, but that does not mean that his son who is in possession of the family property is not entitled to claim the benefits of the Act simply because his father cannot do so by reason of S. 21 of the Act. In the view that I have taken, it follows that the original decree itself which is now being executed must be regarded as a decree to which the petitioner is virtually a party though not by name, and he must be regarded as being a person by whom the debt is payable as well as by his father and the insolvency of the father and the payment of a dividend cannot, in my opinion, disentitle the son from applying under the Act, if otherwise he satisfies the conditions laid down in the Act. The exclusion of an insolvent enacted in S. 21 must be limited only to the insolvent, and the debts payable by him, and even if the same debt is payable by another, say, his son, the son cannot be regarded as being virtually excluded by S. 21. For instance, if a debt is payable by more than one person, the insolvency of one cannot deprive the other person liable for the debt of his right to apply under the Act if he otherwise satisfies the provisions of the Act. This seems to be fairly clear, and therefore any reason based under S. 21 for the purpose of non-suiting, so to say, the petitioner, must be dismissed as one based on a misapprehension of the scope of S. 21. It follows from what I have said that the reasons given by the learned District Judge for dismissing the petition are not sustainable in law and his order must be set aside, but, as I have observed already, as the main question of fact which arises in this case, namely, whether the petitioner is an agriculturist has not been properly decided, the petition will be remanded to the Court below for fresh disposal according to law in the light of the observations contained in this judgment after giving reasonable opportunities to both parties to adduce evidence on the point which is to be enquired into, namely, whether the petitioner is an agriculturist.

The costs of this petition will abide the event and should be provided for in the revised order of the lower Court.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Bezwada, dated 30th May, 1938 and passed in Criminal Appeal No. 6 of 1938 (C. C. No. 1023 of 1937, Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Bezwada).

P. Satyanarayana Rao for Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—The evidence justifies the conviction of the petitioners under S. 426 of the Indian Penal Code and the fines are not excessive. But the offence under S. 426 of the Indian Penal Code does not involve a breach of the peace and the order under S. 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be sustained. The order under S. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is therefore set aside and otherwise this petition is dismissed.

The Court made the following

ORDER.—This is an application by a decree-holder for the amendment of a decree passed by this Court on the 30th August, 1932, on the ground that there has been an accidental omission. The petitioner obtained a decree in the Court of the District Judge of South Arcot for the payment of two sums, Rs. 10,817 and Rs. 11,183, with interest at 9 per cent. per annum. On the first amount interest was to be calculated from the 16th March, 1925, and on the second amount from the 16th March, 1926, "till this date", that is, the date of the decree, the 21st December, 1928. There was no reference to further interest in the judgment and the decree was drawn up in accordance with the judgment which was signed by the District Judge who delivered it. On appeal this Court held that the petitioner was entitled to Rs. 10,276 and Rs. 10,623 with interest on these amounts at six per cent. per annum from 16th March, 1925 and 16th March, 1926, respectively to the date of the decree. Again there was nothing said in the judgment with regard to the payment of further interest after the date of the decree. The draft decree was submitted to the learned Advocates who appeared in the case and they approved of the wording. It is clear, however, that they did not realize that further interest had not been awarded, because in the subsequent execution proceedings the amounts claimed included further interest and no objection was taken. Recently the judgment-debtors applied for the scaling down of the balance due under the decree in accordance with the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. In those proceedings it was discovered that the decree which had been passed was silent on the question of further interest. This led to the present application being filed and the Court is asked to amend the decree by allowing further interest on the decretal amount from the date of the decree to the date of payment or realization.

S. 152 empowers the Court to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees or orders or errors arising therein from any accidental slip or omission. As the decrees passed are in accordance with the respective judgments it is difficult to support the contention that there has been an accidental omission, but even if the decree-holder ought to have had further interest granted to him and this was accidentally overlooked the Court cannot in face of the provisions of S. 34 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure rectify the omission. S. 34 (1) provides that where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money the Court may award further interest, but sub-S. 2 expressly states that where a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie. As in the decree which the petitioner wishes to have amended there is no reference to further interest and the decree follows the judgment the Court must be deemed to have refused it. I do not suggest that if in the judgment further interest had been specifically allowed S. 34 (2) would prevent the Court acting under S. 152 and correcting the decree, but as the decree is in accordance with the judgment the provisions of S. 34 (2) govern the matter.

The application must be dismissed with costs.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order made by the learned District Judge of Kistna in I. A. No. 1864 of 1935 in I. P. No. 15 of 1935 on the file of his Court.

The facts are briefly as follows. On a petition presented by the first respondent, the second respondent was adjudicated insolvent on the 17th October, 1935. Then the appellant who is one of the creditors of the insolvent applied on 7th November, 1935, for annulling the adjudication under S. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The ground alleged in the petition before the District Judge was that the debt mentioned in the petitioning creditor's application was a bogus debt and that consequently there was abuse of the process of the Court. The learned District Judge dismissed the petition for a reason which cannot be supported. The order is worded as follows:—

“The petitioner is practically trying to make me review the order of the District Judge who adjudicated the respondent insolvent. I do not think he can be allowed to do so and that his real remedy lies in having the debt declared void or annulled by appropriate action. The petition is dismissed. All parties to bear their own costs.”

The learned Advocate for the appellant very rightly comments on the wrong view taken by the learned District Judge. The respondents' learned Advocate while conceding that the reason given in the order may not be quite satisfactory, contends that in substance the order is correct though in form it looks unsatisfactory.

The question therefore for determination is whether in substance the order made by the Court below is correct and warranted by law. It is first necessary to bear in mind an important feature which the respondents' learned Advocate has pointed out in the course of his arguments, namely, that before the petitioning creditor in this case filed his petition for adjudicating the second respondent insolvent, the appellant before this Court had himself presented a similar petition on the 29th of July, 1935, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada asking for a similar relief. Since the order of adjudication was made by the District Court of Kistna on the petitioning creditor's application prior to the disposal of the present appellant's application filed in Bezwada, that petition does not seem to have been pressed. The learned Advocate for the respondents argues with considerable force that it does not lie in the mouth of the present appellant now to say that at the time the second respondent was adjudicated insolvent, the adjudication ought not to have been made.

Gopu China
Jogayya.
v.
Satya-

The learned Advocate for the appellant argues that S. 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act prescribes the conditions that should be fulfilled to entitle a creditor to present an insolvency petition against a debtor and he points out that the main condition is the existence of a debt due to that creditor to the extent of at least Rs. 500. Therefore, if on a petition presented by a creditor, an adjudication is made, if it is possible to establish subsequently, that on the date of that petition, there was no genuine debt due to that creditor, then that is a fit case in which the adjudication should be set aside under S. 35 on the ground that the debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent. This contention I am not able to accept as well-founded. There is no doubt that but for the petition presented by the creditor, the adjudication would not have taken place but once an adjudication takes place, all the other creditors of the debtor become interested in the matter and unless the appellant here is able to show that the debtor did not owe any other debts or that the debtor was not really insolvent at the time the order of adjudication was made by the lower Court, it is not open to him to contend that it is a case in which the order of adjudication ought not to have been made.

The learned Advocate for the respondents cites the decision reported in *Ex parte French: In re Trim*¹, where the facts were similar to the facts in the present case. Under the English law, it is only if a debt of £50 is due by the debtor that the creditor to whom such a debt is due can validly file a petition for adjudicating the debtor insolvent. In that case, after the adjudication, the debtor came forward and satisfied the Court that made the order of adjudication that the debt due to the petitioning creditor was below £50. Thereupon, the County Court Judge annulled the order of adjudication but the Court of Appeal reversed this decision. The following sentences that occur in the judgment of Bacon, C.J., are relied on by the learned Advocate for the respondent:—

"Proceedings in bankruptcy are for the benefit not only of the petitioning creditor, but of all the creditors. . . . It is no reason, even

1. 52 L.J. Ch. 48.

Gopu China
Jogayya
v.
Satya-

if the petitioning creditor's debt is not established, that the other creditors should be deprived of their rights."

This decision seems to me to be strongly against the appellant in the present appeal. The learned Advocate for the appellant cites the following decisions in support of his contentions. (*Koya Mohideen v. Hashim Khan*¹, In re Whelan: *Ex parte Sadler*², *Kumarappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar*³, *Alamelumangathayarammal v. Baluswami*⁴ and *Karuthan Chettiar v. Raman Chetty*⁵.) In the case reported in *Koya Mohideen v. Hashim Khan*¹ during the temporary absence of the debtor, a person who said he was a creditor filed a petition and got the debtor adjudicated insolvent. The debtor on coming to know of this order of adjudication applied for its annulment and he succeeded in showing that it was not competent to the creditor to obtain the order of adjudication. What is significant in the report of this case is that there is nothing in it to show that there were other creditors who were interested in the proceedings. In the case in In re Whelan: *Ex parte Sadler*², it was shown that there was no debt to the extent of £50 due by the debtor to the creditor. In *Kumarappa Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar*³, the petition that was filed for adjudication showed on its face that there was no act of insolvency committed by the debtor within three months before its date. In the case in *Alamelumangathayarammal v. Balusami*⁴, it was held that the debtor was in a position to discharge his debts in full and therefore it was an abuse of the process of Court to apply for and obtain an order of adjudication. In the case in *Karuthan Chettiar v. Raman Chetty*⁵, it was found that there was no allegation of any act of insolvency when the petition was filed for adjudication. These cases cannot, in the circumstances mentioned above, be regarded as authorities for the proposition that the learned advocate for the appellant wants the Court to accept, namely, that if the appellant merely proves that there was no binding debt due to the petitioning creditor then the Court is bound under S. 35 to set aside the order of adjudication on the ground that the order ought not to have been made. In my opinion, the allegations contained in the affidavit filed by the appellant in the Court below in support of his contention that

1. A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 276.

2. 43 L.J. (Bankruptcy) p. 43.

4. A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 394.

3. (1938) 2 M.L.J. 385.

5. (1926) 24 L.W. 486.

the adjudication should be annulled were not sufficient for such annulment. In these circumstances, the conclusion arrived at by the lower Court is correct although the reasons given in its order cannot be supported.

The appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed 'with costs (one set).

The Court delivered the following :

JUDGMENT.—The third defendant is the petitioner. He was the payee of the suit promissory note and he had endorsed the note to the plaintiff. The suit note was executed by defendants 1 and 2 in favour of the third defendant on the 22nd September, 1932. An endorsement of payment of Rs. 5 which appears on the suit promissory note and which bears date 15th September, 1935, was relied on for saving limitation as against defendants 1 and 2. The date of endorsement of the suit promissory note by the third defendant to the plaintiff was 9th December, 1935. The learned District Munsif who tried the case has held that the endorsement of payment of Rs. 5 which was relied on for saving limitation was fabricated by the third defendant and that the suit was barred by limitation as against defendants 1 and 2. Regarding the third defendant the trial Court has held that he is liable because he has admittedly endorsed the promissory note to the plaintiff and it was not shown at the trial how he could escape liability.

The learned Advocate for the third defendant-petitioner puts forward the following contentions: (1) that the trial Court should have held that the suit was barred by limitation against the third defendant also, because it is Art. 73 of the Indian Limitation Act that applies to the case, and (2) that the suit against the third defendant should have been dismissed, because there was no evidence of notice of dishonour.

In my view both these contentions are not well-founded. As pointed out in the decision reported in Jagannadha Reddiar v. Lakshmana Reddiar, the liability of the endorser of a promissory note arises only on the date of endorsement. In the present case the date of endorsement was clearly a few months prior to the date of the institution of the suit. Therefore the suit as against the third defendant was not barred by limitation.

Regarding the contention that the third defendant was entitled to notice of dishonour, as argued by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-respondent, in view of the fraud practised by the payee in endorsing the promissory note to the plaintiff after it became barred by limitation and with a fabricated endorsement of payment of Rs. 5, there was no necessity to give notice of dishonour to the third defendant. The plaintiffs are Kunwar Surendra Bahadur Singh and his two minor sons and the suit was brought for foreclosure of a mortgage dated the 23rd of June, 1909, purporting to be executed by Himmat Singh (now deceased), Mulu Singh and Musammat Jamna Kunwar, mother and certified guardian of the said Lachman Singh, who was then a minor, in favour of Surendra Bahadur Singh in respect of certain zemindari property to secure a loan of Rs. 18,000 and 4½ per cent. interest in order to pay off prior mortgages at a higher rate of interest. The defendant-respondents Nos. 1-9 are heirs of Himmat Singh, No. 10 is Lachman Singh, Nos. 11, 12 and 13 are Mulu Singh, and his two sons and Nos. 14 to 24 are various transferees.

Before the execution of the mortgage, Musammat Jamna Kunwar obtained the permission of the District Judge to borrow Rs. 4,500 (one-fourth of Rs. 18,000) by hypothecation of the one-fourth share of the minor Lachman Singh in the said property.

The principal and interest were payable on the 23rd of June, 1916.

The mortgage-deed was presented for registration on the 24th of June, 1909, at the office of the Sub-Registrar of Etawah by Himmat Singh and it was duly registered.

It will be necessary to refer later in more detail to the proceedings of the registration.

The suit was brought for principal and interest amounting to Rs. 41,400-14-6 on the 25th May, 1928.

Written statements were filed by Lachman Singh and by two of the transferees. The plea to which it is necessary to refer is that which is contained in paragraph 9 of Lachman Singh's written statement, namely: "The contesting defendant does not admit the execution and completion of the document sued on, nor is receipt of any consideration of the same admitted." There were other pleas in the written statements but the above-mentioned plea is the only one which is material to the decision of this appeal.

bore on the face of it the names of five persons who purported to sign as witnesses to the execution of the deed. At the trial, Himmat Singh's heirs and Mulu Singh did not dispute the execution of the deed, but it was contended on behalf of Lachman Singh that the execution and due attestation of the mortgage bond so far as his mother was concerned had not been proved.

One only of the five alleged witnesses, namely, Badri Prasad, was called to give evidence on behalf of the plaintiffs as to the execution and attestation of the mortgage-deed on the 23rd of June, 1909. The plaintiff's mukhtaram and the scribe, who wrote out the mortgage, also gave evidence, but they were not attesting witnesses. In consequence of contradictory statements made by the above-mentioned persons, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that he could not rely upon their evidence.

The learned Judge, however, relying on a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court (Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar)¹ held that the signatures of the registering officer and of the identifying witnesses affixed to the registration endorsement were sufficient attestation within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act and its subsequent amending Acts. He therefore made a decree against the representatives of Himmat Singh, Mulu Singh and Lachman Singh, declaring their several liabilities to pay their proportionate shares of the amount due under the mortgage for principal, interest and costs which he assessed at Rs. 44,229-0-0.

Lachman Singh appealed to the High Court at Allahabad, and the learned Judges who heard the appeal referred to a Full Bench the following questions:—

"1. When a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage, and execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted what must the mortgagee prove in order to obtain a decree?"

2. Whether the signatures of the Sub-Registrar and of the witnesses identifying the executant at registration are a sufficient attestation of the deed for the purposes of the Transfer of Property Act, assuming that the Sub-Registrar and identifying witnesses did receive from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, and that they did sign in the executant's presence?"

The Full Court on the 26th June, 1932, answered the first question as follows:—

"Where a mortgagee sues to enforce his mortgage and the execution and attestation of the deed are not admitted, the mortgagee need prove only this much that the mortgagor signed the document in the presence of an attesting witness and one man attested the document; provided the document on the face of it bears the attestation of more than one person;

But if the validity of the mortgage be specifically denied, in the sense that the document did not effect a mortgage in law, then it must be proved by the mortgagee that the mortgage-deed was attested by at least two witnesses."

As to the second point the learned Judges of the Full Court were of opinion that as there were conflicting decisions, they should decide the matter on principle alone, and came to the conclusion that the answer to the second question must be in the negative.

It appears from the judgment of the Division Bench, delivered on the 10th of November, 1932, that when the appeal came before the Division Bench for further hearing it was conceded that on the record as it stood the plaintiffs had failed to prove due attestation of the mortgage-deed so far as Musammat Jamma Kunwar was concerned; and application was made on behalf of the plaintiffs to produce two further witnesses and for permission to cross-examine the said Badri Prasad and Kundan, the scribe, who were alleged to have turned hostile.

The ground of the application was that the plaintiffs had been misled by certain rulings of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts. The learned Judges made an order remanding the case to the Trial Court for taking the evidence of the two further witnesses and for the cross-examination of Badri Prasad and Kundan.

It was provided that Lachman Singh should have the opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses or producing evidence in rebuttal.

The High Court further directed that the Trial Court after taking such evidence should record a finding on the evidence as a whole, including the fresh evidence, on the question whether the mortgage deed had been duly executed and attested as far as Musammat Janina Kunwar was concerned.

Their Lordships express no opinion as to whether the order remitting the matter to the Trial Court was in the proper form or whether the ground for the said order was sufficient. The order was made at the instance of the plaintiffs, it was acted upon, and the Trial Court made its finding in accordance with the said order. It appears that the plaintiffs did not take the opportunity of producing any fresh witnesses but Badri Prasad and Kundan were cross-examined. The Subordinate Judge held that as far as Musammat Jamna Kunwar was concerned the execution and attestation of the mortgage bond had not been duly proved.

The appeal was further considered by the Division Bench of the High Court and on the 28th November, 1933, the learned Judges agreed with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs had failed to prove due attestation of the bond so far as Musammat Jamna Kunwar was concerned. They therefore held that the mortgage was invalid so far as the share of Lachman Singh was concerned, allowed the appeal, and dismissed the suit as against Lachman Singh and his share of the mortgage property. It is against that judgment and the decree made in pursuance thereof that the plaintiffs have appealed to His Majesty in Council.

It is necessary to refer to certain sections of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) and of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882); the most material are S. 68 of the Evidence Act and Ss. 3 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

S. 68 of the Evidence Act is as follows:—

"68. If a document is required by law to be attested it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence:

"Provided that it shall not be necessary to call an attesting witness in proof of the execution of any document, not being a will, which has been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, unless its execution by the person by whom it purports to have been executed is specifically denied."

S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that:—

"Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards a mortgage other than a mortgage by deposit of title deeds can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses."

What is meant by the word "attested" is stated in S. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The definition was inserted in the Interpretation clause by Act 27 of 1926 and made retrospective by Act 10 of 1927. It runs as follows:—

"'Attested', in relation to an instrument, means and shall be deemed always to have meant attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or affix his mark to the instrument, or has seen some other person sign the instrument in the presence and by the direction of the executant, or has received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person, and each of whom has signed the instrument in the presence of the executant; but it shall not be necessary that more than one of such witnesses shall have been present at the same time, and no particular form of attestation shall be necessary; ”.

It is therefore clear that the mortgage in this case, so far as Musammat Jamna Kunwar was concerned, could be effected only by a registered instrument to which she had attached her mark and which was attested by at least two witnesses, each of whom must have seen her affix her mark to the instrument or received from her a personal acknowledgment of her mark, and each of whom must have signed the instrument in the presence of Musammat Jamna Kunwar.

Their Lordships have examined the evidence relating to the alleged execution of the mortgage on the 23rd of June, 1909, and they agree with the findings of the Courts in India that the plaintiffs failed to prove by any reliable evidence that the mortgage deed, so far as Musammat Jamna Kunwar was concerned, was duly attested in accordance with the provisions of the statute. They are satisfied that Musammat Jamna Kunwar did execute the mortgage deed by affixing her mark thereto but they are not satisfied that the so-called attesting witnesses saw her make her mark or received her personal acknowledgment thereof or that they signed the instrument in her presence.

Learned Counsel for the appellants relied upon the terms of S. 68 of the Evidence Act and especially upon the proviso, and submitted that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs at the trial to call an attesting witness, inasmuch as the mortgage-deed had been registered and the execution thereof by Musammat Jamna Kunwar had not been specifically denied by Lachman Singh.

Their Lordships cannot accept that contention. It is clear that Lachman Singh in his written statement pleaded that he did not admit the execution of the mortgage deed, and it appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that at the trial the pleader who appeared for Lachman Singh “hotly contended that the execution and due attestation of the mortgage bond in suit was not proved against his client.”

In these circumstances, in their Lordships’ opinion, it must be held that the execution of the mortgage deed by Musammat Jamna Kunwar was in fact specifically denied by Lachman Singh.

Then it was urged that at least one attesting witness, namely, Badri Prasad, was called at the trial and therefore the provisions of S. 68 of the Evidence Act were complied with, and no further evidence of the due execution and attestation of the mortgage deed was necessary.

This further contention cannot be accepted by their Lordships, for although Badri Prasad purported to have been an attesting witness, and although he was called at the trial for the purpose of proving the execution of the mortgage-deed, his evidence has not been accepted as evidence upon which any reliance could be placed.

It was then urged that having regard to the terms of S. 71 of the Evidence Act, the execution of the mortgage deed might be proved by other evidence. That section is applicable only where the attesting witness "denies or does not recollect the execution of the document."

Their Lordships are doubtful whether that description is applicable to the case of Badri Prasad, but for the purpose of this appeal they will assume that the discrepancies in his evidence, which resulted in it not being accepted as reliable evidence were due to deficient recollection.

Upon that assumption it becomes necessary to consider the proceedings relating to the registration of the mortgage-deed, for it was argued that those proceedings showed that the provisions of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act had been complied with both as regards registration and attestation of the mortgage-deed.

It was in connection with this part of the case that reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the appellants on the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar. In that case it was held that the signatures of the registering officer and the identifying witnesses affixed to the registration endorsement under Ss. 58 and 59 of the Registration Act (XVI of 1908) were a sufficient attestation within the meaning of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and its subsequent amending Acts.

It is to be noted that when the appeal in that case was originally before the Division Bench the Subordinate Judge was required by the said Bench to consider further the case and record findings upon certain questions of fact stated by the High Court before the questions of law were considered.

The Subordinate Judge in compliance with the order, found the following facts.

1. That the sub-registrar who registered the Exhibit A made his signature in the registration endorsement referring to the admission of execution by the executants in the presence of the executants.

2. That the witnesses who identified the executants of exhibit A before the sub-registrar were present when the admission of execution of that document was made by the executants.

3. That both the identifying witnesses made their signatures in the presence of the executants of exhibit A.

In view of these findings the Division Bench referred two questions to the Full Bench, the second of which was as follows:—

"2. Whether the signatures of the Registering Officer and of the identifying witnesses affixed to the registration endorsement under Ss. 58 and 59 of the Indian Registration Act amount to sufficient attestation within the meaning of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act read with the aforesaid amending Acts?"

The Full Bench answered that question in the affirmative.

It is material to notice that the Court recognised how necessary it was to have the above-mentioned findings of fact before holding that the provisions of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and its amending Acts had been complied with.

The Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case now under consideration declined to follow the above-mentioned decision in *Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar*¹ and their reasons for their conclusion are set out in their judgment delivered on the 21st of June, 1932. It is not necessary to recite such reasons in detail. The main reason was that the Transfer of Property Act required three distinct things, (1) due execution by the mortgagor, (2) due attestation by two witnesses of such execution, (3) due registration of the deed.

The learned Judges were of opinion that if it were held that registration and what might happen at the time of registration might take the place of execution and attestation, which according to the language of the Act must precede registration, the entire spirit of the enactment would be broken. They further held that neither the registrar nor the identifying witnesses at the time of registration purported to sign as attesting witnesses of the execution of the mortgage deed.

The learned Counsel for the appellants drew their Lordships' attention to several cases in the Indian Law Reports which showed that there is a conflict of authority in India on this question; their Lordships do not consider it necessary to examine them in detail or to express any opinion on this occasion whether the decision in *Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar*¹ or that of the Full Bench in the present case was correct for the following reasons.

In the first place the respondents in this appeal were not represented, and though their Lordships are confident that the learned Counsel for the appellants drew their attention to all the sections of the Acts and all reported decisions which he considered material, their Lordships have not had the benefit of any argument on behalf of the respondents and they are loth to express an opinion on such an important question as the one under consideration upon an appeal which is presented ex parte unless it is really necessary.

Secondly their Lordships are of opinion that in this appeal it is not necessary for them so to do.

This case differs from the case reported in *Veerappa Chettiar v. Subramania Aiyar*¹ in that there are no findings of fact as to what occurred at the time of registration, such as there were in the Madras case. There is no evidence except that which appears on the mortgage bond and the endorsement of the registration thereon.

That endorsement shows that on the 24th June, 1909, between 1 and 2 p.m., Himmat Singh presented the document at the office of the departmental sub-registrar at Etawah.

That endorsement was signed by the sub-registrar and Himmat Singh.

Next the endorsement records that Himmat Singh and Mulu Singh admitted the completion and execution of the document and that they were identified by Genda Lal and Narain

1. (1928) 55 M.L.J. 794; I.L.R. 52 Mad. 123 (F.B.).

Singh. The registering officer further recorded the fact that one of the witnesses was known to him.

Then appear the signatures and thumb impressions of Himmat Singh and Mulu Singh; and the signature of Genda Lal and the signature and thumb impression of Narain Singh as witnesses.

Then there is a further endorsement that Mussammat Jamna Kunwar admitted the completion and execution of the document in a loud voice from behind the door of the room in which she was: it was then stated that she was identified by Narain Singh and by Ajodhia Singh.

Both these witnesses apparently went behind the purdah to identify the lady.

Then appears the signature of the sub-registrar. These witnesses were identified by Genda Lal who was said to be known to the sub-registrar.

The endorsement then records that the mark and thumb impression of Mussammat Jamna were obtained in the presence of the identifying witnesses after she had extended her hand beyond the purdah; and the signatures and thumb impressions of Ajodhia Singh and of Narain Singh and the signature of Genda Lal are attached as witnesses.

Their Lordships are prepared to assume that the proceedings in connection with the registration were rightly and duly conducted by the sub-registrar: but even upon that assumption there is no evidence that he affixed his signature to the endorsement in the presence of Mussammat Jamna Kunwar.

It is provided by S. 59 of the Registration Act that he must affix his signature "on the same day" and in the absence of any evidence as to the time when he signed it cannot be assumed that he signed the endorsement in the presence of Mussammat Jamna Kunwar.

Further there is no evidence which would entitle their Lordships to hold that the witnesses who identified her signed the endorsement in Mussammat Jamna Kunwar's presence, or that they heard her admit the completion and execution of the mortgage deed.

S. 60 (2) of the Registration Act of 1908 provides that the certificate of the registering officer shall be signed, sealed and dated by the registering officer and shall then be admissible for the purpose of proving that the document has been duly registered in manner provided by the Act and that the facts mentioned in the endorsement referred to in S. 59 have occurred as therein mentioned. But the particulars which are to be endorsed on documents which are admitted for registration, under S. 58, do not include statements as to the above-mentioned facts, which, in their Lordships' opinion, are necessary for proving the due attestation of the mortgage deed according to the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Ss. 58, 59 and 60 of the Registration Act, therefore, are of no avail to the appellants in this respect.

Reading the endorsements made at the time of the registration as a whole, and giving to them their natural meaning, they appear to be relevant to the matter of registration only, and the witnesses appear to have been present for the purpose of identifying Mussammāt Jamnā Kunwar and for that purpose only.

If it had been intended to rely on the proceedings of the registration as showing that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as to due execution and attestation of the mortgage-deed were complied with, evidence should have been given on behalf of the plaintiffs to prove the necessary and material facts.

Assuming then, but not deciding, that it would be legitimate to look at the proceedings relating to the registration of the mortgage-deed for the purpose of proving the due execution and attestation thereof by Mussammāt Jamnā Kunwar, their Lordships are of opinion that the plaintiffs failed to prove the above-mentioned material facts which were necessary in order to comply with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act.

For these reasons their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Where land in Madras was leased out by temple trustees for the purpose of laying out a flower garden and the lessee contrary to the terms in the lease erected some huts, a firewood depot, and a two-storied dwelling house,

Held, the lessee should be required by an injunction to demolish all the structures, as the maintenance of the buildings on the land would alter its character and would prevent the land being used as a flower garden.

If the erections were allowed to remain, at the end of the lease there would be a claim by the lessee for the benefit of the Madras City Tenants Protection Act, 1921 and to allow that would be unjust to the lessor.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree and judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Somayya dated 19th April, 1939 and made in C. C. C. A. Nos. 33 and 44 of 1938 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court of the Principal City Civil Judge, Madras, dated 5th May, 1938 and made in O. S. No. 557 of 1935.

- K. Rajah Aiyar and V. Ramaswami Aiyar for Appellant.
A. S. Nataraja Aiyar for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment granting the respondent a mandatory injunction for the removal of certain buildings on land leased to the appellant. The land belongs to the Sri Kasi Viswanatha Devasthanam, G. T., Madras, of which the respondent is the trustee. Before 1920 the land was leased to one Chinna Venkatesa Devar, who on the 27th September, 1920, transferred his interest therein to P. L. Natesa Mudaliar. After he had acquired the interest of Chinna Venkatesa Devar, Natesa Mudaliar entered into an agreement with the then trustee of the temple for a new lease. The agreement was executed on the 19th February, 1921 and was duly registered. It stated:—

Doraikannu
Ammal
v.
Ramaswami
Mudaliar.
Leach, C. J.

"I have agreed to pay you a rent of Rs. 2 (Rupees Two) per month for laying out a flower garden in the said land, and paid you this day an advance of Rs. 25 (Rupees Twenty-five). As I have taken on lease the said land for a period of 30 years from this date, myself or my heirs shall pay you or order the rent of every month before the 10th of the next month and obtain a receipt. If the rent remain unpaid, you shall recover the same by proceeding against my property. You shall yourself pay the quit rent of the above land. I shall myself pay the tax that may be levied by the municipality. If we again require the site after the expiry of the said 30 years you are at liberty to get a fresh rental agreement according to the rent prevailing then in respect of other similar sites. If you want me to vacate the land without there being a renewal of the rental agreement after the said period of 30 years, the cost of the said compound wall that may be fixed by the mediators according to the then market rate, and the said advance amount shall be taken from you and the said site together with plants therein and the compound walls will be delivered to you."

At that time there was nothing on the land except the compound wall referred to in the agreement. It is quite clear from the wording of the agreement that the lease was granted to Natesa Mudaliar merely for the purpose of laying out a flower garden, but in breach of the agreement he erected on the land a cattle shed made of zinc sheets. On the 31st August, 1931, he assigned his interest in the new lease to the appellant. At the time of the assignment no other structure had been erected on the land. In 1935 the appellant demolished the cattle shed and erected in its place a two-storied masonry dwelling house. On another part she built a firewood depot, also of masonry. She then erected two huts made of zinc sheets. The appellant is living in the house and she rents out the two huts to "Boyees", which I understand is a term used to denote a certain class of Telugu coolies. The respondent as trustee of the temple objected to the erection of these buildings and filed a suit in the City Civil Court for an injunction requiring their demolition. The City Civil Court Judge held that the respondent was entitled to an injunction in respect of all the buildings except the house. He did not grant an injunction in respect of the house because it was built on the site of the cattle shed which was on the land when the appellant became the assignee of the lease. Both the parties appealed to this Court. Their appeals were heard by Somayya, J., who allowed the appeal of the respondent and rejected that of the appellant. The result was that an injunction was issued requiring the demolition of the house as well as the other buildings. The appellant asks the Court to dissolve the injunction in its entirety.

I have no hesitation in concurring in the judgment of Somayya, J. The lease having been granted for the laying out of a flower garden the appellant was not entitled to erect these buildings on the land. It is admitted that if the land is to be regarded as agricultural land the injunction which has been ordered is right, but it is said that it is not agricultural land and therefore the lease falls within S. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. The provisions of that section do not help the appellant; in fact they provide a complete answer to her case. Cl. (o) of that section provides that the lessee may use the property and its products (if any) as a person of ordinary prudence would use them if they were his own; but he must not use, or permit another to use, the property for a purpose other than that for which it was leased, or fell or sell timber, pull down or damage building belonging to the lessor, or work mines or quarries not open when the lease was granted, or commit any other act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the property. There is no ambiguity in the language used. While the lessee may use the property as a person of ordinary prudence would use it, he is expressly prohibited from using it or permitting another person to use it for a purpose other than that for which it was leased. Cl. (p) says that he must not, without the lessor's consent, erect on the property any permanent structure except for agricultural purposes. It is not suggested that the temple authorities have granted any permission.

Doraiannu
Ammal
v.
Ramaswami
Mudaliar.
Leach, C.J.

Mr. Rajah Aiyar in support of the appeal has stressed two English cases dealing with the rights of lessees where there are no negative covenants. The first of these is *Richard Wheeler Doherty v. James Clagston Allman and W. C. Dowden*¹, in which a building which had been used as a store was converted into dwelling houses. There was no covenant prohibiting this and the House of Lords held that the landlord was not entitled to an injunction restraining the conversion. The building could be re-converted into a store at the end of the lease. The second case is *Hyman v. Rose*², in which relief from forfeiture for breach of covenant was sought. There a building was being used as a cinematograph theatre. The land on which the building stood had been leased for the purpose of erection of a chapel. A chapel was erected and was used as a place of religious worship for 60 years. The lease was then sold with the consent of the charity. Commissioners and the premises were adapted for a cinematograph theatre. It was held that in view of the fact that the lease did not prohibit the contemplated user of the premises, the alterations did not constitute a breach of covenant. Those cases are entirely different from the case which we have now before us. Moreover, we have got to decide this case on the provisions of an Indian Statute, and, as I have shown, the statute clearly prohibits the appellant from using the land for the purposes for which she has used it. The respondent was fully justified in instituting the suit and I consider that the proper relief is the injunction which Somayya, J., has granted.

As the learned Judge has pointed out if these erections were allowed to remain on the land, at the end of the lease there would no doubt be a claim preferred by the appellant or the appellant's successor in title for the benefit of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, 1921 and a demand made on the trustee to convey the land at a value to be fixed by the Court. To allow such a position to arise here would certainly be unjust to the respondent. I may mention that there is another reason why the injunction should not be dissolved. Cl. (o) of S. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act says that a lessee shall not be allowed to commit an act which is destructive or permanently injurious to the land. The maintenance of the buildings on the land would certainly alter its character and would prevent the land being used as a flower garden.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Indian Penal Code (XLV of 1860), Ss. 147 and 352—Police Officers arresting gamblers—Resistance—Attempt by persons to rescue accused—Guilty under S. 147—Arrest strictly legal under S. 352.

Where a Sub-Inspector of Police and a head constable found accused 1 to 6 gambling on an open platform used by villagers like a chavadi and the other accused were watching the game, and when the officers arrested accused 1 and 2 in good faith under colour of their office in a public place, on the question whether the arrest of accused 1 and 2 was legal and whether the attempt by the other persons to rescue the accused was legal,

Held, (1) that those who attempted to resist the police by use of criminal force would unquestionably be guilty under S. 147 of the Indian Penal Code;

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Public Prosecutor against an appellate order of acquittal and the undisputed facts are that on their way to investigate a case of house-breaking and theft, P. Ws. 1 and 11, the Sub-Inspector and Head Constable of Sambatti found accused 1 to 6 gambling with dice and money in the Silvathinnai an open platform with roof used by the villagers like a village chavadi at Karisalpatti. Accused 7 to 10 were watching the game and the police officers hurried to the spot. The accused got down the Silvathinnai and P. W. 1 asked accused 1 to 6 to stop. P. W. 11 seized the dice and some cash from the Silvathinnai and accused 1 and 2 were asked their names. They refused to give their names and P. Ws. 1 and 11 caught them saying that they had been arrested. Accused 1 assaulted P. W. 1 and he struck accused 1 on the head with a lathi in self-defence. The other accused then attempted to rescue accused 1 and 2 by use of criminal force but P. Ws. 1 and 11 held them firm, and P. Ws. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, the villagers intervened. Accused 1 and 2 were then taken to the school building about fifty feet away and accused 3 to 10 assembled near the school. The Sub-Inspector apprehended a breach of the peace and information was sent to the Village Munsif and Police Station. The Village Munsif and four constables arrived soon after and accused 3 to 10 ran away.

Accused 1 and 2 were arrested by the Police Officers in good faith under colour of their office and it is immaterial whether the Silvathinnai is a public place and the arrest was strictly legal. There is no right of private defence against such an act of a public servant, and accused 3 to 10 who attempted to rescue accused 1 and 2 by use of criminal force will unquestionably be guilty under S. 147 of the Indian Penal Code. Accused 1 and 2 will be guilty under S. 352 of the Indian Penal Code and the acquittal of the accused on the ground that the arrest was not legal is unsustainable. The order of acquittal is therefore set aside and the accused are convicted, accused 1 and 2 under S. 352 of the Indian Penal Code and accused 3 to 10 under S. 147 of the Indian Penal Code.

As regards sentence the occurrence was not premeditated and it is unnecessary to send the accused to prison at this distance of time. The accused are therefore sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each and in default to rigorous imprisonment for one month.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), Ss. 77, 181 and 185—Home-farm land—Landholder having no kudivaram right—Character of holding—Suit for recovery of rent—Proper forum—Revenue Court.

It is well settled that 'home-farm land is land' regarding which the landholder at least retains an expectation that he will at some not too distant date use it for his own cultivation and enjoyment. Vide Zamindar of Chellapatti v. Somayya, (1914) 27 M.L.J. 718; I.L.R. 39 Mad. 341 at 347; and Raja Yerlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasad v. Somayya, (1918) 36 M.L.J. 257; L.R. 46 I.A. 44; I.L.R. 42 Mad. 400 at 405 (P.C.).

If land does not fall within this definition, if the landholder has alienated his right in kudivaram with such permanence as to preclude the probability of its ever again coming into his personal enjoyment, then quite clearly that land, whatever it was in the past, is no longer the home-farm land of the landholder and the mere fact that it continues to go by the name of kambattam land would not restore it to the privileges which it has ceased to enjoy. Apart from the presumptions to be drawn under S. 185 of the Act and even in the absence of any express intention to convert land which was once home-farm land, under S. 181 into ryoti land, it seems to be apparent that land which has ceased to be in fact 'home-farm land' of the landholder cannot be treated in law as retaining a character which it has lost. If the land is no longer the private land of the landholder, then by the definition of 'ryoti' land it will automatically be treated as ryoti land to which all the incidents of ryoti tenure will apply. One of these incidents is that a suit for rent in respect of that land will fall under S. 77 of the Act and will be cognisable only by the Revenue Court.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order returning a plaint for presentation in a Revenue Court. The land in respect of which this suit for rent arose is admittedly situated within a mukhasa village which according to the trial Court's judgment was admitted to be an 'estate' falling under cl. 2 (d) of S. 3 of the Madras Estates Land Act. It is common ground that the land in question was formerly the kambattam land of the plaintiffs and that it was demised to the defendant in 1920 under Ex. A which is described as a "permanent khat, relating to the sale of kudivaram right for Rs. 33,492." This instrument recites that the lands demised form part of the plaintiff's private kambattam land in which they have a permanent kudivaram right as well as melwaram right and that the plaintiff have sold to the defendant all the rights possessed by them in the lands excepting the melwaram right thereto, the consideration being the payment of a substantial cash premium and future payments of rents at rates specified. The trial Court applied the provisions of the Amending Act (XVIII of 1936) and held that the suit related to land which was ryoti land within the terms of the Act and that therefore the suit to recover arrears of rent in respect of that land fell under S. 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act and it could only be entertained by a Revenue Court.

It seems to me unnecessary to go into the question whether Act XVIII of 1936 which had not been passed when the suit was instituted governs the forum in which the suit should be decided, for I am of opinion that the suit was ab initio filed in the wrong Court even under the statute in force at the time when the litigation started. Under the Madras Estates Land Act as amended up to 1934 'ryoti land' means cultivable land in an estate other than private land and 'private land' means the domain or home-farm land of a land-holder by whatever designation known. The argument of the appellants is that, because this land was admittedly at one time the home-farm land and is designated as kambattam, it retains for all time its character as home-farm land regardless of the use to which it is put and of the tenure upon which it is granted, provided there is no explicit conversion of that land into ryoti land. It seems to me that this contention runs quite contrary to the scheme of the Madras Estates Land Act. The Act contemplates lands of various categories. There is poramboke land not suitable for assignment and there is 'oldwaste' with neither of which we are here concerned. Cultivated land is for all practical purposes divided into ryoti land in which the ryot has an occupancy right and in which the conditions of his tenure are governed by the Act and home-farm land which the landholder retains in his own occupation for his private use though he may for convenience of enjoyment make temporary arrangements for its cultivation by others. In my opinion it is not in accordance with the scheme of the Act to recognise another category of land, namely, land which was initially the home-farm land of the landholder but which he has no intention to retain for his own use and in which he has transferred the occupancy right to a cultivating tenant for cash consideration as a permanent measure. It is contended that the demise in favour of the defendant contains terms which are inconsistent with the provisions of the Act regarding the tenure of an occupancy right, particularly in that there is a permanently fixed rent, that there is a rate of interest on arrears different from that prescribed by the Act, that the landholder retains the right to existing trees on the land demised and that there is a provision for variation in the amount of premium to be paid in accordance with any survey excess or deficiency which may be found on accurate measurement of the land demised. It seems to me that all these terms are matters of minor importance and the question whether all of them would be of binding force in view of the provisions of the Act, is a matter on which I am not now called upon to express an opinion. The fact however remains that by this demise of 1920 the plaintiffs divested themselves for all time of any right in the kudivaram of the land in question other than the right to receive a recurring rent and an interest in the trees then standing on the land. It cannot be said that this land any more partook of the character of the private domain of the landholder, kept for his own use and enjoyment, or that there was any intention on the part of the landholder that it should ever revert to the condition of private home-farm land. What the landholder clearly intended to do was to transfer the kudivaram permanently for a cash consideration, while reciting in the conveyance the fact that it was the kambattam land presumably in the hope that thereby he would be able to evade the provisions of the Estates Land Act designed for the protection of occupancy ryots.

Kondayya
Rao
v.
Naganna.

The Estates Land Act does not define what is meant by "home-farm land", but the term has been defined by the Courts and the definition is now well settled. Sir John Wallis, C. J., in the case of *Zamindar of Chellapalli v. Somayya*¹ adopted the definition of similar land in a case from North India as:

"Land which a Zamindar has cultivated himself and intends to retain as resumable for cultivation by himself even when from time to time he demises it for a season."

This definition was approved by the Privy Council in *Raja Yerlagadda Mallikarjuna Prasad v. Somayya*² and it has been followed in subsequent cases. We may therefore take it as settled that home-farm land is land regarding which the landholder at least retains an expectation that he will at some not too distant date use it for his own cultivation and enjoyment. If land does not fall within this definition, if the landholder has alienated his right in the kudivaram with such permanence as to preclude the probability of its ever again coming into his personal enjoyment, then quite clearly that land, whatever it was in the past, is no longer the home-farm land of the landholder and the mere fact that it continues to go by the name of kambattam land would not restore it to the privileges which it has ceased to enjoy. Apart from the presumptions to be drawn under S. 185 of the Act and even in the absence of any express intention to convert land, which was once home-farm land, under S. 181 into ryoti land, it seems to me to be apparent that land which has ceased to be in fact home-farm land of the landholder cannot be treated in law as retaining a character which it has lost. If the land is no longer the private land of the landholder, then by the definition of "ryoti land" it will automatically be treated as ryoti land to which all the incidents of ryoti tenure will apply. incidents is that a suit for rent in respect of that land will fall under S. 77 of the Act and will be cognisable only by the Revenue Court. I am clearly of opinion that the land in this cause is no longer the private land of the landholder but has become ryoti land and that the suit for rent falls under S. 77 and has to be brought in the Revenue Court. In this view it seems to me to be unnecessary to go into the question of the effect of S. 127, sub-S. (2) of Madras Act VIII of 1934 on the course of this litigation in the trial Court or to consider the question whether the Amending Acts of 1936 in terms apply.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

It is well established that the mere settlement of the terms of a pro-

The Court delivered the following.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order in execution of a mortgage decree. The mortgage covered three houses with ground attached thereto and in the property the present appellants were entitled to a half share. The appellate decree made the half share of the appellants liable only to the extent of a portion of the mortgage amount with interest thereon, the half share of the other defendants being liable for the full amount of the mortgage decree. In execution of the decree the decree-holder sought to bring to sale the hypotheca and asked for leave to sell the whole property in one lot owing to the difficulty of selling an undivided share. Notice of this application was sent to the appellants and they filed a counter-affidavit in which they pleaded that the whole property could not be brought to sale for the total liability of all the defendants together, but that only their half share in the property should be brought to sale to recover the limited amount for which the appellants were liable under the decree. There was also a contention that the three houses should be sold in separate lots. After a commissioner had been appointed, the Court passed an order on 17th January, 1936, in which it observes:

"In order to avoid further disputes it is better that the properties are sold as one lot," and after considering the question of the value the order concludes, "the properties will be sold as one lot." The appellants thereafter asked for time to discharge the decree, waiving fresh proclamation. But on the date to which the sale was adjourned, they filed an application in which they in effect renewed the prayer put forward in their counter-affidavit to the notice to settle the terms of proclamation, pointing out that the proposal to sell the entire property for the amount due under the decree would throw a greater burden upon the half share of the appellants. In fact the object of the executing Court in approving this arrangement was to get the best price possible and to adjust the relative liabilities of the different sets of defendants out of the sale proceeds instead of taking the risk of a piecemeal sale. Though the order may be attacked as not being in accordance with the letter of the decree, it is, in my opinion, in accordance with the spirit of the decree. However, that may be, the application which the appellants put forward after they had taken time to discharge the debt has been rejected on the ground that it was barred on the principle of res judicata.

It is strenuously contended that the former order was not an order under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, determining the rights of the parties but a mere administrative order prescribing the manner of sale, against which there would be no appeal. Therefore it is contended that the order cannot operate as a bar to a subsequent application to adjudicate upon the right of the appellants to have their share sold only for a portion of the decree amount for which they have been held liable. It seems to me that if the order dated 17th January, 1936, is not an order falling under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, then the later order on the application of the appellants to agitate once more the contention which they had put forward at an earlier stage, must equally be held to be one not falling under S. 47 and no appeal against it would lie. I am however definitely of opinion that the order dated 17th January, 1936, is one which falls under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code. It is well established that the mere settlement of the terms of a proclamation, when no dispute between the parties as to their rights or liabilities is decided judicially, cannot be deemed to be an order under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, from which an appeal would lie. But it is equally well settled that when at the stage of settling the terms of the proclamation the parties put into issue a question affecting their relative rights and liabilities with regard to execution and this matter is heard and decided, that decision is a judicial decision and the parties will not be allowed in the course of execution to canvass the same matter again. The point is covered by the authority of *Vedaviasa Aiyar v. Madura Hindu Labha Nidhi, Ltd.*¹ and subsequent decisions to the same effect.

Namasivaya
Mudaliar
v.
Srinivasa
Aiyangar.

Now in the present case the decree-holder proposed to bring to sale the whole of the rights of the defendants in one lot, and, dividing the sale proceeds into two shares, to adjust the relative liabilities of the defendants under the decree against those shares. The appellants filed a counter-affidavit contesting the right of the decree-holder to sell the properties in this way and asking for an adjudication on the question whether their share should not be sold separately and their several liabilities realised by these separate sales. On this counter-affidavit there was a definite judicial decision as to the way in which the decree should be worked out by sale of the properties. That was clearly a determination of the liability of the interests of the judgment-debtors to be sold collectively, so that their liability under the decree could be worked out by a division not of the property itself, but of the sale proceeds after the property had been sold. Assuming that that decision was a wrong decision and it went against the letter of the decree, the appellants should have taken it up in appeal and not having done so they cannot be heard to raise the matter at a later stage. It follows therefore that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. (Leave to appeal is refused.)

There is also an application filed under the Madras Act IV of 1938 (C.M.P. No. 2492 of 1939) based on certain passages in a judgment of my own in *Ponnambalam Chetti v. Ambalam Raman Chetti*². In that case I was dealing with the position in which there was a mortgage covering two quite separate plots of land, one of which contained buildings and the other did not and I held that the mere fact that the unoccupied site was destined to be built upon at some future date would not bring it within the term "house property" used in S. 4 (d) of the Act. It seems to me that this decision has no bearing whatever on the facts of the present case, for it is apparent from the Commissioner's report and plan that the vacant ground included in the present mortgage is a part of the compound of the house property which the mortgage covers. There is a compound wall round the vacant ground and the well serving the houses is included in it. The mere fact that this and originally bore two paimash numbers does not suffice to separate the compound from the houses to which it is attached; and as I observed in the case quoted, the term "house property" will normally include the site on which the building stands and the garden, compound or yard attached thereto. In this view it must be held that this mortgage is a debt contracted on the security of house property alone and therefore it is saved from the operation of Act IV of 1938 by the provisions of S. 4 (d) of that Act. The petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

1. (1923) 45 M.L.J. 478.

2. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 233.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), S. 37—Attachment pending on date of adjudication—Annulment of adjudication—Effect on attachment—Dismissal of execution petition on adjudication—If raises attachment.

When there is an attachment at the time of the adjudication and the insolvency is not prosecuted with the result that an order of annulment is passed, the effect of the order of annulment will be that which is laid down in S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, that is, subject to the contingencies contemplated by S. 37 the property will go back to the debtor with any burdens which existed upon it at the time of the adjudication. His interests in the property is still bound by the attachment at the date of the annulment. An order of dismissal of an execution petition did not raise the attachment.

attachment, the learned District Judge having held that an attachment before judgment did not come to an end by the adjudication of the judgment-debtor as an insolvent which was subsequently annulled. In 1930 a decree was obtained against the appellant and there was an attachment before judgment which was enforced in an execution petition of 1931. Just before the date to which the sale was posted, the judgment-debtor was adjudged an insolvent and on this fact being intimated to the executing Court the order passed was "judgment-debtor is adjudged insolvent. Sale stopped. Dismissed". The last word is not very clearly decipherable, but I accept the interpretation of the learned District Munsif's handwriting which has appeared correct to the Courts below. On 16th August, 1934, the adjudication was annulled. On 4th January, 1935, the decree-holder having died, his legal representative filed a fresh execution petition 76 of 1935 praying for recognition of the applicant as the legal representative of the decree-holder and for sale of the properties by virtue of a subsisting attachment before judgment. The District Munsif held that there was no attachment. On appeal the learned District Judge came to the contrary conclusion. To my mind the learned District Judge's decision is correct.

mayya
v.
Surayya.

My attention has been drawn to three decisions Gobind Das v. Karan Singh, Dambar Singh v. Munawar Ali Khan and Balakrishna Menon v. Rangan Pattara, all of which really do nothing more than point out that the practical effect of an adjudication is to put an end to an attachment. These decisions do not purport to lay down as a proposition of law that an adjudication automatically raises an attachment so that there will be no attachment subsisting if and when the adjudication is annulled. An attachment may be raised either by the completion of the sale with a view to which the attachment has been imposed, or by an express order raising the attachment, or by the operation of O. 21, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code whereunder when an execution petition is dismissed for the decree-holder's default, the attachment shall cease. Now, though the learned District Munsif on being informed of the insolvency erroneously passed an order dismissing the execution petition which was then pending, instead of staying the proceedings as he should have done with reference to S. 29 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, it cannot, I think, be said that this order of dismissal was an order of dismissal for default of the petitioner. Whatever be the legal effect of this dismissal, it will not have the effect of automatically terminating the attachment as would be the case had it been a dismissal under O. 21, r. 57. It is true that when there is an adjudication of the judgment-debtor the attachment will not operate to prevent the Official Receiver from realising the property attached and selling it for the purpose of satisfying the creditors. Nor will it operate against any transferee from the Official Receiver who acquires an interest in the process of realisation. But I see no reason why we should read into the Insolvency Act a provision which is not there, to the effect that on adjudication all attachments shall be raised. There is no reason why an attachment should not notionally continue subject to the superior power of the Official Receiver to ignore the attachment for the purpose of realising the assets of the judgment-debtor and distributing the proceeds to his creditors.

1. (1917) I.L.R. 40 All. 197.

2. (1917) I.L.R. 40 All. 86.

In a case such as the present when there is an attachment at the time of the adjudication and the insolvency is not prosecuted with the result that an order of annulment is passed, the effect of the order of annulment will be that which is laid down in S. 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. That is to say, subject to any changes in the title to the property due to the acts of the Court or the receiver, the property will revert to the debtor to the extent of his right or interest therein on such conditions as the Court may declare. There is nothing in S. 37 to justify the conclusion that the order of annulment will enlarge the right of the debtor in the property as compared with the right as it subsisted on the date of the adjudication. To my mind the natural conclusion is that on annulment, subject to the special contingencies contemplated in S. 37, the property will go back to the debtor with any burdens which existed upon it at the time of the adjudication.

I have held that the order of dismissal of the pending execution petition did not automatically raise the attachment. There is no order subsequently raising the attachment. The order of adjudication to my mind merely makes the attachment ineffective so long as the property is in the hands of the receiver. When the adjudication is annulled, the property will re-vest in the debtor to the extent to which he had a right therein at the time of the adjudication. At that time his right was clearly subject to the attachment and I am of opinion that his interest in the property is still bound by the attachment on the date of the annulment. To hold otherwise would be to allow a fraudulent judgment-debtor to go through the pretence of insolvency and take advantage of the order of annulment resulting from his own default, to make alienations before the creditor has time to levy a fresh attachment.

In the result therefore the appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

The order of the Court was made by

The Chief Justice.—The petitioner filed the application before us for the issue of a writ of certiorari against the Debt Conciliation Board of Dhona, Kurnool District, and for the quashing of an order of the Board dated the 28th May, 1939. A rule nisi was issued, and we have heard the arguments. It is clear that the rule must be made absolute. The facts are these. On the 6th February, 1939, the respondent, who claims to be an agriculturist filed an application purporting to be an application to the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4 (1) of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936. In this petition the respondent set out three debts all of which were shown to be due to the petitioner. The respondent apparently had only one creditor. Having set out the debts payable to the petitioner the respondent's petition proceeded as follows:—

"I hereby declare that I am an agriculturist and the debts shown above are liable to be scaled down under the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938."

The Board entertained the petition and served notice on the petitioner in these proceedings. In due course the Board went into the question whether the respondent was in fact an agriculturist, and came to the conclusion that he was. The petitioner contended that as the debts were secured on house property they were excluded from the scaling down sections of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act by virtue of S. 4 (d) of that Act. The Board decided against the petitioner and held that the respondent's debts should be scaled down under the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act. It is this order which the petitioner asks the Court to quash.

Although the petition which the respondent filed on the 6th February, 1939, purported to be a petition under S. 4 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, what he was in effect asking the Board to do was to scale down his debts under the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act which the Board had no power to do. But treating the respondent's application to the Board as an application under the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936, it is manifest from the provisions of that Act that the petition should have been dismissed. S. 4 provides that a debtor may make an application "for the settlement of his debts". S. 14 (1) says that if the creditors to whom more than fifty per cent. of the total amount of the debtor's debts is owing come to an amicable settlement with the debtor, such settlement shall be reduced to writing in the form of an agreement recording the amounts payable to such creditors and the manner in which, the assets from which, and the times at which they are to be paid. But if the creditors representing more than fifty per cent. of the applicant's debts do not agree the Board is bound under S. 17 of the Act to dismiss his application. As I have already pointed out, there is here only one creditor and he has not agreed to a settlement of his debts. There having been no settlement the proper and only course for the Board to follow was to dismiss the application filed by the respondent.

The respondent has entirely misconceived the object of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act and has misread its provisions. If he is an agriculturist and the debts which he owes to the petitioner are debts which do not fall within the provisions of S. 4 (d) of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938, he is entitled to have the debts scaled down in accordance with the provisions of that Act, and if the petitioner asks a Court to enforce the payment of a larger sum than is allowed by the Act the Court will have no power to do so.

The Board having acted without jurisdiction in passing the order of the 28th May, 1939, that order must be quashed, and there will be an order accordingly. The petitioner having succeeded is entitled to his costs which we fix at Rs. 50.

P. Srikantan for Petitioner.

R. Karunakaran and U. Lakshmana for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is an agriculturist. He owed no rent for fasli 1345 or for any previous fasli but he did on the 3rd December, 1938, owe for faslis 1346 and 1347. On that date he made a payment declaring it to be in respect of fasli 1346 (S. 64 of the Madras Estates Land Act). The respondent sought to bring the property to sale in respect of fasli 1347 before the Special Deputy Collector. The petitioner claimed that, notwithstanding his declaration, the rent should be credited to fasli 1347 under S. 15 (3) of Act IV of 1938. The petition was rejected by the Special Deputy Collector. I think his order was right. S. 15 (3) no doubt exempts from consideration any agreement or any payment under S. 64 of the Madras Estates Land Act and enacts that "any payment of rent made by a tenant after the commencement of this Act shall be credited towards the rent due by him for fasli 1347." But sub-S. (3) is necessarily part of the main S. 15 and the proviso to sub-S. 1 of S. 15 quite clearly states that "no tenant shall have the benefit of this section", which must include in my judgment sub-S. (3), "unless he has paid in respect of his holding the rent due for fasli 1347 on or before the 30th September, 1938."

That had not been done in this case because the rent was paid on the 3rd December, 1938. It was argued that sub-S. (3) was a self-contained enactment and must be read by itself disregarding the rest of the section. It seems to me a strange proposition that when the beginning of a section expressly excludes from the whole operation of the section a person who has not satisfied a certain condition it should afterwards be argued that a sub-section of that section should be read entirely by itself. For this reason I consider that the order of the Special Deputy Collector was right and this petition must be dismissed with costs.

It has been further argued that the petitioner is not entitled to the benefit of this Act at all because he does not come under the conditions in S. 15 (1) there being no arrears for 1345 fasli or before; but I do not consider it necessary to decide this point in view of my decision on the main point argued.

Pardanashin lady—Execution of lease deed—Knowledge of contents—Burden of proof—Lady having derived advantage—Avoidance by reversioner.

It is of course true that the onus is upon one who sets up the validity of a lease granted by a pardanashin lady to prove that she understood the nature and effect of her act. But where no plea challenging the validity of the lease is made in the written statement the Court would be loth to entertain such a plea in a case where no complaint was made by the lady during her lifetime and where she had received and enjoyed the benefit of the rent for a number of years before her death. The contention that the lease was neither prudent nor for the benefit of the estate would not avoid the lease but merely make it voidable at the option of the reversioners on the determination of the life interest.

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna.

LORD PORTER.—The question for determination in the present case is whether a lease of a certain village in the district of Gaya in Behar is binding on the respondents.

The land involved had been the property of one Nebaran Chandra Biswas who died without issue leaving a widow Mussamat Srimati Kiransasi Dasi who had a Hindu widow's estate in the property after his death. On her death the respondents who were the reversioners of the estate to her late husband were entitled to the property.

The husband died in 1895. His widow was then about 24 years of age. On the 7th April, 1919, she executed a lease for 11 years of the village of Chokti Amarwan, Thana Nawaba in favour of the predecessor of the appellants at a yearly rent of Rs. 3,350 payable in five annual instalments. The lease provided that the tenant should deposit a sum of Rs. 3,350 to be held by the lessor without interest and that this sum should be restored to the tenant by a deduction from the three last instalments payable in each of the two last years of the lease. It also contained a number of covenants by the tenant imposing upon him obligations as to the cultivation, management and improvement of the land together with a liability to meet the outgoings except Government dues and to undertake the expense of certain costs of litigation.

The lease contains a statement signed by Amulya Krishna Mitra, pleader, Howrah Court, that it was read over and explained to the lessor, and it further bears an endorsement signed presumably by the Registrar of Calcutta or his representative to the effect that the lessor admitted the execution and that the Registrar was satisfied that the document had been executed voluntarily by her. The lease did not come to an end until May, 1930, and the widow died on the 12th September, 1924, some six years before its termination. After her death the appellants' predecessor admittedly remained in possession of the property until December, 1926, when the respondents dispossessed him.

Meanwhile on the 20th December, 1924, two of the respondents, namely, Prasanna Kumar Sur and Charoo Chandra Sur, executed a power of attorney in favour of Narendra Nath Neogi, the fourth defendant. The power of attorney is a limited one but at any rate entitled the grantee to collect money and give a receipt for it. The third defendant was not a party to this document but it appears from the evidence that he also gave a power of attorney which however was returned to him about a year after its execution and was not acted upon after that time.

Whatever the effect however of the powers of attorney, the fourth defendant appears to have managed the affairs of his co-defendants, including all that had to be done under the lease now in dispute, and to have received the rent payable under it. He so stated in evidence and was not contradicted and receipts dated the 4th November, 1925, and in March, June, July, September and October, 1926, were produced by him in corroboration of his story.

Shortly after the appellants' predecessor was dispossessed, a ryot of certain land in the village the subject-matter of the lease, instituted proceedings before the Sub-divisional Officer of Nawadah against the respondents asking for the division of the produce of the land between himself and the landlords under S. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. About the same time the appellants' predecessor began proceedings under the Code of Criminal Procedure alleging that he feared a breach of the peace by the respondents in connection with his possession of the village. In both these proceedings the respondents filed petitions in opposition alleging that the lease had terminated on the death of the widow, that they had thereafter orally granted two successive yearly leases to the appellants' predecessor, and that on the termination of the second had taken peaceful possession of the said village.

Thereafter on the 1st September, 1929, the appellants' predecessor instituted the present suit claiming mesne profits from the date of dispossession until the termination of the lease and a return of the deposit made in respect of rent at the beginning of the lease. In answer to that claim the respondents asserted that the widow did not act as a prudent manager in making the lease nor was it for the benefit of the estate, denied that they ever conferred any power or authority to the fourth defendant to ratify or grant leases, denied that they had themselves ever ratified the lease in question and said that they had withdrawn the powers of attorney, whatever their effect, by the 6th June, 1927. The defence contained no allegation that the widow had not properly understood or had not voluntarily executed the lease.

At the hearing of the suit the Subordinate Judge framed certain issues of which the following may be quoted:—

(2) Was the lease in question for justifying necessity and for the benefit of the estate?

(3) Did the respondents grant yearly leases to the plaintiff during the years 1332, 1333—that is, 1925 and 1926?

(4) Did the respondents 1 to 3 ratify and affirm the lease?

(5) Was the appellants' predecessor wrongly dispossessed from the year 1927?

(7) Was the appellants' predecessor entitled to mesne profits?

(8) To what relief, if any, was the appellant's predecessor entitled?

To these issues he answered that in the circumstances the lease was for justifying necessity and for the benefit of the estate, that the respondents had not granted yearly leases but had ratified and affirmed the original lease, that the appellants' predecessor was wrongly dispossessed from the year 1927 and that he was entitled to mesne profits and the return of three-quarters of the deposit.

On the 16th June, 1928, and before the date of the suit, the fourth defendant had sold his quarter share in the village to the appellants' predecessor. After the hearing he died and his name has been deleted from the record.

From the decree of the Subordinate Judge the other three defendants appealed to the High Court at Patna. Pending the hearing of the appeal the first defendant Prasanno Kumar Sur settled his differences with the appellants' predecessor and filed a compromise petition. The appeal was then proceeded with by the second and third defendants only.

The High Court allowed the appeal on two grounds. By the judgment which was delivered by Varma, J., it was held in the first place that the lease had not been ratified. That judgment did not in terms deal with the question whether the respondents had, as found by the Subordinate Judge, orally ratified the lease. The decision on this point was based solely on the fact that the only power of attorney produced was signed by two and not three of the respondents and that in any case it gave no power to grant or ratify leases and therefore, although the appellants' predecessor continued in possession for about two years after the death of the lessor, there was no ratification.

In the second place it was held that upon the evidence produced there was nothing to show that the lessor who was a purdanashin lady understood the nature of the transaction into which she was entering, and that amongst other things she had never been informed that in the lessee's view the property was capable of yielding an increased income of 50 to 100 per cent. as a result of a relatively small expenditure. It was therefore held that the lease was not only voidable as against the reversioners under the first ground, but void even as against the widow under the second.

So far as this latter ground is concerned their Lordships do not think it was open to the respondents to rely upon it in the High Court or before the Board. Such a plea if successful would avoid the lease ab initio. It is of course true that the onus is upon one who sets up the validity of a lease granted by a purdanashin lady to prove that she understood the nature and effect of her act. See Farid-un-nisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad. But no plea challenging the validity of the lease was made in the defendants' written statement and their Lordships would be loth to entertain such a plea in a case where no complaint was made by the lady during her lifetime, and where she had received and enjoyed the benefit of the rent for a number of years before her death.

The contention that the lease was neither prudent nor for the benefit of the estate would not avoid the lease but merely make it voidable at the option of the reversioners on the determination of the life interest.

Their Lordships have therefore first to determine whether the lease was prudent and beneficial, and secondly, if it was not proved to be so, whether the reversioners avoided or affirmed it.

The appellants urged that the lease was both prudent and beneficial. The evidence, they maintained, proved that the lady, being purdanashin and living in Calcutta whereas the estate was in the heart of Behar, would herself have great difficulty in managing it, that she had no relations competent to look after it, that the village was in fact not properly managed and the irrigation neglected, that the tenants were in many cases refractory, and that some half dozen litigious cases were pending between them and their landlady.

On the other hand the respondents contended that the evidence showed no exceptional difficulty in managing the estate, that the pending suits were mere assertions of the tenants' legal rights to have the produce of their holdings equitably apportioned between them and the lessor, and that even if it were true that the irrigation was somewhat neglected, much better terms could have been obtained from a lessee more especially as the appellants' predecessor by an expenditure of some eight or nine hundred rupees was able, on his own evidence, to increase the rent which he in his turn received from the occupiers to a sum of 9,000 to 12,000 rupees yearly. Moreover they said the lady had received Rs. 3,350 which in effect was advance rent and as a result her successors in each of the last two years of the tenancy would receive not Rs. 3,350 but that sum less Rs. 1,675, that is, Rs. 1,675 only.

Their Lordships are not convinced that the lease was either prudent or beneficial to the estate. In their view the management of the estate was not so difficult as to warrant the granting of a lease which after the expenditure of a relatively small sum left so large a profit in the hands of the grantee, and they are also influenced by the fact that the widow had received a sum of Rs. 3,350 which under the terms of the lease would diminish the rent receivable by that amount in the last two years during which it would run.

There remains however the question of confirmation. As to this the appellants submitted that though the power of attorney given to the fourth defendant which was produced bound only two of the three other defendants, yet a similar power of attorney was proved to have been given by the third defendant, and though these powers of attorney did not authorize the fourth defendant to grant or confirm leases yet they did authorize him to receive rent, that in fact the respondents left the fourth defendant to manage the estate for two years and must have known of the lease and that their manager was permitting the appellants' predecessor to continue to occupy the estate and receiving rent under it, and that the evidence established that all four defendants had orally confirmed the lease.

Out of the three defendants in question the first alone gave evidence, but it was maintained on their behalf that the Board should accept his statement that those three defendants never knew of or received any rent under the lease and that the lessee continued to hold not under the lease but under an oral agreement for a yearly tenancy.

Their Lordships are not prepared to accept the view that there was a specific affirmation of the tenancy either by the four defendants or indeed by the fourth defendant alone, nor do they place credence on the evidence that there was any agreement for a yearly tenancy. In their view the true inference is that the defendants were content to permit the fourth defendant to manage the estate and receive the rent with full knowledge of the existence of the tenancy, and that it was only when the lease was running to its end that, realizing the diminution in the rent which they were about to receive, they determined to put an end to the lease and dispossess the tenant. Their Lordships cannot accept the view that the tenant would without protest have accepted a yearly tenancy for so long as the respondents chose to grant one thereby foregoing all the advantage of the deposit which he had made.

It is said that this was not the case originally presented on behalf of the appellants, that the only contention was that the lease had been specifically affirmed and that their Lordships' Board should hold them strictly to the wording of the plaint. In their Lordships' opinion however an affirmation by conduct is not inconsistent with the contention and is implicit in the claim.

In support of his case the appellants' predecessor, in addition to producing the receipts for rent given him by the fourth defendant, put before the Court a wasilbaki account dated the 2nd April, 1925, and purporting to be a settlement of accounts in respect of the years 1923, 1924 and part of 1925. This document contains credits for payment of rent in respect of periods before and after the death of the widow and treats them as part of one running account. It is therefore said to show a recognition and affirmation of the lease. Their Lordships are not however prepared to accept this evidence. There is force in the argument presented by the respondents that if this account had been as it purported to be, in existence at the time of the proceedings before the Sub-divisional Officer it would then have been produced in support of the appellants' predecessor's claim that he was entitled to possession of the village. But even if it was then in existence, the fourth defendant did not write it himself nor did he fully understand the language in which it was written, and it is by no means clear that it was prepared with the assent of the other three defendants.

Apart from the support of this document however, their Lordships take the view that the evidence sufficiently established that the defendants were content to treat the lease as binding upon them and to receive the rent due under it. The High Court in coming to their conclusion do not appear to have considered the question of affirmation by conduct. In terms, at any rate, all they purported to decide was that the power of attorney or powers of attorney gave no authority to the fourth defendant to confirm the lease. That finding no doubt is accurate, but for the reasons given it is not conclusive of the matter.

If then, as their Lordships think, the appellants' predecessor was entitled to enjoy the lease until the end of the term, there remains the question as to how the mesne profits are to be calculated. The learned Subordinate Judge has passed a decree for a refund of three-quarters of the deposit of Rs. 3,350 and for mesne profits for the years 1927 to 1930, crediting, however, the first three defendants with any collection of rent made by the plaintiff for the year 1927.

In substance this decree is right but in form it is wrong. The appellants are not entitled to a return of the deposit or any portion of it. They are, however, entitled in taking an account of the mesne profits to the difference between the rent the respondents would have received had their predecessor been left in possession, and the amount which those respondents in fact received whether in money or kind or otherwise by reason of their possession of the estate. The rent which they would have received from the appellants' predecessor, however, would not have been Rs. 3,350 in each of the last two years, but Rs. 1,675 only.

Upon this basis the appellants are entitled to mesne profits for the period beginning with the date at which their predecessor was dispossessed and ending with the termination of the lease together with interest on such mesne profits—Interest should be at 5 per cent. and calculated yearly. But they are not entitled to the whole 16 anna share since the first and fourth defendants have now compromised the matter. They should therefore receive only an 8 anna share of the total amount ascertained as aforesaid.

In substance the appellants have succeeded in their appeal and should receive costs both before their Lordships' Board and in the High Court.

In accordance with the views they have expressed their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed, the decree of the High Court be reversed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge be varied, that the suit be decreed against the second and third defendants for half of the mesne profits accruing to the respondents by reason of the dispossession of the appellants' predecessor from the beginning of the fasli year 1334 to the end of the fasli year 1337 together with interest thereon at 5 per cent. calculated yearly—half the collection of rent (if any) made by the appellants' predecessor for the fasli year 1334 to be calculated in favour of the respondents.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge as to costs will be restored and the respondents must pay the appellants' costs in the High Court and before their Lordships' Board.

The order of the Court was made by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The petitioner is the trustee of the Sri Koppudayanayagi Amman temple, Karaikudi. In front of this temple and vested in the Municipal Council of Karaikudi is a tank, measuring 266 feet by 272 feet. The tank was in an insanitary condition and the cost of putting it into a proper condition and of so maintaining it was said to be too costly. Consequently the Municipal Council decided to reduce the size of the tank to 125 feet by 125 feet. The petitioner objected, and moved the Provincial Government to interfere under the powers conferred upon it by S. 36 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920. He asked for a direction that the tank be maintained at its original size. As the result of the petitioner's representations the Government decided that the Municipal Council should only reduce the size of the tank to 218 feet by 208 feet. The Municipal Council had not been given an opportunity of stating its case and it applied to the Government to revise its order. After hearing what the Municipal Council had to say the Government, by an order dated the 5th June, 1939, cancelled its previous order and allowed the Municipal Council to reduce the size of the tank to 125 feet by 125 feet, as it had proposed. The petitioner now asks the Court to issue a writ of certiorari against the Government and quash its order of the 5th June, 1939. The order, as required by S. 59 of the Government of India Act, 1935, was issued in the name of the Governor of the Province. In Penugonda Venkataratnam v. Secretary of State for India in Council, a Bench of this Court held that the Court had no jurisdiction to issue a writ against the Governor under S. 106 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1915, and no jurisdiction to issue a writ against the Governor "acting with the Ministers," which was the application in that case. The petitioner says that inasmuch as he is not asking for a writ to issue against the Governor, but only against the Provincial Government, his application does not fall within that decision and that it lies by reason of the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935. He contends further that the Government has no power to revise its own order.

Leach, C.J.

The position under the Government of India Act, 1935, is not here different from the position under the Government of India Act, 1915, and it is abundantly clear that this Court has no power to issue a writ of certiorari in this case. By virtue of S. 223 of the Government of India Act, 1935, this Court possesses just the same powers as it had before that Act came into force. By virtue of S. 106 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1915, it had the jurisdiction and powers vested in it by the Letters Patent. In order to ascertain what those powers were we have got to go back to the provisions of the Charter of the Supreme Court, which was granted on the 26th December, 1800. The Charter of the Supreme Court expressly provided that it was not competent for the Court to hear or determine, or entertain or exercise jurisdiction in a suit or action against the Governor-General or Fort William, or the Governor, or any member of the Council for or on account of anything done by them in their public capacity or "acting as Governor-General, or Governor and Council." The Supreme Court was replaced by the High Court after the passing of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. S. 9 of that Act provided that the High Courts established under the Act should have and exercise such civil, criminal, admiralty and vice-admiralty, testamentary, intestate and matrimonial jurisdiction, original and appellate, and such powers and authority for and in relation to the administration of justice in the Presidency for which it was established as Her Majesty might grant and save as the Letters Patent might otherwise direct and, subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers of the Governor-General of India in Council in relation to such matters, should have and exercise the jurisdiction of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished by the Act. The Letters Patent granted to this Court under that Act did not enlarge the powers of the Court by taking away the restrictions imposed by the Charter of the Supreme Court. The restrictions consequently remained. S. 110 of the Government of India Act, 1915, expressly provided that the Governor-General, each Governor, and the members of their respective executive councils should not be subject to the jurisdiction of a High Court by reason of anything counselled, ordered or done by any of them in his public capacity only. The corresponding section in the Act of 1935 is S. 306 which states that no proceedings whatsoever shall lie in and no process whatsoever shall issue from any Court in India against the Governor-General, against the Governor of a Province or against the Secretary of State whether in a personal capacity or otherwise. There are these statutory provisions and the prohibition in the Supreme Court Charter a prohibition which was not removed by the Letters Patent of the High Court. The position in this respect is therefore the same as it was in 1800.

While accepting this to be the case so far as the Governor is concerned the learned Advocate for the petitioner says that by virtue of S. 49 of the Government of India Act, 1935, he is entitled to the issue of the writ against the Provincial Government. S. 49 says that the executive authority of a Province shall be exercised on behalf of His Majesty by the Governor, either directly or through officers subordinate to him, but nothing in the section shall prevent the Federal or the Provincial Legislature from conferring functions upon subordinate authorities or be deemed to transfer to the Governor any functions conferred by any existing Indian Law on any Court, Judge, or officer or any local or other authority. It is argued that this section expressly prevents the Governor from issuing an order under S. 36 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, and that the Provincial Government alone can issue it. This is a far-fetched argument. The Provincial Government has full power under S. 36 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, to control the actions of a Municipal Council. S. 59 requires all executive action of the Government of a Province to be taken in the name of the Governor and the order in question, being an executive order lawfully passed and lawfully issued in the name of the Governor and therefore his order, the Court has no power to interfere with it. It is impossible to differentiate between the Governor and the Provincial Government in a matter of the nature of the one now before us. S. 49 has no bearing on the question.

Leach, C.J.

Even if this Court has power to issue a writ of certiorari in this matter—I am firmly of the opinion that it has not—this is not a case in which it should exercise it. The order was within the limits of authority and it cannot be said with reason that the Government has no power to cancel or vary its own executive order. If it had not this power a wrong would be without a remedy, which is contrary to all principle.

For the above reasons this application must be dismissed with costs, two sets, one set in favour of the first respondent and the other set in favour of the other two respondents.

Pending the hearing of this application an interim injunction was issued restraining the Chairman and the Commissioner of the Municipality, the second and the third respondents, from further filling up the tank. As the result of the dismissal of this application the injunction will be dissolved. The second and third respondents are entitled to their costs in the injunction application.

Byre Gowdu

Held, that the proper inference to be drawn was that the testator authorised each of the widows to adopt, the procedure contemplated being that prescribed by the ordinary rules of Hindu law, namely, that the senior widow should have the right to adopt which would pass to the junior widow only if the senior widow refused to adopt or consented to an adoption by her co-widow.

C. S. Venkatachariar and D. Ramaswami Aiyangar for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question of the validity of an adoption. The properties in question formed part of the estate of one Sampanghi Rame Gowdu who had a son, Byre Gowdu. The father and the son separated and it was agreed as one of the terms of the partition that the father's estate should be held during his lifetime by his second wife Lakshmakkal and on her death should go to Byre Gowdu, the son by the first wife. Lakshmakkal during her lifetime transferred those properties to her nephew the first defendant. Byre Gowdu had two wives, the first was the plaintiff and the second was one Ramakkal. Neither of them had any children. Byre Gowdu died in 1909 leaving a will which concludes with the following sentence:

" if after my lifetime, both of you (that is, the two wives) do not agree to live together dividing the said properties into two equal shares, you shall separately make adoptions."

Apparently this was regarded as giving each of the widows power to adopt without regard to the other. At any rate in 1909 shortly after the death of Byre Gowdu, the junior widow, Ramakkal adopted the second defendant. There is no doubt about the fact of the adoption, which is embodied in a deed, Ex. II. At the time of the adoption, the two wives who are sisters were living together. The plaintiff made no objection to the adoption; but it has been found as a fact that she did not consent to it. The adopted son lived with the two widows for many years without his status being questioned. However, after the first defendant got a transfer of Lakshmakkal's property, he also got a surrender from the second defendant of the latter's interest thereon. Ramakkal died in 1930 and Lakshmakkal died in 1932. Byre Gowdu's father had died long before. So that at the time of the suit there were living, the plaintiff who is the senior widow of Byre Gowdu, the second defendant adopted by the junior widow Ramakkal and the first defendant, the nephew and transferee of Byre Gowdu's father's second wife.

Byra Gondu
v.
Muniammal.

We are no longer concerned with the plaintiff's right to the half of Lakshmakkal's property which goes to her as the widow of her husband. The appeal relates only to the right of the plaintiff to the half of the property which would have devolved upon Ramakkal had she been alive when Lakshmakkal died and is now claimed to have devolved upon the first defendant by reason of the surrender by the second defendant, the adopted son of Ramakkal.

The main question in the appeal is whether this adoption was valid. Fortunately there is no longer any difficulty about the facts and the only trouble relates to the effect of the provision in Byre Gowdu's will, Ex. B, which has already been extracted authorising each of the widows to adopt. It seems to me that this difficulty can be resolved by reference to authorities. The Privy Council in Akhoy Chunder Bagchi v. Kalapahar Hajji, dealing with a case in which two widows were each authorised to make adoptions and in pursuance of that authority made simultaneous adoptions, held firstly that the instrument should be construed on the assumption that the person giving the authority intended his widows to do that which the law allowed and not to do something which was if not absolutely illegal, very unusual and not practiced among Hindus. Secondly, their Lordships held that simultaneous adoptions by two widows were contrary to law.

Next there is the case of *Bijoy Krishna Karmakar v. Ranjit Lal Karmakar*², the decision being confirmed in appeal by the Bench whose judgment is reported in *Ranjit Lal Karmakar v. Bijoy Krishna Karmakar*³. That case concerned an instrument

2. (1911) I.L.R. 38 Cal. 694. 3. (1912) I.L.R. 39 Cal. 582.

Byra Gouda
v.
Muniammal.

which authorised two widows to act according to their religious tenets by adopting three sons successively. It was held following the Privy Council decision just cited that the instrument must be read not as authorising an illegal simultaneous adoption but as giving power of adoption to the widows successively and that this being so the elder widow had the prior right to exercise the power of adoption and that the younger widow had no right to adopt before the elder widow had exhausted her right or refused to use it. The reasoning is that such a construction is not contrary to the terms of the instrument and is in accordance with the ordinary rule of Hindu law, which may be assumed to have been in the mind of the person giving the authority at the time when the instrument was drafted. The confirming decision has been quoted with approval in a Madras case *Rajah Venkatappa Nayanam Bahadur v. Ranga Rao*¹, though the point actually arising in that case was rather different.

It seems to me that these decisions dispose of the contention that the adoption of the second defendant by Ramakkal was valid. Ex. B on its face might be read as authorising each of the widows to make an adoption either simultaneously or one after the other, in which case there might be living contemporaneously two adopted sons to one man, a notion repugnant to Hindu law. Similarly it is contrary to the ordinary rule of Hindu law that when there are two widows they should be permitted to indulge in an unseemly scramble for priority in adopting a son to their deceased husband, the rule being that in such a case the senior widow should have the right which will only pass to the junior widow if the senior widow refuses to adopt or consents to an adoption by her co-widow. Applying this rule to the construction of Ex. B, we must, I think, infer an intention to authorise each of the widows to adopt, the procedure contemplated being that prescribed by the ordinary rules of Hindu law whereby the refusal to adopt by the senior widow or her consent would be a necessary preliminary to a valid adoption by the junior widow. On the findings of fact it must be held that there was no such refusal to adopt by the plaintiff nor was there any consent to the adoption. It follows that the adoption is invalid.

1. (1915) 29 M.L.J. 18: I.L.R. 39 Mad. 772.

It has also been contended that the second defendant would be entitled to the property if not as an adopted son at least as a persona designata. There is no force in this contention. The deed of adoption Ex. II makes it clear that the rights thereby conferred upon the second defendant are conferred solely and only by virtue of the adoption made under it. It is not the case of a gift to an individual with an erroneous description of that individual but a case of the performance of a formal act by virtue of which, the rights in the property would accrue. The formal act being invalid no rights can pass under it.

Byra Gouda

In the result therefore the appeal is dismissed with costs of the first respondent (plaintiff).

v.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellants for a declaration of their title to the wall existing between their house and the house belonging to the respondents and for an injunction restraining the respondents from letting the water from the terrace of their house into the appellants' property.

The trial Court dismissed the suit and on appeal the parties filed a joint memo. agreeing to a certain arrangement regarding the disposal of the water falling from the terrace of the respondents' house and this arrangement was directed to be incorporated in the decree and no question now arises as to that part of the case. As regards the wall in dispute, the learned Subordinate Judge found that it belonged to the appellants and accordingly decreed that part of the appellants' claim. This was on the 23rd September, 1935. After the judgment was signed and the decree also was issued in accordance with the judgment, the respondents filed I. A. No. 68 of 1935 on the 15th of October, 1935, in which they prayed for a re-hearing of the appeal. The ground of the prayer was that though the trial Court had found that the wall belonged to the respondents, their advocate represented to the Court that they would have no objection to the wall being held to be a common wall and that under the impression that the Court would, in consequence of this concession, give a finding accordingly, he did not meet the points mentioned by the appellants' advocate, though he had arguments to urge in support of the finding of the trial Court. The respondents having denied the allegations in the appellants' affidavit in support of the prayer for re-hearing, the lower appellate Court apparently called for a statement from the Counsel on both sides as to what exactly happened at the previous hearing and a joint statement was filed on the 30th of October, 1935, and this was supplemented by a further explanatory statement by the respondents' Counsel. Thereupon, the Court below passed the following order on I. A. No. 68 of 1935 on the 31st of October, 1935:—

"In view of the joint statement filed by the learned Advocates that appeared for the parties and of the explanatory statement filed by the learned Advocate for the applicant, I think it fair and just that he should be given an opportunity to argue his case fully. The appeal will therefore be posted for re-hearing on 21st November."

The appeal was thus re-heard and the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the wall in dispute was a common wall belonging to both the parties and passed a decree accordingly in supersession of his earlier decree.

Govinda Chettyar
v.
Varadappa
Chettyar.

The present appeal is directed against the decree passed on re-hearing and the only point urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the lower appellate Court had no jurisdiction after it delivered and signed the judgment on the 23rd September, 1935, to alter it in any manner, in view of the provisions of O. 20, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, and that therefore the revised decree passed by the lower appellate Court as a result of the re-hearing on the 21st November, 1935, is one passed without jurisdiction and cannot stand. The appellants' Counsel has relied upon several decisions showing that after a judgment has been signed by the Judge, he has no authority to alter it except as provided by S. 152 or O. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But it is unnecessary to discuss these decisions as, in my view, the respondents' contention that the present case could be regarded as coming within the provisions of O. 47 and that though this provision was not referred in the respondents' application for re-hearing, I. A. No. 68 of 1935, the decree of the Court below can be sustained as one made on review, is correct and must be accepted in the circumstances of the case.

The appellants' counsel objects that having regard to the Privy Council decision in *Chhaju Ram v. Neki*¹, holding that the expression "any other sufficient reason" in O. 47, r. 1 must be taken as meaning "a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously," the power of review conferred by that provision cannot appropriately be invoked in this case. I am unable to agree. I cannot see why the facts disclosed in the statements of the learned Counsel who appeared for the parties in the Court below which were accepted and acted upon by that Court should not be held to be a sufficient reason for reviewing the judgment delivered on 23rd September, 1935, even according to the restricted interpretation placed upon r. 1 of O. 47 in Chhaju Ram v. Neki. There was of course no mistake or error apparent on the face of the record in this case. If there were, that would obviously be a sufficient ground by itself for a review. But the misapprehension owing to which the learned Counsel for the respondents says he did not urge all his arguments in support of the finding recorded in favour of his clients by the first Court, and the consequent erroneous impression on the part of the learned Subordinate Judge for which, of course, he was not at all to blame but the Counsel was alone responsible—that the latter had no arguments to urge to meet the points raised by the appellants' Counsel seem, to my mind, to be analogous enough to an error apparent on the face of the record to be a sufficient reason for review under O. 47, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. The decisions in Kyone Hoe Tsee v. Kyon Soon Sun and Nagabhushanam v. Jagannaikulu, which recognise a power of review in cases of mistake of Counsel or mistake of the Judge leading to errors in the judgment though not apparent on the face of the record, seem to support this conclusion.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

18th August, 1939.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the petitioner. He claimed to be the beneficial owner of the amount for which a promissory note was executed by the second defendant in favour of the first defendant. The trial Court has disbelieved the plaintiff's case against the first defendant. The finding of the trial Court is recorded in these terms:

Veera-
swami
v.
Mangamma.

"I find disbelieving the evidence on behalf of plaintiff that the arrangement set up by plaintiff with reference to the suit pronote, Ex. B is not true, that first defendant had nothing to do with it, that she was not a trustee in respect thereof, and that she cannot be in any manner made liable for the amount due on the pronote Ex. B."

This finding so far as the first defendant is concerned cannot be seriously questioned, seeing that it is a finding of fact which is based upon the evidence placed before the trial Court.

At the trial, the plaintiff wanted a decree against the second defendant on this promissory note. The trial Court has held following certain decisions of this High Court that in view of the provisions of S. 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, since the plaintiff was neither the payee nor the holder of the promissory note in question, a decree could not be passed in plaintiff's favour and against the maker of the promissory note. This finding of the trial Court is attacked by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-petitioner. He relies upon the decisions reported in *Surajman Prasad Misra v. Sadanand Misra*¹, *Sewa Ram v. Hoti Lal*², *Brojo Lal Saha Banikya v. Budh Nath Pyarilal & Co.*³ and argues that, although a valid discharge in respect of a promissory note can be given only by the payee or the holder thereof, yet when the maker of the note, the holder of the note and the person who alleges that he is beneficially entitled to the amount of the note are all before Court, there is nothing wrong in the Court deciding the question of benami raised by the parties and passing a decree in favour of the beneficial owner, if it is satisfied that his version is really true. It is not possible for me to accept these contentions in view of the observations contained in the Full Bench decision of this High Court reported in *Subba Narayana Vathiar v. Ramaswami Aiyar*⁴, and the decision reported in Chinna

1. (1932) I.L.R. 11 Pat. 616.

*Kushandai v. Kushandai Veeraswami*¹. This High Court has consistently taken the view that S. 78 of the Negotiable Instruments Act should be strictly construed and that a valid discharge can be given only by the payee of a promissory note or the holder thereof, there being no such thing for this purpose as a benami promissory note taken in the name of one person but really meant for the benefit of another. In these circumstances especially in view of the frame of the suit I am not satisfied that the decision of the trial Court is wrong. Surety bond—Small cause suit—Third party guaranteeing appearance of defendant—Plaint returned for want of jurisdiction—Plaint re-presented to same Court on original side—Surety's obligation—Whether continues.

The appellant filed a small cause suit and applied for the arrest of the defendant before judgment. The respondent gave a surety bond in order to secure the release of the defendant. The essential terms of the bond were that the respondent undertook that the defendant would appear at every hearing until the case was finished, and if there was any decree in the case the respondent undertook that the defendant would appear whenever required until the decree was settled and that if he failed to appear the respondent would produce him under the orders of the Court, and that if he failed to produce him he would be liable for any decree which might be passed. The Court trying the small cause suit held that it had no jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation as an original suit. The plaint was re-presented on the original side of the same Court and the trial proceeded without any fresh bond being taken from the surety.

Held, that the bond given by the respondent could not be taken to cover the subsequent original suit into which the small cause suit became transmuted.

It cannot be taken as in the contemplation of the surety when he guarantees the appearance of the defendant in a particular case that the bond will also cover the appearance of the defendant in another case in a different Court though on the same cause of action. And it makes no difference that the plaint is re-presented on the original side of the same Court in which it was first of all filed as a small cause.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question how a surety bond given by a third party for the appearance of the defendant, is affected by the return of the plaint for presentation in another Court having jurisdiction. The appellant filed a small cause suit and applied for the arrest of the defendant before judgment. The respondent gave a bond in order to secure the release of the defendant. The essential terms of this bond are that the respondent undertakes that the defendant will appear at every hearing till the case is finished, that if there is a decree in this case against the defendant the respondent undertakes that the defendant will appear whenever required until the decree is settled, that if he fails to appear the respondent will produce him under the orders of the Court and that if he fails to produce him, he will be liable for any decree which may be passed. Both the Courts below have agreed that no special significance is to be attached to the use of the word 'மொழி' (number) in the bond and that it does not mean anything more than "case" and has no reference to the precise number given to the case. That view of the local use of the word 'number' in Tamil with reference to a litigation is undoubtedly correct.

Ghouse.

The Court trying the small cause suit held that it had no jurisdiction and returned the plaint for presentation as an original suit. The plaint was accordingly re-presented on the original side of the same Court and the trial proceeded without any fresh bond being taken from the surety. The only question is whether this bond given by the respondent to guarantee the appearance of the defendant in the case can be taken to cover the subsequent original suit into which the small cause suit became transmuted.

There is no direct authority. Cases have been quoted in which it has been held that when a suit is dismissed and restored to file by the Court which dismissed it or when a suit is dismissed and restored by the appellate Court, the bond of a surety for the satisfaction of the decree enures to the benefit of the plaintiff in the restored suit—Veeraswami v. Ramanna and Irangauda v. Irbasappa. In both these cases it is apparent that the restored suit is a continuation of the original proceedings and that when a party gives a bond for the performance of any obligation which may result from a pending suit, he will normally be taken to contemplate the possibility of that suit undergoing various vicissitudes in the Court in which it has been filed and the Court to which an appeal lies. The position is to my mind, quite different when a third party gives a bond guaranteeing the appearance of a defendant in a particular action and in proceedings in execution of the decree in that action and the action is terminated by a finding that the Court has no jurisdiction with a direction to the plaintiff to seek his remedy in another Court having jurisdiction. The return of the plaint terminates the litigation and the re-presentation of the plaint in a different Court in effect starts a fresh litigation on the same cause of action. It cannot be taken as in the contemplation of the surety when he guarantees the appearance of the defendant in a particular case that the bond will also cover the appearance of the defendant in another case in a different Court though on the same cause of action; and I do not think it makes any difference that the plaint is re-presented on the original side of the same Court in which it was first of all filed as a small cause. There has been a change in the proceedings in which the defendant is required to appear. The change in the present case is a change from the more or less summary proceedings of a small cause into an action under the ordinary procedure with all the elaborations which that procedure entails. On the principle of S. 133 of the Contract Act, this change, to my mind, discharges the surety. In this view, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 4 (c)—Applicability—Chatram managed by District Board—Arrears of rent payable to Board in respect of Chatram property—Protection under Act—Whether can be invoked by agriculturist debtor.

Cl. (c) of S. 4 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act is worded as comprehensively as possible and comprehends any money due to a local authority. Where the administration of a Chatram is made over by the Board of Revenue to a District Board under S. 63 of the Madras Local Boards Act, the identity of the Chatram is for all relevant purposes merged in the Local Authority and the income from the Chatram is part of the District fund. Consequently an agriculturist owing money to the Board by way of arrears of rent in respect of Chatram property leased to him by the Board is placed outside the protection of the Act because of S. 4 (c) of the Act.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Pattukottai dated 19th September, 1938 and made in E. A. No. 197 of 1938 in E. P. No. 290 of 1938 in S. C. S. No. 293 of 1937.

T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar for Petitioner.

Respondent not represented.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This Civil Revision Petition raises a nice question under S. 4, cl. (c) of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act of 1938 read with certain provisions of the Madras Local Boards Act. The respondent has unfortunately not been represented but I have the advantage of hearing Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar who has placed before me all the relevant provisions of the Acts relating to the matter under consideration.

The only facts that need be stated are that under S. 63 of the Madras Local Boards Act the administration of the Mukthambalpuram Chatram at Orathanad was made over by the Board of Revenue to the District Board. The defendant is a lessee of certain properties, part of the trust, and a decree has been obtained against him by the District Board of West Tanjore in respect of arrears due under the lease. The defendant calls in aid the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. It is conceded that he is an agriculturist within the meaning of that Act but the petitioners rely upon the provisions of S. 4, cl. (c) which, they say, places the respondent outside the protection of the Act. S. 4 reads as follows:—

"Nothing in this Act shall affect debts and liabilities of an agriculturist falling under the following heads:—

(c) any tax or cess payable to any local authority or any other sum due to them, by way of loan or otherwise."

It will be seen that cl. (c) of S. 4 is worded as comprehensively as possible and seems to me to comprehend any money due to a local authority, but the learned District Munsif has taken the view that the respondent is entitled to the protection of the Agriculturists' Relief Act because, to put it shortly, the amount due from him is not money due to a local authority but money due to this Chatram itself. The learned Munsif has dealt with the matter with the utmost care but I am unable to share the view which he has taken of this question.

The relevant provisions of the Madras Local Boards Act are as follows:—S. 63 provides for the Board of Revenue making over to Local Boards the management and superintendence of any charitable endowment in respect of which powers and duties attach to the Board of Revenue under the provisions of the Madras Endowments and Escheats Regulation, 1817. "Thereupon" says the section, "all powers and duties which attach to the Board of Revenue in respect thereof shall attach to the Local Board as if it had been specially named in the said Regulation, and the Local Board shall manage and superintend such endowment". S. 64 says:

"A Local Board may accept trusts relating exclusively to the furtherance of any purpose to which its funds may be applied."

So it would seem that under S. 63 there is power given to the Board of Revenue to make over to the Local Board the management and superintendence of any charitable endowment. Under S. 64, a Local Board can accept trusts relating exclusively to the furtherance of any purpose to which its funds may be applied. S. 112 sets out the purpose to which local funds may be applied and under cl. (iii), sub-S. 1 of that section one of those purposes is for the construction and maintenance of choultries. S. 114 says:

"There shall be constituted for each district a district fund and for each village a village fund."

S. 115 states:

"The rules embodied in Sch. V regarding . . . district funds respectively, and regarding the administration of those funds, shall be read as part of this chapter."

The provisions of the schedule are of the utmost importance in arriving at a decision in this petition. It will be seen at the top of Sch. V that first the words appear "it shall be the duty of every Local Board to provide for the payment of" and then a number of matters are set out. Under I-B:

"A District Board shall have power to make such provision as it thinks fit for carrying out the requirements of the District in respect of the following matters. . . . (c) the establishment and maintenance of choultries in the District classified as District choultries."

And it is well to recall that S. 112, as I have pointed out, states that the funds received under the Act may be applied for the purpose of choultries among others. Under the heading "District funds" is found item 9 "Income from endowments and trusts under the management of the District Board"; and Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has naturally relied very strongly on that provision because obviously if these charitable funds are made part of the income of the District Board, it should necessarily follow that all the provisions for the recovery of that income should be opened to the District Board itself.

District Board of West Tanjore
v.
Ponnuswami
Pallavarayar.

Now those are the provisions and of course at this stage there has yet been no decision on the matter at all. The only decision that has been referred to is in *Neelayathakshi Ammal v. The Taluk Board, Mayavaram*¹, which is of interest because it will be seen that the Bench consisting of Benson and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ., took the view that when a charity was handed over to a local authority the local authority was absolved from the actual provisions of the deed dedicating the charity. That of course is no direct authority but it seems to convey to my mind the notion that when these charities are handed over they to a large extent lose their identity and become part of the local authority at least to this extent that it was held it was not necessary that accounts should be made accessible to all persons as would have been the case if it had not been handed over. At p. 336, the Bench uses these words:

"The duty to keep and give inspection of accounts is part of the function of management. When it is transferred by a special law to a statutory body, we must look to that law and not to the instrument of trust for the duties of the manager."

The reason why the lower Court in this case decided against the petitioner can, I think, be shortly stated. The learned Judge takes the view in paragraph 9 that there is a distinction between funds receivable under S. 64 of the Local Boards Act and S. 63. The learned Judge also takes the view that:

"Under S. 64 of the Local Boards Act, a Local Board can accept a trust if its income can be utilised exclusively for the purposes laid down in the Act. If the donor wants to endow the Local Boards with an endowment with the object of utilising its funds for purposes other than the purposes for which the Local Board's own income can be utilised, then the Local Board cannot accept such an endowment. There the case laid down under S. 63 is different from the one in S. 64."

District Board of West
Tanjore
v.
Ponnu-swami Pallava-rayar.

I have endeavoured to indicate that in my view the only difference between Ss. 63 and 64 is that S. 63 provides for the transfer of trusts by the Board of Revenue; S. 64 enables the local authority to accept trusts provided that they relate exclusively to the furtherance of any purpose to which its funds may be applied. Of course, a choultry would come under that provision because one of the things which the Local Board may do is to provide choultries. But the learned Judge has distinguished between funds derivable under transactions under these two sections although he seems to concede that if the funds, the subject of this case, come under Schedule V (9) then the respondent would have been unable to invoke the Agriculturists Relief Act. It seems to me clear that income from endowments and trusts under the management of a District Board comprise income from endowments and trusts whether derived by reason of the operation of S. 63 or S. 64. That income is the District fund. It is recoverable and must be recoverable only by the local authority. I cannot see how it can be possibly said that that is not a sum due to them, namely, the local authority. It seems to me that for all relevant purposes the identity of the chatram is merged in the local authority and I can imagine nothing more inconvenient than that the position should be that for the purpose of recovering this particular item of the Board's funds the Board should be placed in one position but in respect of amounts due to them from the public in another. In view of the facts I think that the order of the lower Court should not be allowed to stand. The learned Munsif obviously withheld jurisdiction vested in him and in consequence his order will be set aside.

The petition is allowed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family of brothers and their sons—Insolvency of brothers alone—Contract to sell entered into by brothers prior to insolvency—

Attachment of son's interests by money decree-holder after insolvency—Later application by contractee for specific performance—Insolvency Court ordering Official Receiver to execute sale deed—Sale thereon by receiver after attachment—Sale if contrary to attachment—Sale under orders of Court if differs for this purpose from voluntary sale—Rule in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun—Proper interpretation of—Claim petition by Official Receiver in execution of money decree—If precludes purchaser from claiming rights under the sale.

Diravyam
Pillai
v.
Veeranani
Ambalam.

The suit properties belonged to a joint Hindu family which consisted of five brothers and the sons of four of them. D and another had obtained a decree for money payable by the five brothers personally and from out of the family properties in the hands of the five brothers and their sons. In execution of that decree, they attached only the interests of the sons in the joint family properties on 15th March, 1933, as by that time in June, 1927, itself the brothers had been adjudicated insolvents. Before the insolvency petition was filed, three of the brothers had, on 24th July, 1926, entered into a contract to sell the suit properties to V and under orders of the Insolvency Court passed on the application by V claiming specific performance, the sale deed was executed by the Official Receiver only on the 6th November, 1931. The decree-holders contended that the sale was invalid as by virtue of the attachment of the son's interest before the sale deed was executed the power of the brothers and of the Official Receiver as representing their estate to convey the son's shares must be deemed to have come to an end.

Held, (1) that as there was in existence in this case, prior to the attachment, a contract of sale entered into by the brothers at the time when the family was joint and they had the power to sell also the son's interests in the properties, the sale in pursuance thereof is not one contrary to the terms of S. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and is not therefore affected by the attachment. The right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation. Therefore a sale by the contracting parties in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell cannot be said to prejudice the attaching creditor. There is no distinction for this purpose between a conveyance voluntarily executed by the judgment-debtor and one executed by him under an order of Court.

(2) The proper interpretation of the rule in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun, (1885) L.R. 13 I.A. 1: I.L.R. 13 Cal. 21 (P.C.), is that to the extent required to satisfy the father's proper debts, the father and his creditors are entitled to ignore the son's coparcenary rights in the family property.

Mr. Justice Chandavarkar's observation in Subraya v. Nagappa, (1908) I.L.R. 33 Bom. 264, discussed and doubted.

At one stage of the execution of the money decree, the Official Receiver had intervened with a claim petition claiming the proceeds of sale of the shares of the sons himself on behalf of the creditors but the claim was dismissed. It was contended that that precluded V from contending to the contrary as he derives his title from a sale deed by the Official Receiver.

Held, that in the claim proceedings the Official Receiver acted for the general body of creditors and not V, who claims under a contract which, if held binding on the estate will be binding on the Official Receiver as well and include the whole interest in the suit items. Further the Official Receiver is here only carrying out an obligation incurred by the insolvent prior to insolvency.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura in O. S. No. 90 of 1932.

T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar and N. Sivaramakrishna Aiyar for Appellants.

V. Ramaswami Aiyar, S. Kuppuswami and A. Bhujanga Rao for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Varada-

Varadachariar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the predecessor-in-title of respondents 1 to 5 for obtaining a declaration that he was the full owner of the suit properties and for setting aside an order passed on 14th September, 1931, dismissing a claim petition that he had filed. The suit properties belonged to a joint Hindu family which consisted of five brothers and the sons of four of them. Defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the present suit are four of the brothers; another brother Sundararaja Aiyar had died before suit. Defendants 7 to 12 are the sons of four of the brothers. The appellants who were defendants 1 and 2 in the lower Court had obtained a decree for money payable by the five brothers personally and from out of the properties of the joint family in the hands of the five brothers and their sons. In execution of that decree, the appellants attached the interests of the sons in the joint family properties. This attachment which was made on 15th March, 1930, was advisedly limited to the interests of the sons, because, in the meanwhile, the five brothers had been adjudicated insolvents and their interests were being administered in insolvency. The present plaintiff's claim as against the attachment made by the appellants was based upon an alleged contract for the sale of the suit property to him for Rs. 30,000; it was stated that this contract had been entered into by defendants 3 and 4 and their deceased brother on 24th July, 1926. It was the plaintiff's case that in pursuance of this contract a sum of more than Rs. 28,000 had been paid to the vendors even before 12th April, 1927, the date fixed for the completion of the contract, that after the expiry of the time fixed, the vendors had been delaying the execution of the sale deed on account of certain domestic reasons, that in June, 1927, a creditor of the vendors presented a petition to adjudicate them insolvents, that accordingly the execution of the sale deed was further delayed and that finally under orders of the Insolvency Court passed on an application filed by the plaintiff claiming specific performance, a sale deed was executed by the Official Receiver on 6th November, 1931. The plaintiff further alleged that, even before he became aware of the presentation of the insolvency petition, he had paid to the vendors the balance still remaining due, that he had already been put in possession of the property and had been in enjoyment thereof, that the moneys received by the vendors in pursuance of the contract of sale had been utilised by them for paying off family debts binding on the sons as well and that therefore the contract of sale and the sale-deed subsequently executed by the Official Receiver were operative to vest in the plaintiff the whole interest of the joint family in the suit properties.

The appellants, who were the contesting defendants, disputed the truth of the alleged contract of sale and the payment of consideration therefor and the binding character of the sale as against the sons. This question of fact was made the subject of the first issue in the case. The appellants further contended that in any event the sale-deed executed by the Official Receiver on 6th November, 1931, could not affect the rights of defendants 7 to 12 and that the plaintiff could not accordingly object to the appellants' right to attach the interests of these defendants in the suit properties. This contention of law was raised by the 3rd issue in the case. Two further questions arose in the course of the discussion of the rights of the parties in the lower Court as to the exact position of defendants 7, 8 and 9 and their interests in the suit properties. Defendants 7 and 8 had been impleaded in the insolvency proceedings and the creditor sought to have them also adjudicated insolvents, but by a consent order they were exonerated on their agreeing that their interests in the properties of the family might be vested in the Official Receiver appointed in the insolvency. The plaintiff contended that in any event the interests of defendants 7 and 8 must be held to have passed under the sale-deed executed by the Official Receiver. The ninth defendant instituted a suit for partition in 1928 but subsequently withdrew it, though the papers relating to the withdrawal are not on record. It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that, as a result of the filing of the plaint by the ninth defendant, he became separated in status from the rest of the family and that thereafter neither his father nor the Official Receiver in the insolvency had any right to convey his interest to the plaintiff. In answer to this contention, it has been urged

v.

Ambalam.
Varada-

that the admitted withdrawal of the partition suit must in the circumstances be deemed to have left the ninth defendant a member of the joint Hindu family and that accordingly his interest was effectually conveyed by the Official Receiver. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld the plaintiff's contention on all the points above set out and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour. Hence this appeal by defendants 1 and 2.

The question of fact raised by the first issue may be very briefly disposed of. The agreement of sale is evidenced by Ex. A which is a contract written in a note book of the plaintiff and signed by the three brothers. Before the lower Court, the contesting defendants took up the extreme position that no moneys had at all been paid by the plaintiff to the brothers and that the entries in the insolvents' books acknowledging the receipt of such payments were fictitious entries made with a view to enable the insolvents to secrete moneys for their own benefit. The lower Court on a careful examination of the evidence overruled this contention and it has not been repeated before us. The learned Counsel for the appellant confined himself to the contention that the payments by the plaintiff must have been made only as loans to the brothers and that the suggestion of a contract to sell was only an afterthought. In effect, the appellants impeach Ex. A, as a later fabrication. Beyond putting forward this contention, the learned Counsel for the appellants was not in a position to advance any serious argument against the correctness of the finding of the lower Court on this point. The direct evidence as well as the probabilities are clearly in favour of the truth of the plaintiff's story. We accordingly confirm the finding of the lower Court on issue 1.

The finding of the lower Court on the third issue was challenged by the learned Counsel for the appellants on the ground that according to a long course of decisions in this Court, the power of the brothers and of the Official Receiver as representing their estate to convey the interests of the sons in the joint family estate must be deemed to have come to an end, when the interests of the sons were attached by the present appellants in execution of their decree. In support of this contention, reliance was placed upon the decisions in Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan, The Official Receiver, Coimbatore v.

*Arunachalam Chettiar*¹, *Kanyaka Parameswaramma v. Venkataramayya*², *Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan*³, *Official Receiver, East Godavari v. Imperial Bank of India*⁴ and the observations in an unreported judgment of Reilly and Anantakrishna Aiyar, JJ., which has been filed as Ex. XXIV in this case. Reference was also made to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in *Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Bareilly v. Bhagwan Das Johari*⁵, of the Bombay High Court in *Subraya v. Nagappas*⁶ and of the Calcutta High Court in *Kamala Bala v. Surendra Nath*⁷. Before considering the effect of these decisions and the reasoning on which they rest, we may point out that the present case differs from all of them in one important respect, namely, that there was in existence in this case, long prior to the attachment, a contract of sale entered into by the brothers at a time when the family was joint and they had the power to sell the full interest of the joint family in the suit properties. That this circumstance makes a very material distinction will appear when the authorities are examined.

The rights of a promisee under a prior contract of sale as against a subsequent attachment and the rights of a Court auction purchaser under that attachment have been considered in several decisions in this Court beginning as early as in *Savithri Ammal v. Ramasami*⁸ and going down to *Veerappa Thevar v. Venkatarama Aiyar*⁹. See *Bapineedu v. Venkayya*¹⁰, *Venkata Reddi v. Yellappa Chetti*¹¹, *Veeraraghavayya v. Kamala Devi*¹², *Sunkari Sitayya v. Mudaragaddi Sanyasi*¹³. See also *Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram*¹⁴, *Madan Mohan Dey v. Rebati Mohan Poddar*¹⁵, *Deoki Nandan v. Sayad Jawad Hussain*¹⁶ and *Lakshman v. Ramchandra*¹⁷. It was contended by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar the learned Counsel for the appellants that the course of decisions beginning with *Savithri Ammal v. Ramasami*⁸, cannot be regarded as laying down good law in view of recent pronouncements of the Judicial Committee as to the effect of the last paragraph of S. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. He also contended that if as laid down in the Madras decisions relating to the effect of the attachment on the father's power to sell the sons' interest, the father's power was at an end, the decisions dealing with the effect of an antecedent contract to sell can have no bearing on the decision of the present case. It accordingly becomes necessary to examine at some length the two sets of authorities above referred to. Though the sale deed was executed by the Official Receiver in this case, it must be taken that he had no larger power than the insolvents themselves would have had, and if, for any reason, the insolvents had lost the power to sell their sons' interests, the conveyance executed by the Official Receiver could have no greater effect. See *Sat Narain v. Sri Kishan Das*¹. The point for consideration therefore is whether as a result of the attachment placed by the appellants on 15th March, 1930, on the interests of the sons, the power of the fathers to sell the joint family property including the sons' interests for the satisfaction of debts binding on the sons came to an end.

It may be conceded that in some of the Madras decisions very general language has been used which almost seems to lay down the proposition contended for by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar; but on examination it will be found that in all those cases the question arose between the attaching creditor and the Official Receiver and all that was intended to be laid down by the learned Judges was that the attaching creditor was entitled to proceed to bring the sons' interest to sale and that the Official Receiver could not claim the proceeds of the sons' shares for the benefit of the general body of creditors. In *Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan*², where this question was considered for the first time in this Court, the learned Judges referred to *Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Bareilly v. Bhagwan Das Johari*³ as supporting their conclusion. The Allahabad decision only dealt with the question whether the interests of the sons in the joint family properties vested in the Official Receiver, on the insolvency of the father.

The learned Judges did not address themselves to the question whether apart from the vesting of the sons' interest, the power to sell which the father has under the Hindu law passed to the Official Receiver and if so, what the effect on it was of the attachment of the sons' interest. In the later decisions of this Court which purported to follow *Gopalakrishnayya v. Gopalan*¹ and repeated the language used in that case, reference has also been made to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Subraya v. Nagappa and we think we are justified in holding that the Madras decisions though using general language only intended to adopt the view laid down in *Subraya v. Nagappa*².

3. (1925) I.L.R. 48 All. 343.

The judgment of Chandavarkar, J., in *Subraya v. Nagappa*³ was based upon the effect of S. 276 of the old Civil Procedure Code corresponding to S. 64 of the Code of 1908. The learned Judge observed that as the effect of the attachment was to prevent the sons from alienating their shares, it must also be held to prevent the father from alienating the sons' share for the satisfaction of the father's debts. With all respect, we venture to think that this reasoning is not reconcilable with the basis on which the father's power to sell joint family property for the discharge of his own proper debts is supported in the decisions of the Judicial Committee. Chandavarkar, J., regarded the father in such cases as merely exercising the power of alienation which the sons would have exercised in the discharge of their pious duty which they owed to him. He went on to add that the father "is virtually alienating the property for them (the sons) and on their behalf" and it was on this view that he based the further proposition that as the attachment prevented the son from alienating his (son's) interest, it must equally be held to prevent the father from alienating the son's interest. The basis of the Privy Council decisions, if we may take *Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohan*⁴ as typical of them, seems to us to be somewhat different. They observed that the recognition of the father's power to sell the son's interest for the discharge of his own debts was destructive of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons; they then proceed to state the position to be that the sons cannot set up their rights in the family property as against the father's alienation for antecedent debt or against his creditor's remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. The proper interpretation of this statement of the rule seems to us to be, that to the extent required to satisfy the father's proper debts, the father and his creditors are entitled to ignore the son's coparcenary rights in the family property. If this is the true view of the father's right, it seems to us with all respect open to question whether it can be said, as Chandavarkar, J., said in the Bombay case, that the father when he sells the family property for the discharge of his debts is merely exercising the power of sale possessed by the son himself. Except on this theory, it will be difficult to limit the father's power by reason of the statutory disability imposed by S. 64, Civil Procedure Code, upon the son as a result of the attachment of the son's interest. We may also observe in this connection, that the provision in S. 53, Civil Procedure Code, declaring that the property in the hands of a son which under the Hindu law is liable for the payment of the debts of the deceased father shall be deemed to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son is more consistent with the view we have above indicated as to the basis of the decisions of the Judicial Committee relating to the father's power to sell joint family property. It is not however necessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether the view enunciated in *Subraya v. Nagappa*¹ is to be followed or not. We have therefore thought it unnecessary to refer the case to a Full Bench and we propose to deal with the case on the footing that *Subraya v. Nagappa*¹ was rightly decided.

The result of the Bombay decision as well as of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Kamala Bala v. Surendra Nath*² is only to impose on the father in a case like the present the disability imposed upon the son by S. 64, Civil Procedure Code. We are not aware of any other rule of law which sets a limitation either on the son's power or on the father's power in circumstances like those of the present case. All that S. 64 of the Code provides is that any private transfer by the judgment-debtor of the property attached shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It will not be accurate to read S. 64 as putting an end to the power of sale, because as between the transferor and the transferee, the alienation will undoubtedly be operative. If the attaching creditor is paid off or for any reason the attachment ceases to subsist, the alienee's title will be unassailable. The only effect of S. 64 is that such transfer shall not prejudice the rights of the attaching creditor.

If the above is the true position, the question arises whether when a sale is made in pursuance of a contract entered into prior to the attachment, such conveyance is one contrary to the terms of S. 64 at all. We cannot agree with Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that the uniform course of decisions on this point referred to already is in any way opposed to the recent decisions of the Privy Council as to the effect of S. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. The argument based on S. 54 has been considered in many of the cases referred to. The question is not whether any interest has passed under the contract to sell. An attaching decree-holder attaches not the physical property but only the rights of the judgment-debtor in the property. As explained in the decisions and recognised in S. 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, the right of the judgment-debtor in the Property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor. Nor can it be said that the sale by the contracting parties executed in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell prejudices the attaching creditor, because the sale is merely the fulfilment of the obligation to which the judgment-debtor was already subject. The utmost that the attaching decree-holder will be entitled to, in such circumstances, is the payment of the balance of the purchase money, if anything remained due on the date of the attachment.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar relied on the observations of Sir D. F. Mulla in the notes to S. 40 of the Transfer of Property Act to the effect that the attaching decree-holder will not be bound by a conveyance even in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell; but the learned author draws a distinction between a conveyance voluntarily executed by the judgment-debtor in pursuance of a pre-existing contract and a conveyance executed by him under an order of Court in pursuance of a pre-existing contract. In the latter case, the author seems to think that the attaching creditor cannot object to the conveyance. If this distinction is well-founded, it is sufficient to support the decision of the lower Court in this case because the sale-deed was executed in this case in pursuance of an order of Court.

But we are inclined to agree with Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that there really ought to be no distinction between the two classes of cases, because in both cases, the conveyance is really not voluntary but is only the fulfilment of an obligation already incurred; only we would also hold that such a conveyance is not in reality contrary to the attachment within the meaning of S. 64 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the appellants on some observations of Cuming, J., in *Tarakanath Mukherji v. Sanatkumar Mukherji*¹. In one part of the judgment, the learned Judge seems to grant that the vendee will have a right to claim specific performance as against the Court auction-purchaser. If that be the position, it is difficult to see the justification for his differing from the other decisions referred to already including the decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Madan Mohan Dey v. Rebati Mohan Poddar*². With all respect, we prefer to adopt the view of Pearson, J., the other learned Judge who took part in *Tarakanath Mukherji v. Sanatkumar Mukherji*¹ and that is in accordance with the weight of authority as we have already observed. Our attention was drawn by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nur Mahomed Peerbhoy v. Dinshaw Hormasji Motiwallas. We do not find anything in that judgment to help the appellants. Their Lordships merely leave the question open and they have not given any indication that may be said even to throw doubt on the correctness of the decisions of the several High Courts on the point.

In the view above stated, the position when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed in favour of the plaintiffs on 6th November, 1931, was that he merely carried out the contract entered into by the brothers on 24th July, 1926, that is, more than three years before the date of the attachment, and as the sale deed was executed in pursuance of an order of Court which was in effect a decree for specific performance, though passed by the Insolvency Court, the weight of authority is clearly in favour of its having all the effect which a conveyance by the five brothers would have had. On the finding that the contract to sell was binding on the sons and that the consideration received for the sale had been utilised for the payment of antecedent debts, a sale by the five brothers would undoubtedly have been effective to convey the interest not merely of the brothers but also of all their sons who continued to remain joint with them.

In view of the dates of the various proceedings taken by the plaintiff a further question may arise, whether the attachment placed by the appellants on 15th March, 1930, could have any effect at all as against the plaintiff because though the sale deed was in fact executed on 6th November, 1931, its execution was asked for by a petition dated 21st December, 1928 and was ordered by the Court of first instance on 2nd December, 1929 (Ex. U). We are informed that the draft sale deed and the stamp paper for execution of the sale deed in accordance with this order was produced in Court as early as in January, 1930, but that in consequence of an order of stay, the sale deed was not immediately executed and was executed only after the decision of the appellate Court on 9th February, 1931. The question arises whether on these facts, the sale deed should not be treated as one executed, if not on the date of the agreement, at least on the date of the presentation of the petition or, in any event, on the date of the first Court's order. The respondent's Counsel relied in this connection on the observations in *Jahar Lal Bhutra v. Bhupendra Nath Basu*¹ and *Bhaskar v. Shankar*². The learned Counsel for the appellants however rightly insisted that this point had not been raised in the lower Court and involved an examination of facts which do not appear on the record itself. We do not therefore pursue this question further.

We may here refer to one other contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar. At one stage during the execution of the money decree obtained by the appellants, the Official Receiver intervened with a claim petition. He contended that the appellants were not entitled to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the shares of defendants 6 to 12 but that he himself was entitled to deal with those shares or with the proceeds thereof. This claim was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge's Court (see Exs. XXIII and XXIII-A) and that order was confirmed on appeal by this Court in Ex. XXIV. In the course of that judgment the learned Judges of this Court referring to a remark of the Subordinate Judge observed:

"If the learned Subordinate Judge means only that the Official Receiver's right of sale is extinguished, it is unobjectionable."

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar contends that this decision of this Court precludes the plaintiff from contending to the contrary because the plaintiff's title was derived under a sale deed executed by the Official Receiver only subsequent to this date. We do not think that this contention is well-founded. In the proceedings above referred to, the Official Receiver cannot in any sense be said to have represented the present plaintiff. In those proceedings, he figured as representing the general body of creditors and claimed that the proceeds of the sons' shares should be made available for their benefit. The present plaintiff on the other hand claimed under a contract which, if held binding on the estate, will be binding on the Official Receiver as well and include the whole interest in the suit items. Further, when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed it is not in the capacity of the representative of the general body of creditors or even in the exercise of the power possessed by him or by the insolvent to satisfy the general body of creditors that he acted. He was merely carrying out an obligation which prior to the insolvency had been incurred by the insolvents. We see no justification for holding that the order in the claim proceedings instituted by the Official Receiver precludes the present contention of the plaintiff. The effect of an order in claim proceedings is declared by O. 21, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code. There is no justification for giving any greater effect to such an order.

In the above view, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on issue 3 must be affirmed and it will not be necessary to discuss the position of defendants 7 and 8 separately. We may however add that, even if a different view should be taken as to the power of the father or of the Official Receiver under the general law, it is no longer open to defendants 7 and 8, in view of the terms of the consent order, to assert that their interests in the family property did not vest in the Official Receiver. If they are precluded, the judgment creditor who seeks to attach their supposed interest in the family property must be held to be equally precluded.

As regards the position of the 9th defendant, the learned Counsel for the appellants contended that the observations in paragraph 42 of the lower Court's judgment must really be understood to be in his favour and he argued that the lower Court had somehow failed to give effect to them in framing its decree. We are unable to agree with this interpretation of the lower Court's observations. It is true that the learned Subordinate Judge set out the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in *Palani Ammal v. Muthu Venkatachala Moniagar*¹, but he was evidently of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, the effect of the institution of the suit and its ultimate withdrawal was to leave the ninth defendant as a member of the joint Hindu family. It is unfortunate that we do not have the papers relating to the withdrawal. They were apparently not filed because the fact of withdrawal was not disputed. The appellant's learned Counsel argues that the observations in *Palani Ammal v. Muthu Venkatachala Moniagar*¹ throw on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the institution of the suit did not effect a severance and that, as the plaintiff has adduced no explanation for the institution of the suit, the ninth defendant must be held to have become divided in status. This seems to us to read too much into their Lordships' observations. Referring to *Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh*², their Lordships said that they saw no reason to depart from the view there laid down and only added that the plaint so presented, even if withdrawn, would, unless explained, afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained. This can hardly be read as laying down any rule of law or even a presumption. It only seems to suggest a possible inference of fact. It is not unlikely, as observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, that in this case the ninth defendant instituted the suit at a time when he thought that he would get some benefit out of it but that when he found that there would be nothing left after payment of the debts due by the family he did not think it worthwhile to proceed with the suit. These circumstances do not seem to us to warrant the conclusion that he became divided merely by the presentation of the plaint.

We agree with the findings of the lower Court on all the points raised and dismiss the appeal with costs of respondents 1 to 5.

Res judicata—Suit for redemption and possession of mortgaged properties—Previous suit and decision on the same question—Defendants in earlier suit same as in later—Additional parties impleaded in later suit as defendants—Substantial question for relief same—Principle of res judicata applicable.

In a suit brought by the appellant as plaintiff for redemption of a mortgage and for recovery of possession of mortgaged properties against respondents 1 to 13 who were in possession of the properties the suit was dismissed by the two lower Courts on the ground of the appellant's title to redeem having been foreclosed as res judicata owing to an earlier decision in another suit raising the same question. The previous suit was brought by the appellant against the same respondents and others as defendants pro forma and it was held that the appellant had no title as the purchase from his vendors was not valid owing to the lack of title to the properties in the vendors themselves who were not the nearest relations of the original holder. In the present suit the appellant having impleaded other persons also who were not parties to the earlier suit as defendants, on the question whether there could be any application of the principle of res judicata since parties sued against were not altogether the same,

Held, that the appellant's suit was barred by res judicata by reason of the finding against him in the previous suit.

Since the really substantial reliefs prayed for in the present suit were only against the same respondents as in the previous suit, the two suits should be regarded as between the same parties.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the appellant for redemption of a mortgage and recovery of possession of the mortgaged properties from respondents 1 to 13 who were alleged to be in possession thereof as mortgagees and for other incidental reliefs. The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below on the preliminary ground that the question of the appellant's title to redeem is foreclosed as res judicata by reason of the decision in A. S. No. 62 of 1928 of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Narsapur. Hence the appeal.

Latchayya
v.
Venkata-
patiraju.

The facts giving rise to this plea of res judicata may be briefly stated. The properties in question originally belonged to one Seshayya who died without issue in 1877. He executed the mortgage now sought to be redeemed in favour of one Subbaraju whose descendants are respondents 1 to 13. Seshayya's widow who succeeded to his properties died in April, 1921. In March, 1925, the appellant purchased the properties in suit from respondents 14 to 16 herein who were alleged to have inherited them on the widow's death as the sister's sons and nearest reversioners of Seshayya. Soon after this purchase, the appellant brought O.S. No. 320 of 1925 in the District Munsif's Court of Tanuku against respondents 1 to 13 and the deceased first defendant as mortgagees in possession for the same reliefs that are now claimed against them, impleading also his vendors, the respondents 14 to 16, as defendants pro forma. The respondents 1 to 13 then pleaded inter alia, as they do now, that the appellant was not entitled to redeem by virtue of his purchase from the sisters' sons of Seshayya, as one Perraju who was an agnatic relation of Seshayya was the nearest reversioner entitled to succeed on the widow's death. This plea was upheld by the first Court and was confirmed by the Appellate Court in A.S. No. 62 of 1928 referred to above. Perraju was not impleaded in that suit, and his sons applied in I. A. No. 1083 of 1931 in A.S. No. 62 of 1928 to implead themselves as respondents in that appeal but the application was dismissed. Thus neither Perraju nor his sons were parties to the previous litigation. In the present suit, however, they have been impleaded as defendants 18 to 21 and the appellant has asked for a declaration that they are not entitled to the properties of Seshayya as their father Perraju was not his heir. It has to be mentioned that respondents 1 to 13 have since obtained a transfer of all such rights as these defendants who are respondents 17 to 20 herein might have to the suit properties,

Latchayya
v.
Venkata-
patiraju.

The appellant's learned Counsel has raised two contentions before me. First, that the present suit is not barred by the principle of res judicata as the appellant has impleaded the sons of Perraju and prayed for the declaration referred to above against them and, further, the respondents 1 to 13 having also relied upon their purchase of the right, title and interest of the respondents 17 to 20 must now be regarded as litigating under a different title. In other words, there can be no res judicata as the parties are not the same and they are also not litigating under the same title. Secondly, the learned Counsel urged that, in any case, the question of the alleged adoption of the fourteenth respondent, one of the appellant's vendors, by one of the two sisters of Seshayya having been expressly left open by the appellate Court in the previous litigation, the appellant's title, in so far as it was claimed to have been derived from that respondent, cannot be said to be res judicata.

The latter contention can be dismissed in a few words. It is no doubt true that there was no adjudication as to the fourteenth respondent's alleged adoption in A. S. No. 62 of 1928, but that was because it was unnecessary to decide that question in view of the finding that Perraju was an agnatic sapinda of Seshayya and as such would exclude the fourteenth respondent who would only be a Bandhu even if his adoption was true. It cannot therefore be said that the appellant's title to a half share in the suit properties though based on that adoption was left open. The appellant's title to the whole of the suit properties was negatived as it was found that none of his vendors was entitled to succeed to any of the properties of Seshayya.

Turning now to the main contention, I find it difficult to appreciate how, by reason only of the addition of respondents 17 to 20 as parties to the present suit, the latter can cease to be a suit between the same parties so far as the respondents 1 to 13 are concerned. It is of course a suit between different parties as regards respondents 17 to 20 and it would be open to the appellant to proceed with it against these persons and obtain, if possible, the declaration he has prayed for against them, but it would be obviously futile for him to do so, as the respondents 1 to 13 are in actual possession of the properties, and I did not understand the appellant's Counsel to say that his client desired to prosecute the suit against the respondents 17 to 20 even if it were to fail against the other respondents. I am therefore clearly of opinion that the present suit must be regarded as one between the same parties as the prior suit, so far as the really substantial reliefs which are prayed for only against respondents 1 to 13 are concerned.

Latchayya
v.
Venkata-
patiraju.

The learned Counsel for the appellant relied on a decision of the Lahore High Court, *Ganga Ram v. Mohamad Hussain*¹. The facts of the case do not fully appear in the report but as far as they can be gathered, it is clear that the additional parties impleaded in the second suit were persons against whom the substantial, if not the entire, reliefs claimed in the suit were directed, the plaintiff in the previous suit having been impleaded apparently as a mere pro forma defendant. It was in those circumstances that the Court held that there was no res judicata as it could not be said that the later suit was between the same parties as the earlier one. That decision does not, in my opinion, assist the appellant here.

The appellant next urged that the principle of res judicata has no application here as respondents 1 to 13 must now be deemed to be litigating under a different title as they claimed to have since acquired the rights of the respondents 17 to 20. This argument appears, to my mind, to proceed upon a misconception of the true position. Respondents 1 to 13, as persons in possession of the properties, have the advantage of being able to resist the appellant's suit for possession, not necessarily by establishing their own title to the property but by merely putting the appellant to proof of his title and the latter can succeed in the suit only on the strength of his own title. It is thus unnecessary for the respondents 1 to 13 to rely upon the transfer which they have obtained from respondents 17 to 20 and their learned Counsel stated before me that they do not rely, in any manner or to any extent, upon such transfer and that it might be entirely ignored for the purposes of this suit. The position, therefore, is that the appellant has to establish his title to redeem the suit properties from the mortgage of the respondents 1 to 13, and it was precisely this that they failed to do in the previous suit. In other words, it was adjudged in the previous suit that as between the appellant and respondents 1 to 13, the appellant was not entitled to redeem these properties and I am unable to see

1. A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 900 (2).

Eatchayya
v.
Venkata-
patiraju.

why the principle of res judicata should not operate to make that adjudication conclusive of the same question when it is sought to be raised again by the appellant against the same persons in the present suit.

The appellant's Counsel placed reliance on a decision of this Court in *Jagannadham v. Venkatasubba Rao*¹. I confess that at first sight it might appear to lend some support to his contention for it is, in essential respects, the converse of the present case; that is to say, if the appellant herein had succeeded in the former suit and the respondents 1 to 13, having subsequently obtained a transfer from the representatives of Perraju had, on the strength of such transfer, sued the appellant for recovery of the same properties, the decision would be exactly in point and on its authority it would have to be held that the later suit in the case supposed would not be barred by res judicata. But the reversal of the position of the parties as in the present case, seems to my mind, to make an essential difference in the application of the principle. For, in the case supposed, it would be necessary for the respondents 1 to 13, as plaintiffs in the suit, to put forward and establish, in order to succeed, their title derived from Perraju's representatives and, in so doing, they would be litigating under a different title. In the present case, however, for the reasons I have already indicated, it is not necessary for them to rely upon such title as they occupy the position of defendants in the suit and it is clear, so far as the appellant is concerned, that he is litigating under the same title as before. It seems to me, therefore, that the decision in *Jagannadham v. Venkatasubba Rao*¹ has no application to the facts of the present case.

The appellant's learned Counsel next relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Ramani Mohan Roy v. Jagubandhu Karmakara. That was a case where A sued and recovered certain properties from B as the son and heir of C who had gone abroad and not been heard of for many years. C turned up subsequently and sued A for recovery of the same properties but, pending this litigation, died, whereupon B was impleaded as his heir and representative which he now really was. It was held, if I may say so, rightly, that B was litigating under a different title in the later suit brought by his father and there was therefore no bar of res judicata. I do not see how this decision supports the contention of the appellant here.

1. (1927) 53 M.L.J. 864; I.L.R. 50 Mad. 877.

2. (1916) 37 I.C. 881.

Latchayya
v.
Venkata-
patiraju.

For these reasons, I agree with the Courts below in holding that the question of the appellant's title is res judicata by reason of the finding in the previous litigation and dismiss the second appeal with costs of the respondents 1 to 13.

Leave granted.

The Court made the following.

ORDER.—This is an application made under Ss. 24 and 151 of the Civil Procedure Code for the transfer of S. C. S. No. 11852 of 1938 on the file of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, from that Court to the City Civil Court, Madras, to be tried along with O. S. No. 157 of 1939 on the file of the latter Court on the ground that the two suits are connected and that it is convenient that they should be tried by the same Court. A preliminary objection has been raised to the application on the ground that under S. 24, Civil Procedure Code, there could be no transfer of the kind asked for. Reliance is placed on S. 3 of the Madras City Civil Court Act which gives jurisdiction to the City Civil Court to try certain suits excluding suits cognizable by the Court of Small Causes, Madras. There is, however, a distinct provision in S. 5 of the same Act to the effect that every person appointed a Judge of the City Civil Court shall be by virtue of his office a Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, with respect to cases cognizable by the latter Court. It cannot therefore be said that the City Civil Judge to whom the present case may be transferred would have no jurisdiction to try the suit. On the other hand there is a distinct provision in S. 24, Civil Procedure Code, which under S. 8 of the Code applies to a Small Cause Court, to the following effect. The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall for the purposes of such suit be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes. In view of S. 5 of the Madras City Civil Court Act this does not appear to be a case of conferring by the order of transfer itself jurisdiction on the Court to which the transfer is made, which it would not possess but for the transfer.

There can thus be no sound objection to the entertainment of the application in a case like this under S. 24, Civil Procedure Code. In the view we have taken of the preliminary objection it seems unnecessary to decide whether another remedy is not available to the petitioner by way of an application to the Chief Justice of the High Court under S. 5 of the Madras City Civil Court Act.

On the merits it is clear that the balance of convenience is in favour of the transfer asked for. It seems to us however that we cannot reject the complaint made by the second respondent that he may have, as a result of the transfer to be made, to pay additional court-fee in the City Civil Court. It is not proper that we should deal in advance with the question whether additional court-fee would be properly leviable in the circumstances. But assuming that such additional fee would be leviable, which question however we entirely leave to the City Civil Court to decide, it seems to us that the second respondent's complaint is one for which some redress should be provided. We therefore direct the transfer as prayed for but with the condition that the additional court-fee, if any, which may be required to be paid as a result of the transfer, should be paid by the petitioner in this application in the first instance, and that amount should be treated as the costs of the petitioner in the suit and provided for by the final decree in that suit. There will be no order as to costs of this petition.

Contempt of Court—Petition for winding up pending in Court—If opinion published that in the interests of creditors it should be proceeded with amounts to contempt—Bona fides of parties—How far material.

A discussion in a newspaper of the rights and wrongs of a case when pending before a Court is improper and constitutes contempt of Court. This does not mean that reference cannot at all be made to pending cases or that items of news which are concerned with pending cases should not be published; but what cannot be permitted is a discussion of the attitude which the Court should adopt when considering the scheme.

Where therefore pending an application for winding up of a Bank before the Court, the Reserve Bank investigated the affairs of the Bank at the instance of the Bank in question and the Government to satisfy itself about the stability of the Bank before rendering it any financial help, and as a result of investigation the Governor of the Reserve Bank reported to the Government of Madras by a letter that "the only conclusion to be drawn from the material so far available was that the interest of the depositors would best be served by allowing the liquidation proceedings to take their course without further postponement," and that letter was released to the Press by the Governor of the Reserve Bank and the Prime Minister and published in the papers, such release and publication constitutes technically a contempt of Court, as it amounts to advising the acceptance of the petition for winding up, a matter which the Court was being called upon to decide. The motives of the parties in so releasing or publishing does not make it any the less contempt, though it will have a bearing on the question whether the Court should take action on the petition.

To comment on a case which is about to come before the Court with knowledge of the fact is just as much a contempt as comment on a case actually launched.

The Advocate-General (Sir A. Krishnaswami Aiyar) for the Provincial Government.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice. The petitioner in this case applies for the committal of Sir James Taylor, the Governor of the Reserve Bank of India, Mr. M. M. Bhargava, the Manager of the Madras Branch of that Bank, and Mr. G. A. Johnson, the acting Editor of the "Madras Mail" for alleged contempt of Court. The action of the first respondent complained of is that he procured the publication of a letter dated 22nd July, 1938, written by him to the Prime Minister of the Madras Government with reference to a petition then before this Court for the compulsory winding up of the Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Limited. The letter was published in the local press on the 9th August at the request of the first respondent conveyed in a letter by the second respondent to the Secretary for the Government of Madras, Development Department. The complaint against the acting Editor of the "Madras Mail" is that he published the letter and also published a leading article commenting on a scheme for reconstruction which was about to be placed before the Court and a letter from "a creditor" commenting on the same matter. The application came on for hearing before this Bench on the 19th October. In the course of the arguments it appeared that the first respondent's letter had been published in other Madras papers, namely, the "Hindu", "Indian Express", "Dhinamani", "Swadesamitran" and "Andra Patrika". As the petition which had been filed showed a prima facie case of contempt, the Court directed that the Editors of these newspapers should also be called on to show cause and the hearing was adjourned in order that notices might be served upon them. This has now been done and the Editors of these newspapers have entered appearances.

Sir James Taylor,
Leach, C.J.

The Travancore National and Quilon Bank (which I shall hereafter refer to as "the Bank") suspended payment on the 21st June, 1938. The Head Office of the Bank was in Madras and it had many branches inside and outside the Presidency. The suspension of payment was therefore a matter of great public and private concern. On the 22nd June a petition for the winding up of the Bank was presented to the Bombay High Court and on the same day a similar petition was filed in the District Court of Quilon, which is in the State of Travancore. The next day, a petition for its winding up was also presented to this Court. A run on the Bank commenced on the 15th March, and as it continued to grow in intensity, the Bank was compelled to close its doors. Before suspending payment the Directors applied to the Reserve Bank of India for financial help. The Reserve Bank naturally wished to investigate the affairs of the Bank before committing itself and on the 20th June an investigation was commenced, but before it could be completed the suspension of payment took place. The Directors of the Bank then wanted the Reserve Bank to take charge of its assets and conserve them pending further investigation. Discussions took place between the Minister for Industries, the Officials of the Finance Department of the Government of Madras, and the Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank on the 27th June and between the Prime Minister and the Deputy Governor on the 29th June. On the 30th June, the Government of Madras issued a communication to the Press stating that the Government had anxiously considered all possible steps that could be taken to meet the situation and, in consultation with the authorities of the Reserve Bank, it was suggested that the Bank should apply to the Reserve Bank to undertake an immediate and thorough investigation through competent auditors and accountants appointed by them into the affairs of the Bank and agree to act according to such advice as might be tendered, as a result of the investigation "for the continuation, reorganisation, or liquidation of the Bank," whichever course was finally suggested".

The Reserve Bank estimated that the expenses of the investigation would amount to Rs. 10,000 and intimated its willingness to undertake the investigation if this sum were forthcoming. On the 2nd July, the Bank asked the Court to appoint Provisional Liquidators and to sanction the payment of the Rs. 10,000 out of the assets of the Bank. The application was heard by Stodart, J., who granted the first part of the application the same day, but by an order delivered on the 5th July dismissed the application for the payment out of the Rs. 10,000 on the ground that he had no power to grant it. The hearing of the winding up petition was then adjourned to the 28th July.

On the 8th July, the Reserve Bank intimated its willingness to undertake the investigation at its own expense and the next day appointed a special officer for the purpose, but when he went to the premises of the Bank in Madras he met with some opposition from the Bank officials. It would appear that the opposition was subsequently withdrawn, because on the 17th July, the special officer was in a position to make a preliminary report. On the 18th July, the first respondent came to Madras and on his arrival the preliminary report of the special officer was handed to him. The first respondent remained in Madras for two days during which time he had an interview with the Prime Minister and received a deputation from a committee of creditors who were interested in the reconstruction of the Bank. On the 22nd July, the first respondent wrote to the Prime Minister the letter complained of in the petition. In it he expressed the opinion that the only conclusion to be drawn from the material so far available was that the interest of the depositors would best be served by allowing the liquidation proceedings to take their course without further postponement and it seemed to him that it would be in the best interest of the depositors that the liquidation should be carried out for the Bank as a whole, as from the preliminary figures furnished to him it would appear that the proportion of the assets to the liabilities was considerably larger in Travancore than in British India. The letter recommended that no further attempt should be made to postpone liquidation proceedings and concluded with the statement that the writer had no objection to the publication of the contents of this letter if the Prime Minister so desired.

On the 27th July an application was made to the Appellate Side of this Court for an order staying the proceedings in the winding up petition pending the hearing of the appeal which had been filed against the order of Stodart, J., refusing to allow the Rs. 10,000 to be paid out of the assets of the Bank for the purposes of the investigation by the Reserve Bank. That this appeal should have been persisted in seeing that the Reserve Bank had agreed to undertake the investigation at its own expense is a matter of some surprise. The Court refused an order of stay, but heard the appeal itself on the 9th August and by an order dated 12th August dismissed it. On the 28th July by an order of Venkataramana Rao, J., the hearing of the winding up petition was further adjourned to the 18th August. On the 9th August the second respondent wrote a letter to the Secretary to the Government of Madras, Development Department, forwarding a copy of the preliminary report of the special officer appointed to investigate the affairs of the Bank together with other documents and in the course of this letter said :

"I am directed by the Governor of the Bank to intimate to you that we consider it would be very helpful if the Madras Government would release to the press the Governor's official letter dated the 22nd July, 1938, addressed to the Prime Minister."

As the result of this letter the Government of Madras issued to the Press for publication the first respondent's letter and it was published in the local press the same day. The petition for the winding up of the Bank was then pending and was not dealt with until the 5th September when Venkataramana Rao, J., passed an order for compulsory winding up. A scheme of reconstruction of the Bank had in the meantime been presented on behalf of certain creditors. In his order granting the winding up petition, the learned Judge directed the official liquidators to report on the scheme, and that is how the matter stands at present.

The petitioner complains that the letter of the first respondent constitutes contempt of Court inasmuch as it expresses an opinion that the winding up petition should be granted. There is much force in this contention. In asking the Government of Madras to release the letter for publication we are convinced that the first respondent had no intention to act in contempt.

Leach, C.J.

His intention was merely to inform the creditors and shareholders of the Bank what he considered should be the proper attitude to adopt with regard to the winding up petition. The intention of the first respondent and the bona fide nature of his action have an important bearing on the question whether the Court should take action on the petition, but good intention is not the deciding factor in a matter of contempt. To comment on a case which is sub judice or to suggest that the Court should take a certain course in respect of a matter before it undoubtedly constitutes contempt and honesty of motive cannot remove it from this category. If this were to be allowed persons in a position to assist the Court by their evidence might be prevented from coming forward, and persons appearing as witnesses might be influenced in their testimony. The criterion is not whether the Court will be influenced, but whether the action complained of is calculated to prejudice the course of justice. In the present case it has been shown that one creditor at least was influenced by the letter of the first respondent. We refer to the letter which appeared in the "Madras Mail". In this letter which is dated the 16th August, and was published on the 19th August, the writer says:

"After reading that opinion (that of the first respondent expressed in his letter of the 22nd July) I am strongly for the immediate liquidation of the Bank and probably many other depositors have changed their minds after knowing the statement of the Reserve Bank,"

"For the reconstruction of the bank it is necessary to create confidence and I fail to see how this can be done if the scheme is not backed by the Reserve Bank. I think that, in the absence of higher and more reliable authority, the creditors must believe the Reserve Bank, whose opinion is that 'no useful purpose would now be served by postponing liquidation proceedings'."

At the time when the first respondent's letter was published the reconstruction scheme had not been placed before the Court, but it was known that a committee of creditors proposed to put forward a scheme. The matter was in fact mentioned in the course of the arguments heard by Stodart, J., at the beginning of August. To comment on a case which is about to come before the Court with knowledge of the fact is in our opinion just as much a contempt as comment on a case actually launched. In Rex v. Parker, Wills, J., in the course of his judgment

"Great stress has been laid by Mr. Danckwerts upon an expression which has been used in the judgments upon questions of this kind—that the remedy exists when there is a cause pending in the Court. We think undue importance has been attached to it. It is true that in very nearly all the cases which have arisen there has been a cause actually begun so that the expression, quite natural under the circumstances, accentuates the fact, not that the case has been begun, but that it is not at an end. That is the cardinal consideration. It is possible very effectually to poison the fountain of justice before it begins to flow. It is not possible to do so when the stream has ceased."

The question whether there can be contempt of Court when proceedings are imminent but not yet launched was also discussed in Rex v. Daily Mirror: Smith, Ex parte,¹ but as the question did not call for a decision, no decision was given. Lord Hewart, C. J., however, quoted the passage which has just been cited from the judgment of Wills, J., and as there was no indication of disapproval it may, we think, be taken that the leaning was in the same direction.

As we have already indicated the Court does not in any way doubt that the first respondent was actuated by the best motives, but inasmuch as he publicly advised the acceptance of the petition for winding up, a matter which the Court was being called upon to decide, and as a reconstruction scheme was about to be put before the Court, we are constrained to hold that there was in law contempt of Court. The second respondent played a less important part in the matter and in writing to the Prime Minister on the 9th August, he was acting on the instructions of the first respondent. He, however, shared in securing the release for publication of the letter complained of and while the Court acquits him also of any intention to act in contempt and accepts that he acted in good faith, he did in fact share in the contempt.

We will now turn to the position of the Editors of the respective papers. As we have mentioned, they all published the first respondent's letter of the 22nd July, and the "Madras Mail" published a leading article on the proposed reconstruction scheme and the letter from 'A creditor'. The "Hindu" published a statement from the "Secretary, Central Committee of Creditors, Travancore National and Quilon Bank, Madras", and a statement from the Managing Editor of "Indian Finance" strongly recommending the acceptance of the scheme. The "Indian Express" published a leading article, and the statement from the Secretary, the Committee of Creditors. The "Swadesamitran" published a shorter statement from the Secretary of this Committee. The "Dhinamani" and the "Andra Patrika" merely published the first respondent's letter.

As the publication of the letter of the first respondent constitutes contempt of Court, the Editor of each paper in which it appeared must be deemed to share in the contempt. We do not think it is necessary to enter upon a detailed discussion of the other matters which appeared in these papers relating to the affairs of the bank. The Court regards the publication by the "Madras Mail" of the leading article of the 22nd July, and the letter from "A creditor" and the publication by the "Hindu" of the statement of the Managing Editor of the "Indian Finance" as also constituting contempt of Court, but will treat the other published statements as not being in contempt. As in the case of the first and second respondents, the Court accepts the statement that the Editors had no intention of acting in contempt and that their bona fides are not in any way in question. The fact that the first respondent's letter was sent to them by the Government led them to publish it without pausing to consider its effect. The Editor of the "Andra Patrika" states the position very well in his affidavit showing cause. He there says:—

"The very responsible and eminent character of the source from which the communique was issued, misled me into publishing the letter, without scrutinising its contents in a more searching manner than I did".

The Court has been asked to give an indication of what may and what may not be published in circumstances such as these. It is impossible for the Court to do so. It would mean traversing a very long distance and even then it would not lead to a complete statement. It is, however, fundamental that a discussion in a newspaper of the rights and wrongs of a case when pending before a Court is improper and constitutes contempt of Court. This does not mean that reference cannot be made to pending cases or that items of news which are connected with pending cases should not be published. No objection could, for instance, be taken to the publication in the Press of a statement that the creditors of a company in respect of which a winding up order has been passed have put forward a scheme for reconstruction, but what cannot be permitted is a discussion of the attitude which the Court should adopt when considering the scheme.

The power to commit for contempt of Court is not to be lightly used and should be reserved for cases where the contempt is deliberate and of such a nature that committal is called for. In the present case all that can be said is that the respondents acted without due consideration. They have all expressed their regret to the Court and we think that the matter may be left there. Sufficient has probably been said to prevent a similar situation arising in future.

At the conclusion of the arguments the learned Advocate-General addressed the Court on behalf of the Government of Madras. He stated that the Government accepted the responsibility for the publication of the letter of the first respondent, and that the Government felt it would be failing in its duty to the shareholders and depositors scattered in different parts of India and Ceylon if it did not release the letter of the first respondent. There can be no duty to release for publication in the Press a letter advising on a matter which is sub judice and the release itself constituted a technical contempt, but no complaint has been made of this and we, of course, accept the learned Advocate-General's statement that the Government felt it its duty to publish the letter.

The learned Advocate for the petitioner has left the question of costs entirely to the Court. Had he pressed for costs, we should not have made an order for their payment. We consider that the petitioner who was obviously in possession of the full facts was not justified in proceeding against one newspaper alone. What his motives were it is unnecessary to inquire, but he was obviously not impartial in his action. In these circumstances, there will be no order for costs.

Application accepted but no order for committal passed.

Where from the evidence in the case it was clear that the accident to the deceased, who was a 'bus driver' no doubt, arose while he was travelling as a passenger in a bus and there was no evidence that he was actually going to or from his work or going to the bus for the purpose of his employment,

Held, that the accident to the deceased did not arise out of or in the course of his employment. Hence the claimant's application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act was unsustainable.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Madras, in W. C. Case No. 167 of 1936 dated the 23rd day of September, 1937.

One S. Kamal Saheb of Muddanur in Cuddapah district applied for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act from Muhammad Ibrahim, bus owner, Cuddapah town, on the ground that his (the applicant's) son Kamal Saheb had been employed on Bus No. CU. 256, the property of the opposite party, when it was travelling between Pulivendla and Vembuli on the 16th of July, 1936, when an accident happened and the bus capsized as a result of which Kamal Saheb was killed. The applicant alleges that the monthly wages of the deceased were Rs. 25 and he consequently claimed as compensation a lump sum of Rs. 810.

The opposite party denied liability on the ground that the deceased, although he had once been a driver employed by the opposite party, had left service 10 days prior to the accident as he was told that he would be dismissed on account of his drunken habits. The opposite party alleges that, on the day of the occurrence, the deceased was simply travelling in the bus to which the accident occurred, as an ordinary passenger, and he made the further allegation against the deceased that he was drunk at the time of his death.

Ch. Raghava Rao, S. Kothandarama Nayanar and N. C. Subbiah for Appellant.

Respondent not represented.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must be allowed. The learned Commissioner's finding that the deceased was in the employment of the opposite party is a finding of fact with which we cannot; and do not wish to interfere. But there was no evidence whatever on which the learned Commissioner could base his finding that the accident to the deceased arose out of and in the course of his employment. His employment was as a "bus driver" but at the time of the accident he was travelling as a passenger, standing on the foot board. There is no evidence that he was going to or from his work, or that he was going in the bus for the purpose of his employment.

Pandrang
Row, J.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang Row, J.—These are revision petitions from the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore and of the Subordinate Judge of Chicacole on certain applications presented by the judgment-debtors under Ss. 19 and 20 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, the judgment-debtors being the defendants in a mortgage suit instituted in 1929 in the Sub-Court at Berhampore in which the final decree was passed on 9th March, 1933. The application for execution was made in August, 1934, (E. P. No. 79 of 1934) and it was during the pendency of this application for execution that Orissa was constituted into a separate Province. The execution proceedings continued to be carried on in the Berhampore Sub-Court and some of the mortgaged properties, all of which have been since the formation of the Orissa Province come within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Court at Chicacole in this Presidency, were sold on 26th July, 1937, and they were purchased by the decree-holders themselves after they had obtained permission to bid and to set off the sale price against the decree amount. The sale however was not confirmed because on 24th August, 1937, that is, within a month after the sale, an application was made by the judgment-debtors under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the sale and the enquiry into that petition was not completed till the 2nd April, 1938, on which date the judgment-debtors presented petitions under S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act praying for stay of execution. Petitions under S. 19 of the Act were presented in the same Court, that is, the Berhampore Sub-Court on the 5th May, 1938. Similar petitions under S. 19 of the Act were also presented by the judgment-debtors in the Chicacole Sub-Court on the 14th April, 1938, on the ground that the mortgaged properties were situate within the jurisdiction of that Court. It would thus appear that the judgment-debtors were prosecuting the same remedy so far as the remedy given by S. 19 of the Act was concerned in two Courts at the same time. On the 4th July, 1938, an interim order was made by the Sub-Judge of Berhampore on the petitions for stay under S. 20 of the Act. It is that order which is sought to be revised by the decree-holders in C. R. Ps. Nos. 224 to 228. On the 5th of November, 1938, the Berhampore Sub-Court made an order directing the petitioners, that is to say, the judgment-debtors, to elect between the two Courts, namely, the Berhampore Sub-Court and the Chicacole Sub-Court and prosecute their remedy only in one of these two Courts. As this was not done by the petitioners, the Berhampore Sub-Court dismissed the petitions under S. 19 for non-prosecution on 13th December, 1938. It is from this order that C.R.Ps. Nos. 373 and 375 have been presented. It may be mentioned in this connection that the applications under S. 20 of the Act were dismissed by the Berhampore Sub-Court on the 23rd January, 1939. C. R. Ps. Nos. 372 and 374 are petitions to revise this order.

There was an order made by the Chicacole Sub-Court on the petitions presented to it under S. 19 of the Act to the effect that it had jurisdiction to deal with them. This order happens to have been made on the same date as the order of the Berhampore Sub-Court dismissing the similar petitions under S. 19 and C. R. P. No. 588 is the petition to revise this order of the Chicacole Sub-Court dated 13th December, 1938, presented by the decree-holders.

It was conceded by the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the petitioners in C. R. Ps. Nos. 372 to 375 of 1939 that so far as the petitions under S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act were concerned, it was the Berhampore Court alone which had jurisdiction as that was the Court which passed the decree and was actually executing the decree at the time. On the other side, Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar also agrees that the Berhampore Sub-Court had jurisdiction to deal with the petitions under S. 20 of the Act. So far, therefore, there is agreement, but as regards the petitions under S. 19 of the Act, it is contended by the learned Advocate-General that it was the Chicacole Court alone that had jurisdiction. His alternative contention, however, is that if the Chicacole Court had no jurisdiction then the Berhampore Sub-Court which must have jurisdiction was not right in dismissing the petitions on the alleged ground of non-prosecution, in the circumstances which appear on the record. The question of jurisdiction is really not one of difficulty. The order in Council which is relevant is the Government of India (Constitution of Orissa) Order of 1936. S. 4 (1) of that order is to the effect that the date on which the said provisions, that is to say, the provisions defining the Province of Orissa are to come into operation shall be the 1st April, 1936. So far as the judicial proceedings are concerned, S. 20 gives power to the Governor-General in Council to give such directions as he thinks proper as to the disposal of cases pending on or shortly before, the appointed date in any Court acting for an area, any part of which is transferred by this order to Orissa and as to the Courts in which proceedings by way of appeal or revision are to lie in cases decided by any such Courts before the appointed day. In pursuance of these powers the Governor-General in Council published a Notification No. F. 210 of 1936, Judicial dated 1st April, 1936. The notification consists of only two paragraphs which run as follows:—

“(1) Every proceeding pending on the appointed day before any Court, other than a High Court, in, or in respect of any area transferred by the said order to Orissa shall be continued, as if the said order had not been made.

(2) Any appeal or application for revision in respect of any proceeding so pending or of any decision made before the appointed day in any such Court in or in respect of any such area shall lie in the Court which has appellate or revisional jurisdiction to try such proceeding if the proceeding were instituted after the appointed day.

Provided that, where the proceeding relates to any property situate partly within and partly without any area transferred by the said order to Orissa, any appeal or application for revision shall lie as if the said order had not been made.”

It is clear from the first paragraph, as the execution petition was pending on the 1st April, 1936, in the Berhampore Sub-Court, the Berhampore Sub-Court was perfectly competent to go on with it as if the Order in Council constituting the Orissa Province had not been made. In other words, it had complete jurisdiction and so far as the jurisdiction to deal with the execution application then pending is concerned, the position was as if the old state of things had continued without any change and the Berhampore Sub-Court continued to function as a Court in this Presidency, and subject to the jurisdiction of this High Court. We have no doubt that all the petitions, that is, those under S. 19 as well as under S. 20 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act must be deemed to be petitions which raise questions relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and therefore come within the matters covered by S. 47, Civil Procedure Code. They were therefore rightly presented in the Berhampore Sub-Court. The presentation of petitions under S. 19 of the Act for the same remedy in the Chicacole Sub-Court was obviously a precaution taken lest there should be some doubt expressed by the Berhampore Sub-Court about its own jurisdiction to deal with the petition under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act passed by the Madras Legislature after that Court had ceased to be included in the Madras Province to which alone that Act applied. But this precaution taken by the judgment-debtors cannot justify the Berhampore Sub-Court in dismissing the application made to it simply because the petitioners would not make the election which they were asked to make by the Court and would not withdraw the petitions presented by them in the Chicacole Sub-Court. This is not a judicial way of disposing of matters of this kind raising questions of considerable importance, the decision of which will entail serious consequences. It is enough to state in this connection that if the judgment-debtors' case is established, the decree debt would be scaled down by over Rs. 25,000. The order of the 13th December, 1938, made by the Sub-Court of Berhampore is itself very clear that the only reason for dismissing the petitions was not any non-prosecution of the petitions but what the Court appears to have regarded as contumacy on the part of the petitioners. The order runs as follows:—

"Adjournment cost paid. The applicants have so far taken no steps to comply with my previous orders, though the direction was specified and clear, even adjournment was allowed last time on terms of cost. On the contrary, Mr. Y. S. Ramamurthy, Advocate for the decree-holders, represents that the applicants are so far maintaining before the Subordinate Judge of Chicacole that it is that Court which is only seized with jurisdiction over the matter in question. As the applicants are playing this double game though they were warned more than once that they are expected to be more candid in their conduct towards the Court, I decline to grant any further adjournment on this ground and dismiss this application and the other analogous applications for non-prosecution."

The reasons given for refusing the adjournment are the only reasons for the dismissal of the applications because there is nothing to show that there was any non-prosecution as such. It is clear therefore that the Berhampore Court had jurisdiction to deal with the applications made to it under Ss. 20 and 19 of the Act and it was bound to deal with them on their merits and that its order dismissing the application on the alleged ground of non-prosecution is wrong and cannot be sustained.

Before however remanding the petitions to the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore for fresh disposal on the merits, we have to deal with the contention put forward by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar to the effect that the Berhampore Court would not be bound to apply or enforce the provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. This contention has to be met because that contention were well founded, there would be no reason to remand the petitions to the Berhampore Sub-Court for fresh disposal. We are of opinion that this contention has really no foundation, because, as was observed already, the very provision in the notification of the Governor-General in Council which provides that pending cases should continue to be dealt with by the Courts in which they were pending also shows that they should be dealt with as if the order in Council constituting the Orissa Province had not been made. In other words, the proceedings have to be continued as if the Berhampore Sub-Court had not ceased to be a Court belonging to and included in this Presidency and as these petitions and applications are proceedings initiated in connection with the pending execution application, it is obvious that the Berhampore Sub-Court and that Court alone has to deal with these applications and deal with them as if that Court is still a Court included in the Madras Province and as such bound by any Legislative enactment that may be in force in the Madras Province.

We are therefore of opinion that the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act has to be applied and its provisions enforced by the Berhampore Sub-Court in dealing with these petitions so long as the execution application continues to be pending in that Court, or, to use the words of the Notification, is "continued in that Court." It follows from this that Revision Petitions Nos. 372 to 375 have to be allowed and the orders of the Berhampore Sub-Court dated 13th December, 1938, and 23rd January, 1939, set aside and the petitions concerned remanded to the Berhampore Sub-Court for disposal according to law in the light of the observations contained in this judgment. There will, however, in the circumstances of the case, be no order as to costs in this Court in these Revision Petitions.

As regards the other Revision Petitions presented by the decree-holders from the order of the Berhampore Sub-Court dated 4th July, 1938, the order sought to be revised is clearly on the face of it an interim order and it is equally clear that that order was discharged and became of no effect after the petitions in which that interim order was passed had been ultimately dismissed in January, 1939, by the Berhampore Sub-Court. It is not disputed that this is the position in law. But Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar thinks that his clients might be prejudiced if certain observations made in the interim order of the 4th July, 1938, remain as they are because they might influence the final disposal on the merits of the petitions under Ss. 19 and 20. It is enough, in our opinion, to indicate our view that the order dated 4th July, 1938, is no longer in force after the dismissal of the petitions themselves on the 23rd January, 1939, and that nothing contained in that order should be deemed to be of any force or effect. With this indication of our opinion, these petitions are dismissed but without costs.

There remains only one other petition, namely, C. R. P. No. 588 filed by the decree-holder, to revise the order of the Chicacole Sub-Court dated 13th December, 1938, on the petitions presented to it under S. 19 by the judgment-debtors. That order merely states that the Chicacole Sub-Court had jurisdiction to deal with these petitions. From what we have said it is clear that the Chicacole Court had no jurisdiction because we have found it is the Berhampore Court alone which had jurisdiction. It follows from this that this petition must be allowed though without costs and the order of the Chicacole Sub-Court dated 13th December, 1938, set aside.

Where the appellants' creditors who had attached after a foreign adjudication of the decree-holder, claimed rateable distribution of the moneys brought into Court along with some other creditors who had before the adjudication attached the share of the insolvent under a preliminary decree for partition, Held, the receiver of the foreign Court is entitled to the free assets of the bankrupt. The free assets must include assets which are not required to meet a charge or an attachment in existence at the time of the adjudication. On appeal from the order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gentle dated 17th December, 1937 and made in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court in Application No. 2234 of 1937 in C. S. No. 420 of 1922.

K. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, A. Seshachariar, P. Chakrapani and T. G. Raghavachari for Appellants.

C. Vasudevan for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises a question of private international law. In C. S. No. 420 of 1922 of the Original Side of this Court three members of a joint Hindu family sued for partition of the family estate. One of the plaintiffs died and the other two were adjudicated insolvents by an order of the District Judge of Secunderabad, dated the 15th October, 1928, on an application filed on the 27th August, 1928. Secunderabad is not part of British India and the adjudication was therefore in law an adjudication by a foreign Court. On the 5th December, 1922, a preliminary decree was passed in the partition suit. On the 15th June, 1926, a Bombay creditor of the plaintiffs obtained a decree against them in the Bombay High Court and the decree was transferred to this Court for execution. In the execution proceedings which followed the Bombay creditor on the 20th December, 1926, attached the preliminary decree which the plaintiffs had obtained in the partition suit. Other creditors of the plaintiffs obtained decrees against them and nine of them also attached the preliminary decree before the order of adjudication was passed. Three of the creditors obtained orders of attachment after the adjudication. Two of the creditors who attached after adjudication are the appellants in the present appeal.

On the 18th April, 1937, the partition suit was compromised and in pursuance of the compromise the amount of Rs. 1,31,231-9-0 in cash and Government securities was paid into Court. The Official Receiver of Secunderabad settled with seven of the creditors who had attached before the adjudication for the sum of Rs. 66,926-1-0. We are told that two of the creditors who attached before judgment allowed their claims to become barred by the law of limitation and one proved in the insolvency. After settling with the seven creditors there remained a balance of Rs. 64,305-8-0. The Official Receiver asked that this amount should be paid out to him. The application was opposed by the appellants, but was granted. Under the compromise decree in the partition suit a sum representing 50,000 sicca rupees had to be paid into Court in addition to the Rs. 1,31,231-9-0. It was paid in and after reserving sufficient to meet the claim of the appellants which amounted to some Rs. 21,000, and the claim of the other creditor who had also attached after the order of adjudication all the moneys were withdrawn by the Official Receiver. The appeal concerns the right claimed by the appellants to withdraw the Rs. 21,000.

The appellants' case is that they are entitled in law to rateable distribution with the creditors who attached before adjudication and as there is sufficient money to pay all the creditors they are entitled to be paid the full amount of their claim out of the moneys in Court. In the course of the arguments the appellants' Counsel put forward an alternative claim, which was not advanced before Gentle, J., who heard the application. The aggregate amount claimed by the seven creditors with whom the Official Receiver settled was Rs. 98,000. It is said that even if the appellants are not entitled to withdraw the whole of the Rs. 21,000 they are entitled to receive out of the moneys in Court a sum representing the amount they would have received if the Rs. 98,000 had been rateably distributed between them and the seven creditors. In rejecting the claim made by the appellants before Gentle, J., the learned Judge relied on the judgments in *Ananthapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad*¹ and *Galbraith v. Grimshaw*².

In *Ananthapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad*¹, an appeal arising out of this very insolvency, the Privy Council held that the adjudication by a foreign Court operated as a private transfer within the meaning of S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When a foreign Court adjudicates a person insolvent the only property in British India which vests in the Receiver is the movable property which the insolvent was free to assign at the date of the adjudication and such property vests by virtue of private international law. Having regard to S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure the adjudication did not, however, affect the rights of a creditor who had attached before the adjudication. The creditor was the Bombay creditor to whom I have already referred.

S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure reads as follows:—

“Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other moneys contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Explanation:—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets.”

By virtue of the provisions of S. 73 of the Code where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of assets, applied to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among them all. There are provisos to the section, but they do not call for mention here. The appellants contend that inasmuch as S. 64 states that a private transfer of property which has been attached shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment and as the section expressly declares that “claims enforceable under attachment” include claims for rateable distribution, they are entitled by virtue of S. 73 to be treated in the same way as the creditors who attached before the adjudication are treated.

Under the municipal law a creditor who has attached before adjudication but has not received payment is not a secured creditor. The adjudication puts an end to the execution proceedings and the only course open to him is to prove in the insolvency. The law of British India is the same as the law of England in this respect. An adjudication by a foreign Court, being a private transfer within the meaning of S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure, does not affect the position of a creditor who before the adjudication has attached movable property of the insolvent. He remains entitled to the benefit of his attachment. In deciding the appeal in Ananthapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver, Secunderabad, the Judicial Committee applied principles laid down by the House of Lords in *Galbraith v. Grimshaw*². In that case the adjudication was in Scotland, but before adjudication a creditor had attached personalty in England. It was held that the attachment was effective. Lord Thankerton who delivered the judgment of the Board quoted the following passage from the speech of Lord Dunedin on Galbraith's cases:

Veeranna
Sha
v.
Official Receiver of Secunderabad.
Leach, C.J.

"Now so far as the general principle is concerned it is quite consistent with the comity of nations that it should be a rule of international law that if the Court finds that there is already pending a process of universal distribution of a bankrupt's effects it should not allow steps to be taken in its territory which would interfere with that process of universal distribution; and that I take to be the doctrine at the bottom of the cases of which *Gosline v. Aders*³ is only one example."

Lord Thankerton then went on to say:—

"This means that, after the date of the foreign adjudication order, it will be recognised as effective but it is equally clear from the opinions expressed in *Galbraith's case*² that it will not be allowed to interfere with any process, at the instance of a creditor, already pending, even though such process is incomplete, provided that at that date the bankrupt's freedom of disposal was so affected by the process that he could not have assigned the subject-matter of the process to the Receiver."

But an attachment after adjudication by a foreign Court is entirely a different matter. The receiver of the foreign Court is entitled to what Lord Macnaghten described in *Galbraith's case*² as the free assets of the bankrupt. I consider that the free assets must include assets which are not required to meet a charge or an attachment in existence at the time of the adjudication. It is said on behalf of the appellants that S. 64 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with S. 73 puts the Indian Law on a different basis. I am unable to accept this contention. The Legislature could not have intended the provisions of these sections to override this rule of private international law. By reason of this rule the appellants were not in a position to attach after adjudication.

On behalf of the appellants Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyangar has laid stress on the following passage in Lord Thankerton's judgment in Ananthapadmanabhaswami v. Official Receiver,

Leach, C.J.

Secunderabad :

"In the present case, at the date when the foreign adjudication order was made, the appellant was entitled to the benefit of his prior attachment of the decree in the Madras partition suit. The decree was thereby earmarked for the purpose of answering the Bombay money decree, and that inchoate right would have ripened into execution and sale; it is no matter that under S. 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure the appellant would have to share the proceeds of sale with other decree-holders; it would still be a valuable right."

It appears to me that Lord Thankerton must here have had in mind decree-holders who had also attached before adjudication. The position of a creditor attaching after adjudication was not under consideration.

As the foreign receiver is entitled to all the movable assets of the insolvent which were free at the date of the adjudication and as I hold that the free assets must be deemed to be the moneys left over after the satisfaction of the claims of the creditors who had attached before the adjudication it follows that in my opinion the appellants are not entitled to anything by reason of their attachment. The adjudication prevented the attachment having any validity and they were left merely with the right to prove in the insolvency. This disposes of both the points raised by the appellants.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Held, that when the fresh execution petition was filed along with the re-presented petition, both had become barred in fact and it was impossible to contend that limitation was saved for the fresh execution application by the subsequent order of dismissal passed on the re-presented petition.

The re-presented petition could not be deemed to be pending at the time when the new petition was filed and the new petition was not filed within three years of the final order on an application made in accordance with law.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal deals with a question of limitation in execution. The decree was dated 10th October, 1925. The last execution petition about which there was no dispute was dismissed on 28th June, 1930. On 19th June, 1933, an execution petition was presented bearing the wrong number of the suit and it was returned for rectification with the endorsement "suit number is wrong; names of parties do not tally." Seven days' time was allowed, the date of the return being 5th July, 1933. This execution petition was not re-presented at all until 29th August, 1935, when a fresh execution petition was filed and along with it the returned execution petition was re-presented with the suit number corrected, but the endorsement resubmitting the execution petition was unsigned and there was no application to excuse the delay, nor was there any explanation for the delay. On this the order was passed on 9th September, 1935 "Fresh Execution Petition filed. Vakil has not signed. Dismissed." The defective execution petition was never numbered at all, not even after this somewhat irregular re-presentation. The appellants, re-presenting the decree-holders, seek to rely on this order of dismissal to save limitation for the fresh execution petition which was presented on 29th August, 1935, that is to say, some 11 days before the order of dismissal was passed.

Naidu.

G. R. Naidu
v.
Venkata-

It was decided in a very recent case, Chidambaram Chettiar v. Murugesam Pillai,¹ by a Bench of this Court that if an execution petition is returned for amendment and the decree-holder takes no further action upon it, it should be treated as if he had not put in an application at all; that it is not permissible for the decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to re-present an execution petition returned for rectification. It was also held that such execution petitions not re-presented within the proper time cannot save limitation and that an order returning an execution petition for rectification by advocates is not a final order within the purport of Art. 182 (5) nor can one read into the order for the purpose of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act a clause that in default of re-presentation within the time allowed, the application will stand dismissed.

In a very recent case I followed that decision in applying it to facts very similar to these with which I have now to deal. In A. A. O. No. 18 of 1936 there was an execution petition returned for defects and not re-presented for four years. Then a fresh execution petition was filed along with the previously returned petition and an attempt was made to treat the previously returned petition as having been continuously pending, so that the new petition would be in time. This was based on an interpretation of a decision in Muhammad Abu Bakkar Maracair v. Ramakrishna Chettiar,² which has been dissented from by the learned Judges in the case just quoted. I held that, when an execution petition is returned for amendment, it has no judicial existence pending its re-presentation. If it is re-presented within time duly amended, the date of the original presentation will be the date of the execution application and the same position would result if it is re-presented late and accompanied by an application to excuse delay and the delay is excused. But if the returned petition is withheld for an inordinately long period and re-presented without any application to excuse delay merely in the hope of saving limitation for a fresh application, I held that it could not be deemed to be a pending application so as to save limitation for the fresh application.

An attempt is made to distinguish the present case on the ground that the executing Court actually passed a final order of dismissal on the application in spite of the fact that it was re-presented long after the time allowed. I do not see how the appellants' position is improved by this order, which in effect was nothing more than an order of rejection of an unfiled execution application re-presented long after the period allowed. When the fresh execution petition was filed along with the re-presented petition, both of them were in fact barred by limitation. It is impossible to my mind to contend that limitation is saved for the new petition by the subsequent order of dismissal passed on the re-presented petition. The re-presented petition cannot be deemed to have been pending at the time when the new petition was filed and the new petition was not filed within three years of the final order on an application made in accordance with law. I may also state that in my opinion an application which does not contain the correct number of the suit, the decree in which it is proposed to execute, cannot be deemed to be an application made in accordance with law. Not only does the Code in O. 21, r. 11 prescribe the number of the suit as the first requirement in an execution petition but common sense also indicates that an essential feature of an execution petition is that it should be identifiable with the suit under which it is filed. It seems to me that in the present case the defective application was not an application in accordance with law, that it had no judicial existence after it was returned without being filed for rectification and that when re-presented it was barred by limitation and any order upon it passed subsequently cannot avail to save limitation for the fresh execution petition presented contemporaneously. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

1. (1939) 2 M.L.J. 671.

2. (1932) 64 M.L.J. 401.

The trustees would not be entitled to a decree for possession.

Held, further, apart from Ss. 13, 14 and 15 of the Court-Fees Act, the Court has got inherent power to refund court-fee—vide Thammayya Naidu v. Venkataramanamma, (1932) 62 M L J. 541: I.L.R. 55 Mad. 641. As the temple in this case was incapable of valuation the appellants were entitled to a refund of the excess court-fee paid by them.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to recover possession of the plaint Siva temple called Vatakketath by the plaintiffs who constitute the board of trustees of the Tiruvangad Devaswom appointed by the decree in O. S. No. 8 of 1925 on the file of the District Court of North Malabar. The basis of the claim is that this Siva temple is a shrine subordinate to the Sri Rama temple of the Devaswom and situate in the same compound but the defendants who are the archakas of the Siva temple have set up a hostile title thereto alleging that they own it. The main defence is that the plaint temple does not belong to the Tiruvangad Devaswom and it is not a subordinate shrine as alleged in the plaint. The defendants further pleaded that the plaint temple belongs to their illom in jenm right and their illom has been in exclusive possession of the plaint temple to the knowledge of and against the trustees of the Tiruvangad Devaswom. They also pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and adverse possession. The two main questions to which both the lower Courts addressed themselves were the following: (1) whether the plaint temple belongs to the Tiruvangad Devaswom or whether it belongs to the defendants' illom; and (2) whether the suit is barred by limitation and adverse possession. Both the Courts have concurrently found that the plaint temple belongs to the Tiruvangad Devaswom and is not the private property of the defendants' illom, but in regard to the question of adverse possession the lower Courts differed. The learned Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that the right of the Tiruvangad Devaswom to the plaint temple was barred by adverse possession while the learned District Judge held it was not and he therefore gave a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs.

Vishnu
Nambudiri
v.
Ramunni
Marar.

Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon on behalf of the defendants-appellants contends that the view taken by the learned District Judge in regard to adverse possession was wrong, that even assuming the right of the Tiruvangad Devaswom was not barred by adverse possession, the plaintiffs can have no right to oust the defendants from their possession of the suit temple on the ground that they have acquired a right to the exclusive management of the suit temple by prescription and that the suit is liable to be dismissed even on the findings of both the Courts. The concurrent finding of both the Courts is that the plaint temple is a subordinate temple of the Tiruvangad Devaswom. Tiruvangad temple is admittedly a public temple and there can be no doubt that the plaint temple is also a public temple. In deciding the question of adverse possession it seems to me that both the Courts have not kept in view this fact. Being a public temple and therefore res extra commercium it is not open to a private individual to acquire by prescription any private ownership in regard thereto. The character of the temple as a public temple cannot be taken away by any assertion of private right and there is no evidence that the public have ever been excluded therefrom. Mr. Kuttikrishna Menon rightly concedes before me that he would not dispute the fact of the temple being a public temple. The plaint temple must therefore be deemed to be a public temple and a subordinate shrine to the main Tiruvangad temple. But the question still remains, are the plaintiffs entitled to oust the defendants from their possession of the suit temple? The concurrent finding of both the Courts in regard to the possession is that an ancestor of the defendants was introduced into this temple as an archaka and that after his death, his descendants continued to be in possession doing archaka service. Both the Courts have also found that the defendants have set up an exclusive right to the possession and management of the temple at any rate from 1903. None of the trustees of the temple ever sought to interfere with the management or possession of the defendants' family. The learned District Judge observes thus:—

"It does not also appear that the trustees of the Devasthanam attempted at any time to exercise any acts of control in the plaint temple. . . ."

It is in evidence that the defendants' family have been always performing puja and appropriating all the perquisites and offerings received at the temple and were generally attending to the management of the temple and at no time the trustees ever interfered with such management or claimed to receive any portion of the perquisites or offerings, even after the open assertion by the defendants of their absolute rights. It is also in evidence that such repairs as were needed have been done by the defendants in assertion of their absolute rights. It may be that the omission of the trustees of the Tiruvangad Devaswom to interfere with such control may have been due to long continued mismanagement of the trustees of the main temple which necessitated the framing of a scheme by the Court. But if the defendants have been openly setting up exclusive right to the possession and management of the temple adverse to the right of the management which may inhere in the trustees of the main temple by virtue of the fact that the suit temple was a subordinate shrine, the right of the trustees of the temple would certainly be lost by adverse possession. Probably the absence of such control is due to the fact that the usage is that the archaka should be in such possession and management subject to general supervision the trustees of the main temple may have over them. The terms under which the defendants' ancestor was introduced into the temple are not known. On the findings of both the Courts there can be no doubt that the defendants' family at any rate for a period of thirty years has been setting up a right of exclusive possession and management to the knowledge of the trustees. Therefore the facts of this case warrant the inference that the defendants have acquired the right of being hereditary archakas of the suit temple and as such to be in possession and management of it. They are therefore entitled to be in possession of the said temple, to perform the puja and appropriate the perquisites and offerings offered at the temple for their own use subject of course to the obligation of performing the puja. The plaintiffs-trustees have no right to interfere with the said management except to exercise a general supervision over them as trustees of the main temple. The plaintiffs would not therefore be entitled to a decree for possession. In my opinion the defendants are the hereditary archakas of the suit temple subject to the supervision of the trustees of the main temple as mentioned by me aforesaid.

Vishnu
Nambudiri
v.
Ramunni
Marar.

In the view I have taken that the defendants are the hereditary archakas of the suit temple subject to the supervision of the trustees of the main temple as mentioned by me as aforesaid, the decree of the lower appellate Court negating their right must be reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit must be upheld on the basis that the defendants are entitled to be in possession as hereditary archakas. The result is that the plaintiffs' suit will be dismissed, but I direct each party to bear their own costs throughout.

Leave to appeal is refused.

This appeal having been set down to be spoken to this day, after notice to the Government Pleader re refund of court-fee, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Some doubt was raised by the office with regard to the refund of court-fee in this case. I issued notice to the Government Pleader. Mr. Krishna Rao on behalf of the Government Pleader frankly stated to me that refund should be ordered and I think he is right. Apart from Ss. 13, 14 and 15 of the Court-Fees Act, the Court has got inherent power to refund court-fee (vide Thammayya Naidu v. Venkataramanammal). As the temple in this case is incapable of valuation I think the appellants are entitled to a refund of the excess court-fee paid by them. The proper court-fee in this case is Rs. 100. The appellants are therefore entitled to a certificate for the refund of the balance. Mr. Govinda Menon asks me to make an order also in his clients' favour. I cannot do so in this appeal. If so advised, he is entitled to make an application to the lower Court.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 1, r. 10 (2)—Adding parties—Suit for declaration that plaintiffs were solely entitled to hereditary right to perform archaka service in a temple—Stranger claiming to be entitled to joint interest in those rights—If can be added as party.

Where in a suit for a declaration that the three plaintiffs were solely entitled to a hereditary right to perform archaka service in the suit temple and to enjoy the service inam lands, another person sought to be added as a party as she claimed a joint interest in those rights and contended that her presence as party was therefore necessary to avoid multiplicity of suits,

Held, it was a case in which, in view of the relief claimed by the three plaintiffs, the presence of the new defendant was necessary within the meaning of O. 1, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all questions involved in the suit.

Vyidianadaiyan v. Sitaramaiyan, (1881) I.L.R. 5 Mad 52 and Secretary of State v. Murugesu Mudaliar, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 443, followed.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tenali dated 21st October, 1936 and made in C. M. P. No. 816 of 1936 in O. S. No. 66 of 1935.

V. Govindarajachari for Petitioners.

P. Satyanarayana Rao for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order made by the learned District Munsif of Tenali by which he allowed a petition presented on behalf of the second respondent here that she may also be impleaded as a party to a suit O. S. No. 66 of 1935. The application was presented under O. 1, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The relevant portion of the rule is worded as follows:

“The Court may at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added."

Manga-

Balarama

It is obvious from this provision that the Court in making an order directing a new party to be added must be satisfied either that that party ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant or that the presence of that party is necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. From the order of the learned District Munsif it appears that at the hearing of the application, the Vakil for the plaintiffs was absent and only the first plaintiff was present in person to represent his objections. The learned District Munsif says that the first plaintiff was unable to explain what detriment would be suffered by him if the petition was granted. Then he says that he sees no detriment that would be caused to the plaintiff if the second respondent here were brought on record as the second defendant. He also says that he does not see how it widens the scope of the suit or changes the character of it. From these statements contained in the order it is clear that the learned District Munsif did not apply his mind to the essential requisites prescribed by O. 1, r. 10 and therefore it became necessary for the learned Advocates for the parties to address lengthy arguments before me in support of their respective contentions.

The suit was filed by three plaintiffs and the main reliefs asked for in the plaint were the following:—

"(1) to declare the plaintiffs' hereditary right to perform archaka service in the Chennakesava Anjeneya Swami Varu Temple situated in the village of Nidubrolu;

(2) to remove the defendant from the position of archaka and to declare that the defendant has absolutely no right to the archaka service;

(3) to remove the defendant from possession of the house mentioned as item 2 in the schedule to the plaint and to put the plaintiffs in possession thereof;

(4) to direct the defendant to give the plaintiffs the property mentioned in item 3 of the schedule to the plaint or its value; and

(5) to grant a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering in future with the plaintiffs' enjoyment of the rights to perform archaka service."

The following geneological table is necessary to understand the plaintiffs' case as disclosed in the plaint.

Manga-

The plaint allegations are to the effect that the hereditary right to the archaka service in the temple was vested in the ancestors of Venkata Narayanacharlu and Ramacharlu who were both the brothers of the first plaintiff that these two brothers are now dead but that during their lifetime they were both of them performing the archaka service personally each of them doing duty alternately for six months at a time in the year and that as remuneration for such service they were enjoying separately in two shares the archaka service inam lands. The first plaintiff's case according to the plaint is that on the death of Ramacharlu his right to enjoy the one-half of the archaka service inam lands and his right to perform archaka service for a period of six months in the year devolved on the first plaintiff. The case of the second and third plaintiffs according to the plaint is that on the death of Venkata Narayanacharlu whose daughter the third plaintiff is, the corresponding rights which vested in Venkata Narayanacharlu devolved on the third plaintiff and her husband the second plaintiff. How the third plaintiff's husband, the second plaintiff became entitled to this right is not explained in the plaint. The plaint goes on to say that the second plaintiff's father Rajagopalacharulu Garu was in actual management of the right mentioned above on behalf of the plaintiffs and while he was in such management he had appointed the defendant as a temporary clerk for performing the archaka service and had put him in possession of the house mentioned in Schedule B to the plaint on the distinct understanding that he should relinquish archaka service and deliver possession of the house whenever he was called upon to do so. Subsequently an arrangement was made between the first plaintiff on the one hand and the second and third plaintiffs on the other according to which the latter were to perform the archaka service alternately for six months at a time in the year and the first period of the six months ended on the 30th of June, 1933. Thereupon the first plaintiff caused the second and third plaintiffs to send a registered notice to the defendant informing him that the first plaintiff's right to perform the service for six months commenced on the 1st of July, 1933 and that since the plaintiffs had decided to perform the service themselves the defendant should relinquish such service and deliver possession of the house and other perquisites that were given to him during the time that he was called upon to perform such service. To that notice the defendant replied stating that he was appointed archaka not on behalf of the plaintiffs but by the trustees of the temple appointed under the Hindu Religious Endowments Board.

The first defendant in his written statement alleged inter alia that the first plaintiff was not entitled to any relief in respect of the temple because he had been given away in adoption to another family as a result of which he had lost all his rights in his natural family and that on the death of Venkata Narayana Charlu, his rights devolved on his two daughters, namely, the third plaintiff and her sister the respondent who has now on her application been directed by the Court below to be impleaded as second defendant. Thus the first defendant's version was that neither the first plaintiff nor the second plaintiff had any interest whatsoever in the archaka service or in the service inam lands but that the right involved in the suit was vested in the third plaintiff and her sister, the second respondent to this application. The first defendant also asked in his written statement for further particulars as to how the right that was vested in Venkata Narayanacharlu devolved upon the third plaintiff and her husband the second plaintiff and stated that on such particulars being furnished he would plead further. It was after this written statement was filed that the second respondent who as already stated is the sister of the third plaintiff came forward with her application to be impleaded as a party to the suit. Her version in the petition filed by her was that during the minority of herself and the third plaintiff their uncle Rajagopalacharlu Garu who is also the father-in-law of the third plaintiff was invested with the right of managing the temple and the service inam lands and also performing the archaka service on behalf of the two sisters. Her case therefore was that she was entitled to one-half of the suit properties, that she had an equal joint interest with the third plaintiff in the suit property and that consequently she was a necessary party to the suit. This application was resisted before the trial Court on behalf of the three plaintiffs who contended that in case the petition was allowed and the respondent was impleaded as a party, it would lead to a triangular fight about title and that the effect of including her as a party would be to convert the suit which was one in ejectment into a suit based on title. They also pleaded that the right of the present respondent if any to the temple lands, had become barred by limitation. These are the main contentions that are urged before me on behalf of the petitioners by their learned Advocate Mr. Govindarajachari. He relies on the English decisions reported in *Moser v. Marsden*¹ and also on the decision of a single Judge of this Court reported in *Sri Mahant Prayaga Doss v. Board of Commissioners for Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras*². There are other reported cases relied on by him in support of his contention that the second respondent should not have been impleaded as a party to the suit and those are the decisions reported in *Narayanaswami Naidu v. Subbaramulu Naidu*³, *Virbhadrappa Shikvanti v. Shekabai*⁴, *Secretary of State v. Murugesu Mudaliars*⁵ and *Abdul Gafur v. Ali Miah*⁶.

The learned Advocate for the respondent on the other hand contends that the subject-matter of the suit concerns the newly added party and that the suit is not a simple suit in ejectment but that it is a suit for a declaration that the three plaintiffs are solely entitled to a hereditary right to perform archaka service in the temple and to enjoy the service inam lands. He contends that as a joint interest in those rights is claimed by the second respondent her presence as a party to the suit is necessary to avoid multiplicity of suits. In support of his contentions he relies mainly upon the decision in Vyodianadayyan v. Sitaramayyan,⁷ which has been followed by Venkatasubba Rao, J., in the decision reported in Secretary of State v. Murugesu Mudaliars. He also relies upon the decision in *Montgomery v. Foy, Morgan & Co.*⁸, *Sivarama Pillai v. Ganesarathnam Pillai*⁹, *Krishnaswami Naidu v. Municipal Council, Bellary*¹⁰ and *Bavajee v. Annapurnamma*¹. I am satisfied that the contentions of the learned Advocate for the respondents are well founded in view of the main relief asked for by the three plaintiffs in their plaint. This, in my view, is a case in which the presence of the second defendant-respondent before the trial Court is necessary within the meaning of O. 1, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. By avoiding to implead her as a party to the suit the plaintiffs are seeking to obtain a relief which will not completely dispose of all the matters in controversy involved in the suit.

The learned Judges who decided the case reported in Vydianadayyan v. Sitaramayyan,² were Sir Charles Turner, C.J. and Muthusamy Aiyar, J. The decision turned on the scope of S. 32 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877. Under that section also the Court had the power of directing a person to be made a party:

"Whose presence before the Court may be necessary to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit."

These are the words that occur in O. 1, r. 10 (2) of the present Code also. Dealing with these words the learned Judges say as follows:

"Is it meant by these words that a person not originally impleaded is to be made a party only if the questions raised in the suit cannot otherwise be completely and effectually determined between the parties to the suit? or is it meant completely and effectually determined so that they shall not be again raised in that or in any other suit between the parties to the suit or any of them and third parties? To accept the more restricted interpretation involves the addition of words which we do not find in the section, namely, 'between the parties to the suit'"

This seems to me to be a complete and effective answer to a similar argument addressed in the present case by the learned Advocate for the petitioner. Following the decisions reported in *Vydianadayyan v. Sitaramayyan*² and *Secretary of State v. Murugesu Mudaliar*³, I therefore hold that the learned District Munsif acted correctly in allowing the petition of the second respondent to be impleaded as a party to the suit. This Civil Revision Petition is in the circumstances dismissed with costs. The order staying the trial before the Court below is cancelled.

In re.Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 415—Imposition of separate sentences of fines—No combination of punishments within meaning of section.

S. 415, Criminal Procedure Code, when it refers to two or more punishments is referring to two or more punishments of different kinds.

Where a Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed sentences of imprisonment and imposed two separate sentences of fine, there is no combination of punishments in one sentence within the meaning of S. 415, Criminal Procedure Code.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of Session of the Kurnool Division in C. A. No. 7 of 1939 preferred against the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate of Markapur in C. C. No. 48 of 1938.

K. S. Jayaram Aiyar for Petitioner.

K. Venkataraghavachari for The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The order of the Court was made by . . .

Burn, J.—This is an application for revision of the order of the learned Sessions Judge, Kurnool, in C. A. No. 7 of 1939. That appeal was presented to the learned Sessions Judge from the decision of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Markapur, in C. C. No. 48 of 1938. In that case the First Class Magistrate was dealing with twenty-four persons who had been tried by the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Giddalore in C. C. No. 593 of 1937. The learned Sub-Magistrate found all the 24 accused persons guilty of rioting (S. 147 of the Indian Penal Code), wrongful confinement (S. 341 of the Indian Penal Code), assault with intent to dishonour (S. 355 of the Indian Penal Code) and simple hurt (S. 323 of the Indian Penal Code) read with S. 149 of the Indian Penal Code. He convicted them under those sections but considering that they were persons who might properly be dealt with under S. 380, Criminal Procedure Code, he submitted the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under the provisions of S. 562 (1) proviso. The learned First Class Magistrate dealing with the case under the provisions of S. 380, Criminal Procedure Code, convicted all the 24 accused of rioting (S. 147, Indian Penal Code) and sentenced them for that offence to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each and accused Nos. 6 and 24 be convicted also under S. 355, Indian Penal Code and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each for that offence. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not say what he proposed to do with regard to the other convictions which had already been recorded by the Sub-Magistrate. But that is a matter which is not before us now and we do not propose to interfere with it.

* CrI, R. C. No. 418 of 1939.
(CrI. R. P. No. 388 of 1939).

The appeal presented to the learned Sessions Judge was on behalf of the 23rd accused only. He had been convicted only of rioting (S. 147, Indian Penal Code) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. Under S. 413, Criminal Procedure Code, the 23rd accused would ordinarily have no right of appeal but the appeal was filed on his behalf under the provisions of S. 415-A. It was alleged that the 6th and 24th accused, having been sentenced to pay two fines of Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 had a right of appeal under S. 415-A and therefore the 23rd accused having been convicted at the same trial had also a right of appeal. The learned Sessions Judge has held that none of the 24 accused had any right of appeal in this case. He therefore rejected the appeal referring the 23rd accused to an application for revision to this Court if so advised. The 23rd accused has applied for revision of the order of the learned Sessions Judge.

The only authority of this Court quoted by learned Counsel for the petitioner is the decision of Mr. Justice King in the case of Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Kollur Dasa Pai. That was a case in which on a summary trial a first class Bench of Magistrates had sentenced one of several persons convicted under the Gaming Act to pay a fine of Rs. 25 for an offence under S. 9 and a fine of Rs. 50 for an offence under S. 8. The persons convicted appealed to the Sessions Judge and he held that an appeal lay. The learned Public Prosecutor filed a revision petition against that decision and Mr. Justice King held that the learned Sessions Judge's decision was correct.

With respect we think that the decision of Mr. Justice King in that case was wrong. The matter depends upon the ramayya,

ramayya,

Burn, J.

interpretation of S. 415, Criminal Procedure Code, which says:

"An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in S. 413 or S. 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace."

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate when he imposed upon the 6th and 24th accused two fines of Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 respectively was passing a sentence combining two of the punishments referred to in S. 413. Now S. 413 is as follows:—

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court of Session passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the First Class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding rupees fifty only."

There are two punishments here mentioned (1) imprisonment and (2) fine. But it is pointed out that in S. 415 there is a reference to "any two or more" of the punishments mentioned in S. 413 or S. 414 and since in S. 413 there are only two kinds of punishments mentioned and in S. 414 there is one kind of punishment mentioned, namely, the punishment of fine, it is argued that if there are two or more sentences of fine this must be regarded as a sentence combining two of the punishments mentioned in S. 413 or S. 414. We are unable to accept this argument. We are of opinion that S. 415 when it refers to two or more punishments is referring to two or more punishments of different kinds. The history of the Code is we think important in this connection and makes the matter clear. When S. 415 was just enacted there were three kinds of punishments provided in both Ss. 413 and 414, namely, in S. 413 a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only, fine not exceeding Rs. 50 only or whipping only and in S. 414 a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months only, fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only or whipping only. In those circumstances although it might possibly be argued that S. 415 was to some extent superfluous, it could not be argued that it had no meaning. It was clear that it meant to refer to sentences in which two or more different kinds of punishments referred to in S. 413 and S. 414 were combined. After the modifications in S. 413 and S. 414 introduced in 1923 it is impossible to attribute any real meaning to the phrase "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" in S. 415 so far as it relates at any rate to S. 414. It is clear we think as Mr. Justice Edgley stated in the case of Kali Charan v. Adhar Mandal that S. 415 has no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has relied upon two decisions of the Oudh Chief Court reported in *Kandhai v. King Emperor*² and *Makrand Singh v. Ganga*³ and also upon the decision of Mr. Justice Cuming in the case reported in *Akabbar Ali v. Emperor*⁴. With respect we are not able to agree with those decisions. We prefer the opinion of Mr. Justice Mitter in the case reported in *Nawabali Haji v. Jainab Bibi*⁵ and the view of the learned Chief Justice of Bombay and Mr. Justice Crump in the case reported in *Shidlingappa v. Emperor*⁶. Our decision can be rested upon the words of S. 415 itself. It is not possible in this case to say that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has passed any sentence by which any two or more of the punishments mentioned in S. 413 are combined. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not combine any of the punishments in either of the sentences that he imposed. He imposed two separate sentences of fine. There is no combination of punishments in one sentence within the meaning of S. 415, Criminal Procedure Code. We think therefore that the learned Sessions Judge was correct and that this application for revision must be dismissed.

Learned Counsel for the petitioner has attempted to persuade us to interfere in revision finally against the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate. That is not the prayer in the petition which is for revision of the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge. But in so far as this is concerned we observe that the grounds taken for saying that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in convicting the 23rd accused (present petitioner) are all grounds of fact and not connected with any question of law. Learned Counsel points out that the Sub-Magistrate who tried the case recommended that all the accused should be dealt with under S. 562, Criminal Procedure Code. But the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has given Hindu Law—Marriage with girl, not a virgin—Validity—Doctrine of factum valet—Applicability.

According to ordinary practice Hindus of the higher caste married virgins, but if a Hindu chose to marry a girl who was not a virgin and whom he knew not to be a virgin, he could not use that fact as a ground for treating the marriage null and void. The doctrine of factum valet might well be called in aid.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Malabar in A. S. No. 223 of 1935 preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kuthuparamba in O. S. No. 295 of 1934.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for maintenance. The appellant (the husband) raises the contention that his marriage with the first plaintiff is invalid because the first plaintiff was pregnant at the time of her marriage; consequently her daughter the second plaintiff must be deemed to be an illegitimate child.

The lower appellate Court has found as a fact that the first plaintiff was pregnant at the time of her marriage, that she was pregnant by the defendant himself and that the marriage was none the less valid, the parties being Sudras. It seems to me not quite clear whether in fact the parties, who belong to the caste known as Edanatan Shettis, are Sudras or Vaisyas, strictly speaking. But I am of opinion that this question has no bearing on the point to be decided. The learned District Munsif propounded a rule, for which he quotes no authority, that one of the essential conditions of a valid Hindu marriage is that the bride should be a virgin. The learned District Judge says that there is no objection under the Hindu law governing Sudras to a pregnant woman marrying, quoting the well-known passage in Manu to the effect that when a man marries a woman who is pregnant, the male child of her womb belongs to the bridegroom and is called "the son received with the bride". The practice recognised in that passage is described by Mayne as now obsolete. Granting that it is no longer the practice—at any rate among the higher castes—for a pregnant woman to be married with the approval of the community and her offspring to be recognised as legitimate regardless of its paternity, it is going a long way to say that if a girl has been regularly married and it is subsequently found that she was pregnant at the time of her marriage or was not a virgin, the marriage becomes void; and it is going still further to say that, when a man has married a girl with due formalities, he himself having had an irregular connection with that girl before marriage, he is entitled to repudiate the marriage on the ground of the lack of virginity of the bride. No authority has been quoted before me in support of the rule that a marriage by a Hindu with a girl who is not a virgin is void. It seems to me most undesirable to lay down such a rule unless it is supported by the most ample authority, for it would open the door to scandalous allegations brought by persons anxious to get rid of an unwanted wife. Still more undesirable is it to allow a husband, in defence to a suit for maintenance by a deserted wife and child, to adduce evidence that he made the bride pregnant before he married her and that therefore the marriage is void. I know of no rule of Hindu Law whereunder a marriage can be declared void merely on the ground that the bride was not a virgin at the time that she was married. I grant that the ordinary practice is for Hindus of the higher castes to marry virgins. But if a Hindu chooses to marry a girl who is not a virgin and whom he knows not to be a virgin, he cannot, in my opinion, use this fact as a ground for subsequently treating the marriage as null and void.

It is suggested that a statement in the cross-examination of the plaintiffs' second witness that a pregnant woman cannot be married, might be sufficient evidence of a special custom to that effect in the particular caste. There are grave objections to this contention. Firstly, the witness himself qualifies that statement by saying that such a marriage would be valid if the pregnancy was by the future husband. Secondly, it would take much more than the isolated statement of a single witness made in cross-examination to establish a valid custom as prevailing in the caste. Thirdly, even if it be the rule that a pregnant woman cannot be married, it does not by any means follow that a marriage celebrated in contravention of this rule would be null and void, for the doctrine of factum valet might well be called in aid.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A. Bhujanga Rao and D. R. Krishna Rao for Appellant.

K. Srinivasa Rao for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises the question whether the paternal grandmother of a Hindu minor is his lawful guardian when she happens to be his nearest living relation. From 1917 to 1924 the respondent's father had on various occasions borrowed money from the appellant. On the 18th September, 1924, an account was taken and it was found that the respondent's father owed the appellant an aggregate sum of Rs. 3,825 for which he executed a promissory note. The instrument was not properly stamped and therefore was not admissible in evidence. Realizing the defect the appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Bellary for relief on the basis of a settled account. The date of the institution of the suit was 16th July, 1932, and unless the appellant was entitled to rely on certain endorsements on the promissory notes his suit was time barred. I should mention that the respondent's father had died on the 4th October, 1924, and the suit was against the respondent as his legal representative. The respondent's mother had predeceased his father and on his father's death Neelamma, his paternal grandmother, took charge of his property. On the 6th September, 1927, she paid to the appellant a sum of Rs. 70 in reduction of the interest due on the loans and made an endorsement to this effect on the promissory note. On the 10th November, 1927, the District Court of Bellary acting under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act appointed one Basappa the guardian of the minor's property. On the 18th February, 1928, Basappa paid a sum in reduction of the amount due and made an endorsement on the promissory note recording the fact of payment. On the 18th July, 1929, Neelamma made another payment in reduction of the debt and this was also followed by an endorsement on the instrument. Basappa was then alive and was still the lawful guardian of the respondent, but he died a month later. The last payment to the appellant was made by Neelamma on the 25th August, 1929. This was a sum of Rs. 1,000 paid towards the principal. Again she made an endorsement on the promissory note recording the fact of payment. In order to save limitation the appellant has to rely on the endorsements made by Neelamma on the 6th September, 1927, and on the 25th August, 1929. The District Munsif and on appeal the District Judge of Bellary held that the suit was time barred. The appellant then filed this second appeal which has been placed before a Full Bench in view of conflicting decisions of this Court bearing on the question whether Neelamma was under Hindu Law the lawful guardian of the minor when she made these particular endorsements.

S. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act states that where interest on a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or his agent duly authorised in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made; provided that, save in the case of a payment of interest made before the 1st January, 1928, an acknowledgment of the payment appears in the handwriting of, or in a writing signed by the person making the payment. S. 21 (1) states that the expression "agent duly authorized in this behalf" includes the person's lawful guardian. The fact that Neelamma was the de facto guardian of the minor would not help the appellant. It was expressly held by a Bench of this Court (Madhavan Nair and Abdur Rahman, JJ.), in *Nāgāyya v. Narāsayya*¹, that an acknowledgment of a debt made by a de facto guardian of a minor does not prevent the debt from being time barred. This decision followed a previous decision of this Court to the same effect. The wording of S. 20 and S. 21 of the Limitation Act leaves no room for doubt that this decision is correct. The appellant, however, says that Neelamma was the lawful guardian of the minor, except during the period when Basappa was acting in pursuance of the order passed under the Guardians and Wards Act.

In support of this contention the learned Advocate for the appellant has relied on a passage in the edition of Strange's "Hindu Law" published in 1864, 4th edition and a passage in Macnaghten's "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law" quoted in *Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kādermoye Dossee*². The passage from Strange is at page 72 and reads as follows:—

"The natural guardians of a minor are, first his father, then his mother, elder brother, paternal relatives and maternal relatives."

The passage from Macnaghten is in these words:—

"A father is recognised as the legal guardian of his children, when he exists; and when the father is dead the mother may assume the guardianship. In default of her, an elder brother of a minor is competent to assume the guardianship of him. In default of such brother, the paternal relations generally are entitled to hold the office of guardian; and failing such relatives, the Office devolves on the maternal kinsmen, according to their degree of proximity; but the appointment of guardians universally rests with the ruling power."

The learned Advocate would have it that these passages must be accepted as authoritative support for the proposition that the legal guardianship devolves upon the nearest paternal relative and in default of a paternal relative on the nearest maternal kinsman. I am not prepared to accept this argument. I consider that it is contrary to principle and accepted authority.

It is common ground that the ancient texts of Hindu Law do not provide for the management of a minor's property beyond stating that the guardianship shall rest with the King. The position of the King is now taken by the Court. Custom has, however, recognised that the father of a Hindu minor, and on his death the minor's mother, is entitled to the guardianship of the minor's estate. This has been accepted from time immemorial so universally that the right of the father or of the mother as the case may be cannot now be disputed, but it appears to be equally clear that custom has not extended the rule beyond the mother. In the case of *Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee*¹, Garth, C. J., referring to the passage from Macnaghten which I have quoted said:—

"We do not think that this passage means that all the persons therein mentioned have in turn an absolute right to take upon themselves the guardianship of a minor, without any permission or authority, from the ruling power. If it did mean this, the authorities cited would not appear to support it."

Garth, C. J., then went on to point out that Jagannatha, one of the authorities cited, after quoting from Manu this passage:

"The King should guard the property which descends to an infant by inheritance, until he returns from the house of his preceptor, or until he has passed his minority," and from the Ratnacara this statement:—

"Wealth which descends to an infant by inheritance, and becomes the property of the minor, let the King guard; that is, let him protect it from the other heirs," had proceeded to add these observations of his own:

"Consequently, the meaning is, let him (the King) act in such manner that other heirs may not take the whole, defrauding the infant who is incapable for non-age of conducting his own affairs; or the sense may be, let him commit the share of the minor in trust to any one co-heir or other guardian."

There is here authority that no one in the family is entitled as of right to act as the guardian of the minor. The right to act then depended upon the decision of the King. The judgment in *Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee*¹ is of special importance in the present case as it related to a contest between the paternal grandmother and the paternal uncle on the one side and the maternal grandmother on the other for the custody of a minor. The Court held that none of them was entitled to claim custody as the lawful guardian.

The judgment in *Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee*¹ was accepted as correctly stating the law in *Mst. Bhikuo Koer v. Mst. Chamela Koer*², which was also decided by the Calcutta High Court. This was a case under the Guardians and Wards Act and the contesting parties were the maternal grandmother and step-sister of a minor who were his nearest relatives. Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ., held that there was not, even before the Guardians and Wards Act was passed, any one other than the father or the mother who had an absolute right to the custody of a Hindu minor.

*Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee*¹ has been cited with approval in two decisions of this Court. *Ranganayaki Ammal v. Ramanuja Aiyangar*³ and *Thayammal v. Kuppanna Koundan*⁴. In the latter case Sadasiva Aiyar, J., following *Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee*¹ and *Mst. Bhikuo Koer v. Mst. Chamela Koer*², held that under Hindu Law nobody else than the father and mother of a minor "with probable exceptions in favour of the elder brother and the 'direct male and female ancestors of the minor'", is entitled as a matter of natural right to be and to act as guardian of a minor's person and properties. Recourse must, he said, be had to the Court (representing the rights of the King which are paramount to even the rights of the parents) where there is no natural guardian alive. It was not indicated how exceptions might arise in favour of the elder brother or the direct male and female ancestors of a minor and the decision cannot be taken as going really beyond what was decided in the two Calcutta cases. In Seetharamamma v. Appiah, Viswanatha Sastriar, J., expressed the opinion that there is nothing in Hindu Law "which limits guardianship only to the father, the mother, and, failing them, the King". This statement cannot be accepted as correctly stating the position as I have already pointed out the Hindu Law, in so far as it is to be gathered from the ancient texts only provides for the King having charge of a minor's property. There is nothing to be found in the ancient writings which can be interpreted as giving the father or the mother any right to guardianship. Their present rights in this respect are based merely on custom.

F.B.
Chennappa
v.
Onkarappa.
Leach, C.J.

In Surayya v. Subbamma, Devadoss and Jackson, JJ., went very far and it is this decision which has caused this appeal to be placed before a Full Bench. They decided that under the Hindu Law, in the absence of the father and the mother, the paternal grandmother is the natural guardian of the grandchildren. They said that there was no direct authority for the contention that the paternal grandmother was not the natural guardian of her grandchildren in the absence of their father and mother, but they did not consider the bearing of the two Calcutta cases to which I have referred. The basis of their decision that the paternal grandmother is the natural guardian of her grandchildren is to be gathered from this statement in the judgment:

"Considering the habits and customs of the people of this part of the country, there is no reason why the paternal grandmother should not be considered as the natural guardian of her grandchildren in the absence of their father and their mother."

The short answer to this statement is that neither by Hindu law or custom is the grandmother recognised as the lawful guardian of the minor. No member of the family other than the father or the mother has been recognised as having the right of guardianship and this statement receives full support from Mayne, 10th edition, page 299, from Mullah's Principles of Hindu Law, 8th edition, page 565, and from Trevelyan's "Hindu Law", 3rd edition, page 231. The Bombay High Court in effect expressed the same opinion in *In re Gulbai and Lilbai*¹. Of course, all other things being equal the nearest relative of the minor should have the position of guardian but if the father and the mother have died no relative can become the lawful guardian without an order of the Court.

I hold that the Courts below were right in refusing to recognize Neelamma as the guardian in law of the minor and in rejecting the claim that her endorsements bound him. It follows that I consider that *Surayya v. Subbamma*² was wrongly decided and therefore should not be followed.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mockett, J.

Mockett, J.—I entirely agree and am only adding a few words in view of the fact that we are differing from a Bench of this High Court. After the very full investigation into this subject which has been made to-day—the learned Counsel for the appellant referred to all the relevant decisions,—I think it is clear that at least at some period of time which it is difficult to fix, the only guardian of a minor was "the King", as he is so described in the texts. But to-day undoubtedly it cannot be argued that the father and in his absence the mother are not the legal guardians. They have been so recognised by usage and custom. Indeed the position of the father is impliedly recognised by statute under S. 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act. How all this came about is attractively put in the latest edition of Mayne on Hindu Law, paragraph 231 at page 299. The learned author envisages the natural delegation to the parents by the King of duties so intimately affecting their son, but that idea, as has been pointed out in the authorities to which my Lord has referred, although now having attained the force of law, has never been extended beyond the parents by the Courts with the exception of the decision in *Surayya v. Subbamma*². In the case of persons other than the parents, an express delegation or appointment is required and this has been done and is to-day done through the machinery of the Court of Wards. With all respect, I think the learned Judges who decided *Surayya v. Subbamma*² confused the two positions, namely, a consideration as to who was the most desirable person to be appointed as guardian of a minor with a consideration of whether desirability constituted a person a legal guardian automatically. The difference between the two positions is fully recognised by Davar, J., in In re Gulbai and Lilbai and it seems to me that if these two distinctions are kept apart, this subject presents very little difficulty. Desirability can only be relevant in an application to remove the father or mother or in an application to appoint some one else. I agree that the decision of my learned brothers, Devadoss and Jackson, JJ., in *Surayya v. Subbamma*² is not in conformity with authority and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

1. (1907) I.L.R. 32 Bom. 50.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—It is scarcely necessary for me to add anything after, if I may say so with the utmost respect, the full and elaborate consideration that the matter has received at the hands of my Lord. The question in short is whether a paternal grandmother can by reason of her relationship alone be held to be a lawful guardian within the meaning of S. 21 of the Indian Limitation Act. She may in a sense be regarded as a natural guardian as her relationship to the minor is so close that she may be expected naturally to watch over and guard his interests. It is however better to avoid the use of the expression for the present purpose, as we are not concerned with finding whether in the ordinary course of nature she is or is not a fit and proper person to protect the minors' interests in the absence of a nearer relation. The statute has used the expression lawful guardian and the introduction of the term natural guardian can scarcely elucidate discussion, but on the contrary may divert the attention.

The Act does not define the expression "lawful guardian". But it is obvious, that we must resort to the personal law of the minor or to other enactments if any to ascertain its meaning. The only enactment having a bearing is the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, which does no more than define the word guardian, simpliciter. We have therefore to fall back on the personal law of the minor, namely, the Hindu law to get at the meaning of the expression with which we are concerned. If a person has been appointed or declared a guardian by Court under the Guardians and Wards Act, he or she is undoubtedly a lawful guardian. The difficulty arises only when no such appointment has been made. A lawful guardian can be no other than a person whom the law invests with the right and duty of protecting the property of the minor. Such a person is generally described as a de jure guardian, in contrast to a de facto guardian. The law does make a real distinction between a de jure guardian and a de facto guardian. A de facto guardian may be a relation or even a mere intermeddling stranger who in fact assumes the management of a minor's property though in law he or she has no authority to do so. It is consequently impossible to regard him as a lawful guardian, notwithstanding the fact that by reason of the decision of Courts, the acts of a de facto guardian bind the estate of the minor, if done under the pressure of necessity or for the clear benefit of his estate.

There is in the texts of Hindu law no warrant for regarding a paternal grandmother or indeed even the parents themselves for that matter, as the lawful guardians of a minor entitled to manage his property as of right. The texts bearing upon the point are few, and do not throw any direct light on the point under consideration. They only seem to establish the proposition that it is the King alone who as parens patriae is the universal and supreme guardian of all the minors and their estates in the Kingdom. He of course has the power to delegate his authority and to appoint guardians, and that power is now vested in the Courts established by law by a process of legislative delegation, if I may so call it. As has been pointed out by my Lord, the parents of a minor have been so long and so consistently regarded as lawful guardians by the Courts no less than by the community that an exception in their favour must be held to have been engrafted on the primeval law of the Hindu text writers. The father and in his absence the mother must accordingly be regarded as lawful guardians, not requiring an appointment for acting as such, and this has now to be treated as an integral rule of the law itself. But such a custom is wholly lacking in the case of other remoter relations not excluding the paternal grandmother however much they may be interested in the welfare of the minor. In the passages cited from Macnaghten and Strange, there would seem to be at the first look a statement of the order of lawful guardianship which includes other relations besides the father and the mother. It is however clear to my mind that the enumeration was not intended to declare the persons to be recognised as lawful guardians under the Hindu law without reference to an appointment by Court. It seems to me that it will be more in consonance with the spirit of the law to hold that what was intended by the enumeration was but an indication of the order of preference which the Court should bear in mind in making the choice of a guardian among the available relations, the dominant consideration being the welfare of the minor. It follows that neither the paternal grandmother nor any other relations beyond the mother can be regarded as possessing an inherent right to act as lawful guardians for the purposes of S. 21 of the Limitation Act. I have the less hesitation in assenting to this view, as I consider that it will tend to the better protection of the minors' properties than if I were to hold that a series of relations commencing from the elder brother and including the paternal and the maternal relations have the inherent right directly and without an appointment by the Court to assume charge of a minor's estate and proceed to keep alive debts on his behalf. Such an expansion of the rule is, it seems to me, fraught with dangerous consequences, and in the absence of binding authority, should not be upheld. I concur in the judgment just now pronounced by my Lord.

erties, with power to divide the income between K.C. and R. The Official Receiver never took possession under that order, and in April, 1931, on K.C.'s petition, an order was made discharging the Official Receiver from further acting as receiver of the properties, the parties having meanwhile agreed that the Official Receiver should not take possession of the properties, that they should divide or invest the proceeds of the rents, and that either should be at liberty to apply for reappointment of the Official Receiver in the event of certain disagreements between them. That arrangement remained in force until August, 1933, when the Official Receiver was again appointed. He obtained possession in February, 1934, the parties having meanwhile divided receipts equally between them. K.C. having objected to assessments to income-tax made upon him for the years ending 31st March, 1934 and 1935, in respect of his receipts from the properties in question, contending that the assessments should have been made on him as a manager of the properties under S. 41 of the Income-tax Act, Held, that that section had no application to the case inasmuch as K.C. and R. were never appointed receivers or managers of the properties, the order of April, 1931, neither doing so nor purporting to do so. The assessments were accordingly rightly made.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court at Fort William, Bengal, dated 4th March, 1937 (Costello and Panckridge, JJ.) on a reference to it by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal, under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN.—In this case the appellant appeals from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal on a reference to it by the respondent under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

The question referred was framed thus:—

"Whether in the circumstances described above the present assessee and Rai Bahadur Ramprotap Chamria were the managers of the properties appointed by or under any order of a Court within the meaning of S. 41 of the Indian Income-tax Act and whether in the facts and circumstances given above the Income-tax Officer acted illegally in assessing the present assessee in respect of his share of the property?"

The relevant facts and circumstances, which appear in the statement of case, must be stated.

In the year 1929, the appellant instituted a suit in the High Court at Calcutta (No. 183 of 1929) against one Ramprotap, and a minor grandson of Ramprotap, alleging that he was the adopted son of Ramprotap's deceased brother

Amloke Chand. By way of relief he claimed declarations that he was the son of Amloke Chand, and that he was entitled jointly with Ramprotap to certain properties specified in a schedule attached to his plaint. He also asked for an enquiry as to what other properties were joint and for partition. On the 23rd May, 1930, a consent decree was made in the suit. The decree recited that the terms of settlement set forth in the schedule thereto had been agreed to by the adult parties and the guardian ad litem of the infant defendant, and that the Court was of opinion that it would be for the benefit of the infant defendant that the decree should be made. The operative portion of the decree, so far as relevant, ran thus:—

"It is declared with the consent of the adult parties and the guardian ad-litem of the infant defendant by their respective counsel that the said terms ought to be carried out and the same are ordered and decreed accordingly and it is further declared with the like consent that the plaintiff is entitled to one equal half part or share of the residue of the joint estate mentioned in the said terms after setting apart the sum of Rupees Eleven lacs for allotment to the said Rai Bahadur Ramprotap Chamria in terms of cl. 2 of the said terms and also setting apart premises No. 178, Harrison Road, and No. 71, Cross Street, in terms of cl. 4 of the said terms (the same into two equal parts or shares being considered as divided and hereinafter referred to as the said properties) AND that the defendant Rai Bahadur Ramprotap Chamria is entitled to the remaining equal half part or share thereof. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that a partition be made of the said properties with the appurtenances into two equal parts or shares and that a commission do issue directed to Rai Bahadur Badridas Goenka and Radhakissen Chamria both named in the said terms for the purposes also mentioned therein and it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the said Commissioners do take an account subject to the conditions mentioned in the said terms of the joint properties (including the loss and profits of the business carried on by Rai Bahadur Ramprotap Chamria) and submit a separate report along with the return hereinafter mentioned and make a division of the said properties into two equal parts or shares and as regards the immovable properties make the same by metes and bounds where they shall see occasion with power to them to award compensation in money by way of equalising the said partition and all deeds and writings relating to the said properties in the custody or power of any of the parties are to be produced before the said Commissioners upon oath or solemn affirmation as the said Commissioners shall direct. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the said Commissioners be at liberty to examine witnesses upon oath or solemn affirmation and do take the depositions in writing and return the same with the said Commission. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the said Commissioners do allot one equal half part or share of the said properties to the plaintiff to be held and enjoyed by him in severalty and the remaining one equal half part or share thereof to the said defendant Rai Bahadur Ramprotap Chamria to be held and enjoyed by him in severalty."

In fact the scheduled terms of settlement did not mention any specific items of the joint estate, although they provided for partition "of the joint properties as mentioned above."

On the 28th July, 1930, an order was made in the suit whereby the Official Receiver was appointed receiver "of the rents, issues and profits of the immovable properties belonging to the parties to this suit in the plaint in this suit mentioned," with liberty to divide the income into two equal shares and to pay one equal share to the appellant and Ramprotap respectively. The Official Receiver, however, never took possession under that order; and on the 2nd April, 1931, an order was made on the appellant's petition in the following terms:—

"It is ordered that the said order dated the 28th day of July last do stand varied in the manner indicated in the Schedule hereunder written and it is further ordered without prejudice to the rights of either party to apply to the Court for the re-appointment of the said Official Receiver as the Receiver of the properties mentioned in the said Schedule (hereinafter referred to as the said properties) in the circumstances and on the conditions also mentioned in the said Schedule and the said Official Receiver be and he is hereby discharged from further acting as the Receiver of the said properties."

The schedule to that order contained a copy of para. 5 of the appellant's said petition which stated that since the order of the 28th July, 1930, the parties had agreed as follows:—

"(a) that the Official Receiver shall not take possession of the following immovable properties and shall, without prejudice to the right of either party to apply for reinstatement of the Receiver, be discharged from acting as Receiver in respect of such properties:—[Then followed a list of the properties which included all the properties relevant to this appeal]

"(b) that the plaintiff (present assessee) and the defendant Ramprotap are jointly given liberty to realise the rents of the above properties on joint receipts, duly to make the necessary expenses thereout and to file rent suits,

"(c) that the documents of title be kept in joint custody of the plaintiff Keshardeo and the defendant Ramprotap,

"(d) that Ramprotap and Keshardeo are also given liberty to invest the money which will come to their hands or divide the same equally,

"(e) that liberty be given to either party to apply for an order for re-appointment of Receiver of the rents, issues and profits of the abovenamed properties without any objection on the part of the other party in the event of their not being able to agree as to collections, disbursements, investments or distribution of the said rents, issues and profits and on such application being made by either party the other party shall consent to such appointment."

The arrangement so provided for remained in force until the 23rd August, 1933, when on the application of the parties, the Official Receiver was again appointed receiver. He did not, however, obtain possession until about the 24th February, 1934. The appellant and Ramprotap, while in possession, divided the receipts between themselves in equal shares.

When called upon for a return of his income for the year ending the 31st March, 1933, for the purpose of assessment for the year ending the 31st March, 1934, the appellant (on the 31st July, 1933), under the head "Property" made a return of Nil, stating that "the properties are in the hands of the Official Receiver and Joint Managers appointed in suit No. 183 of 1929 from whom the petitioner has not obtained his share"; and also that "the income from properties . . . are liable to be assessed in the hands of the Receivers under S. 41 of the Act." The Income-tax Officer nevertheless assessed his total income at the figure of Rs. 48,628, which included a sum of Rs. 33,920 under the head "Property" in respect of properties specified in the schedule to the plaint, and in the schedule to the order of the 2nd April, 1931. The appellant appealed against this assessment, alleging that the assessment was wrong, as the properties "are in the hands of the Official Receiver appointed in suit No. 183 of 1929," and further alleging that the assessment was wrong on the ground that his title, as claimed by him to the extent of a half share in respect of the properties, was disputed by Ramprotap.

In regard to the assessment of the appellant for the following year ending the 31st March, 1935, the same procedure took place. The appellant returned Nil under the head "Property," alleging that the assessment should be made under S. 41 of the Act and that his title was in dispute. His total income was assessed by the Income-tax Officer at Rs. 54,558, which included a sum of Rs. 28,177 under the head "Property" in respect of the same properties as before; and the appellant appealed against that assessment.

The Assistant Commissioner dealt with both appeals together, and confirmed both assessments. It is clear from the confirmation order, which contains the grounds of his decision, that the matter was throughout dealt with on the footing that the appellant was the owner of an undivided half share of the properties in question, and that the contention raised on behalf of the appellant was that the assessments in respect of the properties should have been made under S. 41 of the Act on the appellant and Ramprotap in respect of the entirety, and not upon each separately in respect of a moiety. The contention of the appellant's pleader is stated thus—"that according to an order of the Honourable High Court the management of the properties in question were taken away from the Official Receiver and made over to the assessee and Ramprotap whereby the two parties were authorised to collect rents jointly and meet the necessary expenses. It is therefore argued that the income was not allocated separately and should have been assessed on the managers and not on the parties separately"; and it is subsequently stated that in this connection the appellant relied on S. 41 of the Act.

The appellant, by two petitions, required the respondent to refer to the High Court several questions as being questions of law arising out of the Assistant Commissioner's order. The respondent, however, was of opinion that the only contention of any substance was the appellant's contention that as the property in question was under the joint management of himself and Ramprotap by or under the order of the 2nd April, 1931, "the tax in respect of its income can be levied only upon such managers by virtue of the provisions of S. 41 of the Income-tax Act," and that such matter would be covered by the question which he submitted for the Court's decision. The respondent stated as his own opinion that S. 41 had no application to the case. He thought that the decree of the 23rd May, 1930, declared the appellant and Ramprotap to be owners of the properties in equal shares, and that the question formulated should be answered, as to both parts, in the negative.

The appellant, being dissatisfied with the question as framed by the respondent, obtained an order of the High Court, dated the 30th July, 1936, ordering the respondent to show cause why he should not be required to state a case on the questions as framed by the appellant in his petitions. The case and the rule were heard together on the 26th and 27th January, 1937, and on the 4th March, 1937, the High Court delivered judgment, their answer to the question referred being "that the assessee and Ramprotap were not managers of the properties appointed by or under any order of a Court within the meaning of S. 41 of the Indian Income-tax Act, and that the Income-tax officer did not act illegally in assessing the assessee in respect of his share of the property". The appellant now appeals to His Majesty in Council from that judgment. An order was also made on the 4th March, 1937, discharging the order of the 30th July, 1936, and ordering the appellant to pay the costs of the application. From that order the appellant has not appealed.

Their Lordships have thought it necessary to state the history of the case at some length in view of the course taken by the arguments before the Board. The question for decision on this appeal is simply whether the question referred to the High Court has been correctly answered; and it is not open to their Lordships to go beyond the question or to consider matters outside its limits.

Leading counsel for the appellant stated, in opening the appeal, that he did not contend that the assessment should have been made under S. 41, because (as he explained in his reply) the section even if applicable was not in his view mandatory or compulsory. His main argument was based upon the view that there was no finding that the appellant was "owner" of the property, that the decree of the 23rd May, 1930, did not establish ownership in him, that the question of the ownership of the properties was still in dispute in the partition suit, and that he could not be assessed under the head "property" in respect of buildings and lands of which his ownership (as required by S. 9 of the Act) had not been established. Junior counsel for the appellant, however, took the unusual course of venturing upon ground which his leader had feared to tread, and relied wholeheartedly upon the provisions of S. 41 as being fatal to the assessment.

Counsel for the respondent, however, argued that the appellant should not be allowed to travel outside the contention under S. 41. This, they said, was the only contention raised before the Assistant Commissioner; and the case stated, which under S. 66 (2) is limited to questions of law arising out of the order or decision of an Assistant Commissioner, treats the point involved as being merely the contention under S. 41. Further, it was pointed out that the High Court judgment, though touching on other points, treats S. 41 as the section with which the reference was directly concerned.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this argument of the respondent's counsel is well founded. They feel no doubt that the only objection to the assessment which was urged before the Assistant Commissioner was that the assessment could only be made under S. 41, that the decision of the Assistant Commissioner was given on the assumption of ownership in the appellant, and that the question of law referred under S. 66 consists simply of the question whether on that assumption S. 41 operated to compel the authorities to assess in respect of the entirety the two persons who were alleged to be acting as managers, and to prevent them from assessing one of the co-owners in respect of his moiety.

In this view of the case the only question for their Lordships' consideration is whether the case falls within S. 41. That section provides as follows:—

"41.—In the case of income, profits or gains chargeable under this Act which are received by the Courts of Wards, the Administrators-General, the Official Trustees or by any receiver or manager (including any person whatever his designation who in fact manages property on behalf of another) appointed by or under any order of a Court, the tax shall be levied upon and recoverable from such Court of Wards, Administrator-General, Official Trustee, receiver or manager in the like manner and to the same amounts as it would be leviable upon and recoverable from any person on whose behalf such income, profits or gains are received, and all the provisions of this Act shall apply accordingly."

In their Lordships' opinion the case does not come within the words of the section at all. The respondent and Ramprotap were never appointed receivers or managers by or under any order of the Court. The order of the 2nd April, 1931, did not do so, nor did it purport to do so. It follows, therefore, that the section has no application to the case, and that the question referred was correctly answered by the High Court.

It is unnecessary for their Lordships to express any opinion upon the various other points which were argued before them. If the appellant desired to enlarge the area of the question referred or to add other questions, so as to raise those points, it was open to him to appeal against the order which discharged the rule. That he has not done.

Neither is it necessary to decide whether the consent decree operated to establish that the lands specified in the schedule to the plaint formed part of the joint estate, a question which, it was said, was still in dispute; although as at present advised their Lordships feel great difficulty in understanding how partition can have been ordered of parcels which were not ascertained and for the ascertainment of which no machinery was provided, or how under the orders of the 28th July, 1930, and the 2nd April, 1931, the income of the properties therein mentioned was divisible in moieties, except upon the footing that those properties formed part of the joint estate.

For the reasons indicated, their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed and they will humbly so advise His Majesty. The appellant will pay the respondent's costs of the appeal.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), Ss. 6 and 9—Applicability—Person holding part of village on under-tenure for small annual payment—Whether a "landholder", entitled to eject ryots.

A minor post-settlement inamdar holding under a grant of both varams on a permanent kattubadi is a landholder within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908.

Brahmayya v. Achiraju, (1922) 43 M.L.J. 229: I.L.R. 45 Mad. 716 (F.B.), approved.

Accordingly where the title of certain plaintiffs, if made out, was to a permanent under-tenure of a portion of a village on a small annual payment (by whatever name described),

Held, that the interest claimed clothed the plaintiffs with the character of landowners, and put the cultivating tenants under them in the position of ryots to whom Ss. 6 and 9 of the Act of 1908, applied.

Appeal from a decree of the High Court, Madras, dated 31st October, 1935 (Stone and Pakenham Walsh, JJ.) reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, dated 17th December, 1927.

Of the five respondents to this appeal, the first three were in possession of the lands forming the subject-matter of the proceedings, the remaining two being impleaded as persons claiming title to the lands as against the plaintiffs. The decree under appeal did not decide the question of title, but dismissed the plaintiffs' claim to eject the first three respondents on the ground that they (the plaintiffs) were "landholders" within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, and so debarred by S. 9 of the Act from maintaining an action of ejectment against a ryot.

The plaintiffs claimed to derive title under a grant made in 1811 to the eldest of three brothers whose estate was joint but who later separated. One of the brothers, Gajapatiraju, died in 1859, being succeeded as to his third share by two daughters. The plaintiffs claimed as purchasers from the sons of Gajapatiraju's elder daughter. The last two respondents were grandsons of the younger daughter who died in 1918. The plaintiffs claimed that on her death Gajapatiraju's whole share vested in the elder sister, and that they duly obtained it by purchase from her three sons. In the present action they claimed to eject the first three respondents from their possession of one half of the share to which the plaintiffs claimed to be entitled as against the last two respondents, the validity of that claim being the sole issue in the present proceedings. The Subordinate Judge held in favour of the plaintiffs, but the High Court decided against them on the ground that they were landholders within the meaning of the Act (I of 1908). The plaintiffs now appealed to His Majesty.

21st July, 1939. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

Sir George
Rankin.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decree of the High Court of Madras (16th October, 1937), dismissing a suit brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Vizagapatam to recover possession of certain agricultural lands in the village of Thagarampudi. The trial Court's decree (17th December, 1927), had been in favour of the plaintiffs. Of the defendants to the suit (who numbered 15) five are respondents to this appeal; the first three respondents (defendants 3 to 5) being the persons in possession of the suit lands, while respondents four and five (defendants 14 and 15) are impleaded as persons claiming title thereto as against the plaintiffs.

Much of the detail of the case has for the purposes of this appeal become unimportant, since the decree appealed from did not decide the question of title disputed between the plaintiffs and respondents four and five, but dismissed the plaintiffs' claim to eject the first three respondents on the ground that the plaintiffs were landholders within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act (Madras Act I of 1908) and by S. 9 thereof could not maintain ejectment in the Civil Court against a ryot.

The plaintiffs claim title under Ex. C, an instrument dated 11th May, 1811, which is expressed as follows:

"Patta, dated Saturday the 3rd day of Vaisakha Bahulam of the year Prajotpatti (11th May, 1811), executed and granted by Sri Narayana Gajapathiraju Maharajulingaru, to Nadimpalli Venkatapatiraju.

"Whereas, in the village of Thagarampudi of my mokkasa (lands granted either free as reward or on light rent) Vaddade taluk, I have granted to you land fetching a fixed rent of Rs. 300, as manyam, and 10 visams (1/10th part) of land known as the vudika manu garvu (name of land) for a tope to be planted thereon, you shall bring them to extensive cultivation and profits, and be living happily, enjoying the same hereditarily."

The grantor was the proprietor of the estate of Vizianagaram and the grantee Venkatapatiraju was the eldest of three brothers who were joint. The other two were called Murtiraju and Gajapatiraju. By what right the grantor could afterwards modify his grant is a question which has not been clearly answered, but by a letter to the grantee dated 21st August, 1826, he purported to impose for the future a rent or payment of Rs. 50 per annum and this has ever since been paid. The terms of the letter are as follows:

"In respect of the land granted to you in the village of Thagarampudi, a reduction of Rs. 50 has been ordered from the current year Vijaya, and deducted out of your masara. So, you shall pay these Rs. 50 every year in our Sirkar and be obtaining receipts."

The lands were at first enjoyed by the joint family, but the brothers separated and each became entitled to a one-third share therein. At some date which is not now material they appear to have divided the lands between them each paying to the zemindar Rs. 16-10-8. The plaintiffs are great grandsons of the original grantee Venkatapatiraju who was the eldest brother, but their suit has reference to the one-third share of the youngest brother Gajapatiraju of which they claim to be purchasers. They seek to obtain possession of one-half only of that one-third share, and the pedigree table of Gajapatiraju's branch will assist to show how they deduce their title.

P.C.
raju
v.
Suryanarayudu.
Sir George
Rankin.

Gajapatiraju died in 1859 leaving a widow and two daughters. In 1861, the widow relinquished her interest and the daughters became entitled. In 1918 the younger daughter, Chinna Appala, died leaving her sister and two grandsons by a pre-deceased son (respondents four and five). The plaintiffs say that thereupon the whole of Gajapatiraju's interest vested in the elder daughter Datla Pedda; that in 1919 Datla Pedda's three sons were the reversioners of her father, and that she relinquished her interest so as to accelerate theirs. The plaintiffs by sale-deed dated the 27th April, 1921, purchased from these three sons of Datla Pedda the whole of the interest of her father Gajapatiraju for Rs. 32,000. On the 24th September, 1924, they brought the present suit to recover possession of the half share in Gajapatiraju's lands which his younger daughter Chinna Appala had possessed. The first three respondents were also in possession of the other half share (which Datla Pedda had possessed), but as they had certain rights therein as mortgagees this other half share was not included in the suit.

Respondents four and five claim title to the suit lands by saying that the instrument of 1811 has long since ceased to have effect; that it created no more than a service tenure neither heritable nor transferable but resumable at will; that on the death of Gajapatiraju the lands were sequestered or resumed by the zemindar and regranted as a new tenure to his widow; and that on her death one half was granted to each of her two daughters separately. Hence respondents four and five claim to be entitled to the lands held by their grandmother, Chinna Appala, which are the lands in suit. Whether or not on this case the first three respondents could claim to have a ryoti interest in the lands, it is clear that the plaintiffs could have no interest at all. The plaintiffs do not seek to avail themselves in any respect of the case made or evidence adduced by respondents four and five.

The first matter for consideration is the case made by the plaintiffs for ejectment of the first three respondents. These respondents are the cultivators in possession of the lands in suit. They or their ancestors (at some date not readily ascertainable) became tenants of the plaintiffs' vendors or their predecessors. Notice to quit has been given to these respondents but they claim that they are ryots with occupancy right who cannot be ejected by the Civil Court. The plaintiffs, who have to succeed upon the strength of their own title, disclose a title of which the root is the grant of 1811, and the question is as to the character of the right which they allege and prove. At one stage of the case it appears to have been contended (1) for the plaintiffs that the grant merely gave to the grantees the kudivaram interest on favourable terms, (2) for the first three respondents, that agricultural tenants were on the land at the time of the grant so that it gave to the grantees the melvaram interest only. It is now conceded, however, on both sides, and very properly, that the grant of 1811 was of both varams. Their Lordships are unable to attach importance for the purposes of this appeal to the documents upon which the plaintiffs based a contention that the zemindar had treated the grantees under Ex. C as ryots giving them the usual jirayati leases. The operation and effect of Ex. C as a document of title cannot be determined upon the basis of subsequent documents which contradict it on essential matters. Their Lordships are not satisfied, on the other hand, by any of the exhibits that at the date of the grant of 1811 agricultural tenants other than the grantee were already on the land.

The question which presents itself on the threshold of the case, and which has been decided by the High Court against the plaintiffs, is whether the interest granted by Ex. C is one which constitutes the plaintiffs landholders within the meaning of the Act of 1908. The words mokhasa and manyam occur in the grant and both appear in Wilson's Glossary as meaning in the south of India lands held either at a low assessment or altogether free on condition of or in consideration of services. The word inam does not appear in the terms of the grant. The word musara appears in the letter of 1826 and the words musara-vasathi appear in some of the later documents: they are said to mean "allowance" or "remission." The word kattubadi (translated by "quit-rent" for want of a nearer word) appears in the plaintiffs' conveyance of the 27th April, 1921, to describe the annual payment under Exhibit C. But the title upon which the plaintiffs seek ejectment is put forward as a transferable and heritable right to the lands under Exhibit C upon payment to the zemindar of the annual sum of Rs. 50 or a due proportion thereof. If this would constitute the plaintiffs "landholders" under the Act of 1908, then the first three respondents claim to be ryots entitled to a permanent right of occupancy under S. 6 and protected from ejectment by the Civil Court under S. 9 of the Act.

The definitions which bear upon the question whether the plaintiffs' title, if made out, gives them the status of a "landholder" are to be found in certain sub-sections of S. 3 of the Act.

"By sub-S. (2), 'Estate' means—

- (a) any permanently settled estate or temporarily settled zemindari;
- (b) any portion of such permanently settled estate or temporarily settled zemindari which is separately registered in the Office of the Collector;
- (c) any unsettled palaiyam or jagir;
- (d) any village of which the land-revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been made, confirmed or recognised by the British Government, or any separated part of such village;
- (e) any portion consisting of one or more villages of any of the estates specified above in cls. (a), (b) and (c) which is held on a permanent under-tenure.

By sub-S. (5), 'Landholder' means a person owning an estate or part thereof and includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the whole or any portion of the estate by virtue of any transfer from the owner or his predecessor in title or of any order of a competent Court or of any provision of law.

By sub-S. (11), 'Rent' means whatever is lawfully payable in money or in kind or in both to a landholder for the use or occupation of land in his estate for the purpose of agriculture.

By sub-S. (15), 'Ryot' means a person who holds for the purpose of agriculture ryoti land in an estate on condition of paying to the landholder the rent which is legally due upon it.

By sub-S. (16), 'Ryoti land' means cultivable land in an estate other than private land."

On these definitions it is to be observed that cl. (d) of sub-S. (2) relates to a grant made prior to the Permanent Settlement and to a village not now part of a zemindari, whereas cl. (e) relates (though not exclusively) to villages which are part of a zemindari but are held on permanent under-tenure. The lands now in question do not constitute a village but are only part of a village, and they cannot be held to come within any of the clauses which define the word "estate." On the other hand the word "estate" as employed in the Act has not the abstract meaning "quality or quantity of the interest of the holder." The plaintiffs' title, if made out, can only constitute them "landholders" upon one or other of two grounds; first, that they come within the words in sub-S. (5) "or part thereof," secondly, that they are within the extended meaning given to the word "landholder" by the provision that it "includes every person entitled to collect the rents of the whole or any portion of the estate by virtue of any transfer from the owner or his predecessor in title." The application of these expressions to what have been called "minor inams" has been considered by the High Court of Madras in a series of decisions. In S. Appalanarasimhulu v. M. Sanyasi, it was held by Sundara Aiyar and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ., that, though a minor inam was not an "estate" within the Act, the inamdars were landholders because "there is no reason why the holder of an under-tenure should not be held to be a person entitled to collect rents of a portion of the estate out of which the under-tenure is carved". The learned judges considered that "if the tenure-holder is not bound to make any payment to the zemindar for his tenure he will then be a person owning a part of the estate." In Gadadhara v. Suryanarayana, Wallis, C. J., dissented from the conclusion that a minor inamdar was a "landholder." He was of opinion that so long as the zemindar reserves an interest to himself, as by way of rent, no matter how insignificant it be, he continues to be the owner. He considered that in the definition of "rent" in sub-S. (11) the words "in his estate" could not apply to an inamdar and excluded such a person from the extended meaning given by the clause which refers to persons entitled to collect the rent of a portion of an estate. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., however, held the inamdar to be a landholder on both of the grounds already mentioned. As to the first ground, he laid stress on the fact that in the case of an entire village clause (e) of S. 3 (2) treats a permanent under-tenure as an estate and its holder as owner of the estate.

He considered that there was already a catena of decisions in the High Court that a minor inamdar was a landholder. When this case came before three judges on Letters Patent Appeal, Ayling, J., took the view that "it may be conceded at once that so long as the zemindar reserves to himself a quit-rent the inamdar cannot be regarded as the owner of the lands in the ordinary legal meaning of the term." But on the second ground he thought it clear that when the inamdar's grant was only of the melvaram it was a transfer by the owner of the right to collect the rent of a portion of the estate. Where, however, the grant was of both varams he had more difficulty but came to the same conclusion: "When we say that the grant was of both varams we merely mean that the rights of the grantee in respect of the land were not limited by the necessity of respecting the right of any person possessed of the kudivaram at the time of the grant." Coutts-Trotter, J., proceeded entirely upon the second ground, observing that he was unable to gather from the language of this Act any general intention with regard to the position of minor inamdars. Kumaraswami Sastri, J., held that a minor inamdar was not a landholder where the grant to him was of both the varams. He thought that, if the grantee was himself the occupancy ryot at the time of the grant, it could not divest him of that character and convert his sub-tenants into occupancy ryots; while, if the land was at the time in the absolute disposal of the grantor, the object of the grant was to allow the grantee to occupy and enjoy the lands on favourable terms and not to create minor landholders. In such cases he considered that the grantee could not be regarded as collecting rents from himself by virtue of the grant of the melvaram. The result of the Letters Patent Appeal was that by a majority of two judges to one the minor inamdar was held to be a landholder.

The matter came before a Full Bench in Brahmayya v. Achirajul, where the patta had been held to be a grant in inam and not a mere lease on favourable terms to a jirayati tenant. The question was framed as follows:

"Where a zamindar makes a post-settlement inam grant of a portion of a village with both varams on a permanent kattubadi, is the grantee a landholder within the meaning of S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act?"

Schwabe, C. J., thought that such an inamdar was not owner of a part of the estate and was not entitled to collect rent by virtue of any transfer. The provision as to persons entitled to collect rent was in his opinion intended for purchasers of part of an estate, mortgagees, or farmers of an estate and did not apply to an inamdar collecting rent under leases granted by himself. Oldfield, J., found the considerations upon each side to be evenly balanced and the question difficult. He thought the liability of the inamdar for quit-rent need not be regarded as inconsistent with the character of landholder under the Act, but that in any case a grantee of both varams of a part of a village was a person entitled to "collect the rent by virtue of a transfer from the owner," and that this very general language could not be read subject to an unexpressed restriction. Phillips, J., held that the word "owner" was applicable to the inamdar notwithstanding the reservation of an annual payment, and that the grantee of both varams was entitled to collect rents which would previously have been payable to the grantor. Devadoss, J., relied much on the definition of "estate" as excluding mere parts of villages:

"The word estate does not mean land but all the rights, liabilities and duties attaching to or incident to certain classes of tenure as defined by S. 3 (2). The words 'part of an estate' have been put into the definition of landholder so as to include the transferee of a portion of the estate either by operation of law or by act of parties. An inamdar is not a transferee of the whole or any portion of the estate."

He further considered that where the grant is of vacant land the inamdar is not to be considered as having the right to collect rent but as having the kudivaram right himself plus a portion of the melvaram, and does not lose the character of ryot. Venkatasubba Rao, J., regarded the definitions of "estate" and "landholder" as inconsistent, but thought it more in consonance with the intention of the legislature to regard minor inamdars as landholders. He considered that they were owners of part of an estate notwithstanding liability for kattubadi, and that they came within the language of sub-S. (5) as persons entitled to collect rents.

By this decision of three judges against two, after long debate and much difference of opinion it was established by authority of the highest Court of the Province in March, 1922, that the minor post-settlement inamdar holding under a grant of both varams on a permanent kattubadi is a "landholder" under the Act of 1908. This decision was confirmatory of a course of decisions that had been given since 1912 and earlier, though not without some dissent. For a considerable number of years tenants under such inamdars have been entitled to rely upon the special protection granted by the Act to ryots, and their Lordships would be loath to disturb titles taken or dealt with on that footing. They do not conceal from themselves that neither of the two grounds above-mentioned is free from difficulty. They discard all argument from the presumed general intention of the Act as treacherous and inconclusive. But they cannot agree that "part of the estate" or "portion of the estate" does not refer to the land itself by the word "estate", nor do they feel any confidence in the doctrine that, so long as the zemindar reserves any interest, however insignificant, a permanent grantee from him cannot be the owner. It may be that the words "or part thereof" were given a place in the definition of landholder without full appreciation of their effect in connection with the definition of "estate"; but there is no presumption to that effect; the words cannot be ignored, and good reason must be found in the Act itself for restricting their prima facie meaning. Their Lordships, as to the second ground, notice that, not only does the definition of "estate" employ the word "estate", but the definition of "landholder" employs the word "rents" and the definition of "rent" employs the word "landholder." They feel more difficulty than was felt by the majority of the learned judges in Madras in regarding the extension, given to the meaning of the word "landholder" by the clause as to collection of rents, as applicable to an inamdar. But on either ground they are satisfied that the Full Bench decision of 1922 represents a careful and reasonable solution of a stubborn ambiguity in the Act, and that it ought not now to be overruled having regard to the time which has elapsed and to the character of the interests affected thereby. They are wholly unable to distinguish the present case so as to regard the reasoning of the majority of the Full Bench as inapplicable thereto, nor can they hold that Exhibit C is a mere jirayati patta on favourable terms. The plaintiffs' title, if it be made out, is to a permanent under-tenure of a portion of a village on a small annual payment by whatever name the payment may be described. In their Lordships' judgment they claim an interest which must be held to clothe them with the character of landowner and to put the cultivating tenants under them in the position of ryots, to whom Ss. 6 and 9 apply. The plaintiffs' claim to eject the first three respondents must therefore fail.

It was contended that even so the High Court ought not to have dismissed the suit without deciding the dispute as to title between the plaintiffs and respondents four and five. Their Lordships, however, are not prepared to remand the case for a decision on this point. Having regard to their pleading the plaintiffs have no right to such an order since they impleaded respondents four and five without asking for any declaration as to title against them and merely as persons who might object to the relief sought against the first three respondents. The matter is one to be decided now upon the balance of convenience to the parties on both sides and their Lordships see nothing to induce them on this point to interfere with the decree of the High Court which has left the question of title open.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants will pay one set of costs to the first three respondents and another to the fifth respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—The appellant company appeals against a decree passed for the payment of Rs. 2,987-3-7 in a suit instituted on the Original Side of this Court. The respondent was in the employ of the company as a station master and claimed damages for wrongful dismissal. About the middle of 1931, while the respondent was holding the position of station master at Narasaraopet, it was discovered that the assistant goods clerk had misappropriated monies collected by him in respect of freight charges. It is said that the misappropriations amounted to Rs. 15,000. The discovery was made as the result of an audit. On the defalcations being discovered the company made a written complaint to the police. The result was that the respondent, the assistant goods clerk and another employee of the company were arrested. They were all charged with criminal breach of trust and conspiracy under the provisions of Ss. 408 and 120-B of the Indian Penal Code. On his arrest on the 24th August, 1931, the respondent was placed under suspension. On the 3rd October, 1932, the trial Magistrate convicted all the accused and sentenced the respondent and the third accused to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The goods clerk was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. As the result of the conviction the company dismissed the respondent from its service by a letter dated the 11th November, 1932. The respondent appealed against his conviction to the Sessions Judge of Guntur, who by a judgment dated the 21st November, 1932, dismissed the appeal. The respondent then applied to this Court to set aside the conviction and sentence under its revisional powers. By an order dated the 22nd November, 1933, the petition was allowed and the conviction and sentence were set aside. On the 17th July, 1935, the respondent filed the suit out of which this appeal arises. In his plaint he claimed Rs. 6,049-15-0, made up of the following amounts:—(1)

Rs. 1,200 as damages for wrongful dismissal; (2) Rs. 100 as damages in lieu of one month's notice; (3) Rs. 300, being the amount of a security deposit made by the respondent which he said had been wrongfully withheld; (4) Rs. 2,449-15-0, being the amount which it was said the company was bound to pay into the company's provident fund for the respondent's benefit; and (5) Rs. 2,000 claimed as arrears of salary from the 24th October, 1932 to the 23rd November, 1935. Item No. 1 was abandoned by the respondent in the course of the trial. Items Nos. 3 and 5 were disallowed by the trial Judge (Mr. Justice Gentle) and his decision has been accepted. Items 2 and 4 were decreed. The company contends that the respondent was not entitled in law to any sum and that the suit should have been dismissed. The appeal turns on the decision of the question whether the respondent was wrongfully dismissed. It is common ground that if the dismissal was not wrongful the company had the right of withholding its contribution from the provident fund and that the respondent had no right to notice.

Leach, C.J.

The respondent was employed by the company under an agreement in writing. The agreement was embodied in a letter which the respondent addressed to the agent of the company. Under it the respondent agreed to accept service with the company upon the terms and conditions set out in the letter. It is only necessary to refer to the third and the seventh conditions. The third condition reads as follows:

"That I hereby bind myself to obey and abide by all the instructions and regulations contained in the General Rules for Indian Railways, the subsidiary working rules and all regulations in force that affect my duties and work and by any further instructions that may, from time to time, be issued by any person duly placed in authority over me."

The seventh condition is this:—

"That I clearly understand that the authority which appoints me has the power, for any reason that may to him appear sufficient, to dismiss me."

The appellant company has framed rules regulating the discharge and dismissal of its subordinate servants and the submission of appeals. The rules deal not only with dismissal but also with the discharge of the employees. It is not necessary to refer to the rules relating to discharge as this case is merely concerned with the appellant company's powers of dismissal. The relevant rules so far as this case is concerned are rr. 5 and 7. R. 5 reads thus:—

"Dismissal—An employee will be liable to be dismissed from the service in the following circumstances, namely:—

M. & S. M.
Ry. Co.,
Ltd.
v.
Ranga Rao.
Leach, C.J.

- (i) in consequence of his conviction by a Criminal Court, or
- (ii) for serious misconduct, or
- (iii) for neglect of duty resulting in, or likely to result in, loss to Government or to the Railway Administration, or danger to the lives of persons using the Railway".

R. 7 on which the respondent places great reliance is in these terms:—

"Dismissal—Procedure—In all cases where an employee is charged with an offence of a nature, which if proved against him, is likely to lead to his dismissal, his District Officer shall order a Departmental Enquiry, and if a prima facie case is established, shall forward the proceedings with a copy of the employee's service register to the Head of his Department for decision.

"At the enquiry a definite charge in writing shall be framed in respect of each offence and explained to the employee, and the evidence which he may adduce in his defence shall be recorded in his presence, provided that, for special reasons to be recorded, the evidence of any witness may be taken and recorded otherwise than in the presence of the employee. A finding with its grounds, shall be recorded on each charge."

There are two notes appended to this rule. They read as follows:—

"1. An order of dismissal operates as a bar to re-employment in any capacity by this Railway and shall not be issued unless the employee's guilt is established by clear and conclusive evidence. In other cases when there is circumstantial evidence as to his guilt, it shall be open to the competent authority to consider the question of discharging him.

"2. The provisions of this rule do not apply when it is proposed to issue an order on the strength of facts or conclusions established at a judicial trial, or when the Railway servant concerned has absconded with an accusation hanging over his head."

It is the respondent's case that he had been wrongfully dismissed because there was no inquiry held under this rule, and this contention was accepted by Gentle, J. The learned Judge found as a fact that the respondent had failed to carry out his duties as station master, that he did not faithfully and diligently employ himself in the company's service according to the terms of the contract of employment and that he was guilty of neglect of duty resulting in a loss to the company and such neglect of duty amounted to serious misconduct. The learned Judge was here referring to the duty cast upon the respondent as a station master to control his subordinates at the station and inspect their accounts. The learned Judge, however, considered that notwithstanding these facts the company should have held an inquiry before exercising its right of dismissal. In his opinion the company was not justified in dismissing the respondent because it had not been proved before him that the dismissal was based on the facts or the conclusions established at the trial before the magistrate. The company says that the learned Judge here misinterpreted r. 7 and that on a correct interpretation it was entitled to dismiss the respondent without an inquiry.

M. & S. M.
Ry. Co.,

Leach, C.J.

As I have indicated, the respondent's dismissal took place shortly after his conviction. The letter of dismissal is in these terms:—

"You are dismissed from the company's service from 24th August, 1931, the date you are placed under suspension. Please note and acknowledge receipt of this letter."

There can be no doubt that the dismissal was based on the respondent's conviction. This the respondent accepted as being the case in the letter which his advocate wrote before suit and also accepted in his plaint. In the letter it was said:

"My client states that as the order of dismissal is based on conviction by the trial Court, it ought to have been cancelled on my client's acquittal and that if you did not want to entertain my client any longer in service, you ought to have given a month's notice under the rules."

Paragraph 8 of the plaint reads as follows:—

"The plaintiff further submits that, as he was dismissed from service owing to the said conviction by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Narasaraopet, he ought to have been re-instated on his acquittal."

Therefore it is clearly the respondent's case that he was dismissed because of the conviction, and that this was so is obvious from the course of events. The respondent was placed under suspension as soon as he was arrested and he remained under suspension until he was dismissed, which took place on his conviction.

The learned Advocate for the respondent contends that the dismissal by reason of the conviction was not sufficient to deprive the respondent of the right of an inquiry under r. 7 of the rules regulating dismissal. He says that under note 2 of that rule an inquiry can be dispensed with only if the dismissal is based expressly on the strength of facts or conclusions established at the trial. But for the conclusion of the learned trial Judge on this question I should not have regarded this argument as a substantial one. With great respect, if a dismissal is based on a criminal conviction it seems to me that it must be taken to be based on the findings of the Court. The conviction follows the conclusions arrived at by the Court and to base a dismissal on a conviction it follows, in my opinion, that the conclusions of the Court are accepted. The respondent having recognised that his dismissal was based on his conviction I hold that he has no case.

The fact that as the result of revision proceedings the conviction was set aside does not affect the position. If the company had the right to dismiss the respondent when he was convicted it could not be compelled to take him back into its employment when the conviction was set aside at some later date. In fact there was no argument to the contrary.

In my judgment the respondent was rightly dismissed and he is not entitled to maintain this suit. I wish, however, to make it clear that I am not holding that the rules must be read into the respondent's agreement of service. It is not necessary for the purposes of this appeal to decide this question. I have assumed that the rules were embodied in the agreement.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the suit must be dismissed with costs both here and below.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, r. 57—Execution—Application to bring legal representative on record—Dismissal—Previous execution application—No final orders on it—Attachment effected on previous application subsisting—Sale during pendency of such attachment void.

It is clear from the language of O. 21, r. 57 that before a pending attachment shall cease, there must be a dismissal of the application for execution in which the attachment was effected; for the expression used in the section is 'upon the dismissal of such application'.

Where there had been an attachment of the suit property but no final orders for sale, etc., were passed on the application and a subsequent application to bring on record the legal representatives of the deceased defendant and to order sale was dismissed, but in the meantime as a result of a claim suit of the same property under a mortgage it was sold, on the question whether in the circumstances the sale under the mortgage suit was void owing to the attachment subsisting in favour of the plaintiffs over the same property,

Held, that as long as the earlier execution petition was pending, any order of dismissal on an interlocutory application in the pending execution petition would not terminate the attachment. If owing to mistake or ignorance of legal rights, the plaintiffs obtained a fresh attachment it would not terminate the attachment which was already subsisting. Hence the sale was void as against the attachment.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed under O. 21, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they are entitled to sell the properties in suit in execution of a decree obtained by them in O. S. No. 371 of 1919 on the file of the District Munsif of Valangiman against the second defendant's father and that the deed of sale executed by the second defendant's mother as guardian dated 17th August, 1927, in favour of the first defendant is a sham and nominal transaction executed with a view to defeat and defraud their rights. The plaintiffs also attacked the deed on the ground that it was executed during the pendency of a subsisting attachment issued in execution of their decree. The sale deed in favour of the first defendant was for a sum of Rs. 8,000 part thereof, namely, Rs. 6,500 represented the amount due under a mortgage in his favour dated 25th October, 1921, executed by the second defendant's father and the balance Rs. 1,500 represented in part the amount due under a promissory note dated 7th November, 1921, also executed in his favour by the second defendant's father. Both the lower Courts took the view that the alienation was not invalid on the ground that it was made during the pendency of a subsisting attachment, but they differed on the question whether the sale deed was executed in order to defraud the plaintiffs' rights. The learned District Munsif took the view that it was a sham and nominal transaction, but the learned Subordinate Judge held that it was a bona fide transaction intended to pass title.

Karuppan
Chettiar
v.
Rajangam.

This appeal is by the plaintiffs and Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar on their behalf urged before me two contentions, namely, (1) that the deed of sale is void having been executed during the pendency of a subsisting attachment and (2) that it was executed in order to defeat and defraud the plaintiffs' rights. If the first contention is answered in plaintiffs' favour, it would be unnecessary to go into the other. I therefore propose to deal with the first contention. A few facts are necessary to appreciate it. On the 16th September, 1923, plaintiffs filed an application (E. P. No. 559 of 1923) and obtained an order for attachment of the suit properties. Then they obtained an order for sale and the date of the sale was fixed for 14th February, 1924, but later adjourned to 29th March, 1924. The second defendant filed a suit against his father Venkata Reddi for partition and in that suit he obtained an injunction for stay of execution of the said decree. The sale was accordingly not held and that fact was recorded in E. P. No. 559 of 1923. But the execution application was pending and no final orders were passed thereon. The suit filed by the second defendant was dismissed on the 9th November, 1925. After the dismissal of that suit, the plaintiffs filed an application E. P. No. 222 of 1928 wherein they prayed that the second defendant might be brought on record as the legal representative of his father Venkata Reddi who has since died and also that the properties already attached in E. P. No. 559 of 1923 and ordered to be sold might again be ordered to be sold without the necessity of a fresh attachment, but the application was dismissed for default on the 12th November, 1928. The plaintiffs then filed a third application (E. P. No. 320 of 1930) wherein they prayed that the immovable properties already mentioned in E. P. No. 559 of 1923 might again be attached and the property directed to be sold. They were accordingly attached and directed to be sold on 7th April, 1930. The first defendant preferred a claim petition and it was allowed. Hence this suit. It will be seen that the sale deed was executed on the 17th August, 1927, before the dismissal of E. P. No. 222 of 1928. It is conceded that on the date of the sale the attachment which was made in pursuance of the order made on E. P. No. 559 of 1923 was subsisting, but it is contended that by reason of the dismissal of the application (E. P. No. 222 of 1928), the attachment ceased and therefore the sale must be deemed to be valid. Both the lower Courts have taken this view and the question is, is it sound? The provision of law bearing on this matter is O. 21, r. 57, which runs thus:

Karuppan
Chettiar
v.
Rajangam.

"Where any property has been attached in execution of a decree but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease."

It is clear from the language of the section that before a pending attachment shall cease, there must be a dismissal of the application for execution in which the attachment was effected. The expression used is "upon the dismissal of such application." There has been no final orders on E. P. No. 559 of 1923; it has never been dismissed. The question therefore is, can the dismissal of E. P. No. 222 of 1928 operate as a dismissal of the prior execution application? What was prayed in E. P. No. 222 of 1928 was to bring on record the legal representatives of the deceased defendant and to order a fresh sale, but that application was dismissed. The dismissal of this application would not prevent the plaintiffs from making a fresh application and from renewing the same prayer. As long as E. P. No. 559 of 1923 was pending, any order of dismissal on an interlocutory application in the pending execution petition would not terminate the attachment. It is contended that the procuring of a fresh attachment in E. P. No. 320 of 1930 would indicate clearly that the prior attachment was treated by the plaintiffs as not legally subsisting. If owing to a mistake or ignorance of legal rights, the plaintiffs obtained a fresh attachment it would not terminate the attachment which was already subsisting. The fresh attachment is a superfluity. I am therefore of the opinion that the sale must be treated as void and inoperative as against the attachment obtained by the plaintiffs in execution of their decree and which is still subsisting. The question is, what is the relief the plaintiffs will be entitled to? It will be seen that the sale in favour of the plaintiffs was executed in part discharge of a mortgage. The plaintiffs had impeached the said mortgage as fraudulent, but the lower appellate Court has declared it to be a bona fide transaction and Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar has not challenged the finding in respect thereof. The plaintiffs will only be entitled to bring the properties to sale subject to the said mortgage in favour of the first defendant. It is open to the first defendant, if he desires, to have the property sold free from encumbrances and have the amount due on the mortgage paid out to him leaving the plaintiffs to realise their amount from and out of the surplus.

The result is that the decree of the lower appellate Court must be set aside and the plaintiffs be declared entitled to bring the suit properties to sale subject to the mortgage, in favour of the first defendant and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs throughout.

Held, a suit against the alienee of temple property from the trustees or manager thereof can be maintained apart from the provisions of S. 92, Civil Procedure Code.

"Plaintiff" in column 3 of Art. 134-A must in the case of a representative suit be understood to refer only to the plaintiffs eo nomine on record and a suit brought within 12 years of their knowledge of the alienation is not barred; for otherwise, if 'plaintiff' be taken to mean every individual member of the community which is the only alternative view possible, it would be practically impossible to prove knowledge on the part of such a large number of persons.

v.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants brought the suit out of which this appeal arises on behalf of all the villagers of Samayanallore for a declaration that the suit property is Devadayam Inam land belonging to the temple of Veerabhadra Swami in that village, that certain othis thereof by the pujaries, defendants 3 to 10, in favour of the second defendant, another poojari, and a sub-mortgage by the latter in favour of the first defendant are void and not binding on the institution, for a permanent injunction restraining the first defendant from executing the decree obtained by him on foot of the sub-mortgage and bringing the suit property to sale and for other incidental reliefs. The suit was decreed by the trial Court, but on appeal, though the learned Subordinate Judge found that the suit property belonged to the temple in question and that therefore the pujaries, defendants 3 to 10, had no right to alienate the property as if it was their own private property, he held that the suit as framed was not maintainable and dismissed it. Hence the second appeal.

The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that this view of the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous. It is unnecessary to refer to the several cases cited by him in support of his contention, as the decision of the Full Bench in *Venkataramana Aiyangar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyangar*¹ clearly shows that a suit like the present can be maintained against an alienee of temple property from the trustees or managers thereof apart from the provisions of S. 92, Civil Procedure Code. Cf. also *Abdur Rahim v. Mahomed Barkat Ali*². These decisions were apparently not brought to the notice of the learned Subordinate Judge and it is by no means clear on what legal grounds he held that the suit is not maintainable. In more than one place in his judgment he seems to think that the present suit is but an indirect attempt by the alienating pujaries themselves to get round their own alienation. But even if this suspicion—for, it is no more—is well founded, it is not open to the Court to take into consideration the motives by which the plaintiffs are actuated in bringing the suit. In another place the learned Subordinate Judge seems to suggest that a suit for the removal of the pujaries under S. 92, Civil Procedure Code, would be a more effective remedy if the plaintiffs were really anxious to protect and safeguard the interests of the temple. This, again, is entirely beside the point as the existence of a more effective remedy can obviously be no answer to this suit and cannot therefore justify its dismissal. The learned Judge also appears to have thought that a prayer for possession was necessary. It is however difficult to see how the appellants could have asked for possession of the properties in this suit in the circumstances of the case. The suit temple is clearly one of those numerous small village temples where the pujaries or archiakas are also the managers of the temple and its properties with the tacit consent of the villagers, and unless the defendants 2 to 10 are removed from the management and fresh managers are appointed in appropriate proceedings in Court or otherwise, there would be no means of recovering possession of the properties from the second defendant who is now in possession and is himself a pujari. On the other hand, the immediate injury to the temple which this suit is brought to avert is the impending Court sale of the temple properties in execution of the mortgage decree obtained by the first defendant and there is no reason why relief by way of injunction with the appropriate declarations should not be awarded if the circumstances otherwise warrant such award.

The learned Counsel for the respondents attempted to support the decree of the Court below on another ground also, namely, that the suit is barred by limitation. An issue was raised in this point, being Issue No. 3 in the case, but the learned Subordinate Judge did not deal with it as being unnecessary. The trial Court disposed of it merely with the remark that it was not shown by the contesting defendant how the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Counsel for the respondent now relies upon Art. 134-A of the Limitation Act which provides for a period of 12 years for a suit to set aside an alienation of property comprised in a Hindu charitable endowment. The allegations in favour of the second defendant by defendants 3 to 10 were of years 1911 and 1914 and the alienations by the second defendant was in 1915, and the suit having been brought only in 1933 the learned Counsel for the respondents contends that it is out of time. According to this article, the starting point of limitation is "when the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff." The respondents' counsel points to a sentence in paragraph 12 of the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment where he says:

"There can therefore be no doubt that the pujaries have been creating othias all along to the knowledge of the mahajanams," and contends that, according to this finding, the villagers who must be regarded as the plaintiffs in this case have had knowledge of these alienations all along and that therefore the period of 12 years must be taken to have expired before the suit was brought. Though the passage referred to above in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment is quite general, it cannot be supposed that he intended to find that every individual 'mahajan' in the village actually knew of these allegations, and it is conceded by the respondents' Counsel that there is no evidence on record to show that the two plaintiffs who brought the suit on behalf of all the villagers had knowledge of these alienations for more than 12 years before the suit. In my view, the word 'plaintiff' in the third column of Art. 134-A must, in the case of a representative suit like the present, brought on behalf of the general body of worshippers in a village, be understood to refer only to the plaintiffs eo nomine on record. Otherwise, the article would become unworkable; for, if 'plaintiff' be taken to mean every individual member of the community which is the only alternative view possible, it would be practically impossible to prove knowledge on the part of such a large number of persons. Nor would that view assist the respondents in this case; for, it is admitted, as already stated, that at least two of the mahajans, that is, the appellant herein, are not proved to have had knowledge of these alienations before 12 years prior to the suit. I am therefore of opinion that there is no bar of limitation under that article.

The respondents' learned Counsel has not challenged the finding of the Court below that the lands in suit are Devadayam Inam lands and that the alienations are invalid and not binding on the temple. A contention to the contrary would clearly be unsustainable.

The appeal therefore succeeds and the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and that of the District Munsif restored. The appellants will have their own costs here and in the Court below.

Mortgage deed—Provision in the deed for mortgagee to waive penalty clause and sue for only arrears — Objections in execution proceedings—Whether proper—Mortgagor whether can be heard to say that penalty should have been enforced against him—Principle of S. 67 (a), Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), not applicable.

Where a mortgage instrument provides that the mortgagee might treat the whole of his mortgage as payable on default in respect of the first two instalments, and the mortgagee actually elected to sue on the two instalments which were in arrears and the sale put up when objection was taken that more of the property was sold than necessary to realise the arrears and that the sale could not be held subject to the remaining instalments of the mortgage debt in respect of which no suit had been filed.

Held, (1) that since the first objection was not one to the manner of execution so much as to the decree which had been obtained, if the mortgagee was bound to sue on the whole of the mortgage, then the plea should have been taken in the suit and the mortgagee given an opportunity of either paying court-fee on the whole claim and getting a decree thereon or of abandoning so much of the mortgage amount as it was not worth his while to pursue. The objection should not be used in the process of execution.

(2) That since the instrument gave the mortgagee an option to waive the penalty and sue merely on the instalments which were due, the mortgagor had the benefit of a deferred liability to pay the balance of mortgage debt and could not be heard to say that the mortgagee was bound to enforce a penalty against himself. The principle of S. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act could not be applied, unless there were either two mortgagees or two separate portions of the same mortgage both of which were payable.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Kistna at Masulipatam dated 11th December, 1936, and made in A. S. No. 242 of 1936 preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Gudiwada dated 26th September, 1936; and made in E. P. No. 89 of 1936 in O. S. No. 144 of 1934.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order in the execution of a mortgage decree. The mortgage instrument is not before me, but from the recital in the preliminary decree it would appear that it provided for the payment of the amount due in ten annual instalments, with a default clause that if two consecutive instalments were in arrears, the mortgagee could claim the whole. In fact the mortgagee elected to sue only on the two instalments which were in arrears and he got a mortgage decree for the payment of these amounts. He must therefore be taken to have waived his right to enforce the default clause. When the hypotheca was put up for sale an objection was raised which is not very clearly stated, but appears to have been directed to two points, firstly, that more of the property was sold than was necessary to realise the arrears and secondly, that the sale could not be held subject to the remaining instalments of the mortgage debt in respect of which no suit had been filed. In so far as the objection was made to the extent of the land covered by the sale proclamation, I doubt very much whether the order is appealable at all. In so far as it relates to the power of the mortgagee to sell the land subject to the balance of his mortgage rights, it must, I think, be held that this is an order on a dispute between the parties arising out of execution and affecting the substantial rights of the judgment-debtor and is therefore appealable.

The basis of the objection has been stated here somewhat differently from the way in which it appears to have been stated in the Courts below. It is contended that, on the analogy of S. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act which of course does not apply in terms to the present proceedings, the mortgagee is bound to sue on the whole of his mortgage and that he not having done so, the decree must be executed by the sale of the properties free of the balance of the mortgage. No authority has been quoted covering the contention raised. It seems to me clear that the objection is really not one to the manner of execution so much as to the decree which has been obtained. If the mortgagee was bound to sue on the whole of his mortgage, then the plea should have been raised in the suit and the mortgagee should have been given an opportunity of either paying court-fee on the whole of the claim and getting a decree thereon, or of abandoning so much of the mortgage claim as it was not worth his while to pursue. The defendant cannot keep such an objection in reserve to be used in the process of execution. The decree itself makes the property liable to be sold to realise the amount due in respect of the first two instalments and it does not affect the rights of the decree-holder under the balance of his mortgage.

Quite apart from the question of the time at which this objection should have been urged I doubt very much whether the objection is sound in substance; for the principle of S. 67 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act could not be applied unless there were either two mortgages or, possibly, two separate portions of the same mortgage both of which were payable. The present instrument apparently provided that the mortgagee might treat the whole of his mortgage as payable on default in respect of the two first instalments. This is presumably an option given to the mortgagee and, if he chooses to waive the penalty and sue merely on those instalments which were due, the mortgagor has the benefit of a deferred liability to pay the balance of the mortgage debt. He cannot in my opinion be heard to say that the mortgagee was bound to enforce a penalty against himself. Whichever way one looks at the case, the appeal has no substance and is dismissed with costs.

Even though it is desirable that all Courts should observe the mandatory provision of O. 5, r. 19 and "either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such further service as it thinks fit," the absence of such an express declaration will not involve as a necessary consequence a finding that a summons has not been duly served.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—It is of course desirable that all Courts should observe the mandatory provision in O. 5, r. 19, Civil Procedure Code, and "either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such further service as it thinks fit." But we do not think that the absence of such an express declaration will involve as a necessary consequence a finding that a summons has not been duly served. In the present case no less than four summonses were taken out to the appellant and they were all returned with reports that the copies had been affixed because the appellant was absent in some place or other. After the fourth return of the kind, the Court said on 24th March, 1933, "defendant 7 affixed on 15th March, 1933, said to have gone to Tirupattur by the inmates of the house. Called absent. Defendant 7 ex parte." In the circumstances of this case we see no difficulty in saying that there is here an implied, though not an express, declaration of sufficiency of service on the seventh defendant. The decisions in *Ashagappa Chetti v. Ramanathan Chettiar*¹ and *Ramaswami Chettiar v. Chinnappa Chetty*² are not in point. Moreover we must agree with the learned Sub-Judge that the appellant really knew all about the suit as it was going on. The mortgagor-defendants were his son-in-law and his grandsons and it is not possible to believe his statements that he knew nothing about the suit until after it has been decreed.

We agree with the learned Sub-Judge that the appellant did not prove that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit came on for trial.

We therefore dismiss this appeal with costs, and we do so with no compunction, since the appellant has not and never has had any defence of his own to raise. He wants now, he says, to press a plea actually taken at the trial on behalf of the mortgagor-defendants, but not substantiated by their Court guardian.

THE MOTOR VEHICLES ACT, 1939.

ACT No. IV OF 1939.

[16th February, 1939.

An Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to motor vehicles.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to motor vehicles in British India; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE MOTOR VEHICLES ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) It shall come into force on the 1st day of July, 1939; but Chapter VIII shall not have effect until the 1st day of July, 1943.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(1) "axle weight" means in relation to an axle of a vehicle the total weight transmitted by the several wheels attached to that axle to the surface whereon the vehicle rests;

(2) "certificate of registration" means the certificate issued by a competent authority to the effect that a motor vehicle has been duly registered in accordance with the provisions of Chapter III;

(3) "contract carriage" means a motor vehicle which carries a passenger or passengers for hire or reward under a contract expressed or implied for the use of the vehicle as a whole at or for a fixed or agreed rate or sum and from one point to another without stopping to pick up or set down along the line of route passengers not included in the contract; and includes a motor cab notwithstanding that the passengers may pay separate fares;

Explanation.—"Contract carriage" does not include a motor vehicle, possession of which has been temporarily transferred in accordance with an express agreement of hire for use as a private vehicle and which is used in accordance with the terms of such agreement;

(4) "delivery van" means any goods vehicle the registered laden weight of which does not exceed 5,000 pounds avoirdupois;

(5) "driver" includes, where a separate person acts as steersman of a motor vehicle, that person as well as any other person engaged in the driving of the vehicle;

(6) "fares" includes sums payable for a season ticket or in respect of the hire of a contract carriage;

(7) "goods" includes live-stock, and any thing (other than equipment ordinarily used with the vehicle) carried by a vehicle except living persons, but does not include luggage or personal effects carried in a motor car or in a trailer attached to a motor car or the personal luggage of passengers travelling in the vehicle;

(8) "goods vehicle" means any motor vehicle constructed or adapted for use for the carriage of goods, or any motor vehicle not so constructed or adapted when used for the carriage of goods solely or in addition to passengers;

(10) "invalid carriage" means a motor vehicle the unladen weight of which does not exceed five hundredweights, specially designed and constructed, and not merely adapted, for the use of a person suffering from some physical defect or disability, and used solely by or for such a person;

(11) "licence" means the document issued by a competent authority authorising the person specified therein to drive a motor vehicle or a motor vehicle of any specified class or description;

(12) "licensing authority" means an authority empowered to grant licences, appointed by the Provincial Government by rule made under section 21;

(13) "light transport vehicle" means any public service vehicle other than a motor cab, or any goods vehicle other than a heavy transport vehicle or a delivery van;

(14) "locomotive" means a motor vehicle which is itself not constructed to carry any load (other than equipment used for the purpose of propulsion), the unladen weight of which exceeds 16,000 pounds avoirdupois; but does not include a road-roller;

(15) "motor cab" means any motor vehicle constructed, adapted or used to carry not more than six passengers excluding the driver, for hire or reward;

(16) "motor car" means any motor vehicle other than a transport vehicle, locomotive, road-roller, tractor, motor cycle or invalid carriage;

(17) "motor cycle" means a motor vehicle, other than an invalid carriage, with less than four wheels, the unladen weight of which, inclusive of any side-car attached to the vehicle, does not exceed 900 pounds avoirdupois;

(18) "motor vehicle" means any mechanically propelled vehicle adapted for use upon roads whether the power of propulsion is transmitted thereto from an external or internal source and includes a chassis to which a body has not been attached and a trailer; but does not include a vehicle running upon fixed rails or used solely upon the premises of the owner;

(19) "owner" means, where the person in possession of a motor vehicle is a minor, the guardian of such minor, and in relation to a motor vehicle which is the subject of a hire purchase agreement, the person in possession of the vehicle under that agreement;

(20) "permit" means the document issued by a Provincial or Regional Transport Authority authorising the use of a transport vehicle as a contract carriage, or stage carriage, or authorising the owner as a private carrier or public carrier to use such vehicle;

(21) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(22) "private carrier" means an owner of a transport vehicle other than a public carrier who uses that vehicle solely for the carriage of goods which are his property or the carriage of which is necessary for the purposes of his business not being a business of providing transport, or who uses the vehicle for any of the purposes specified in sub-section (2) of section 42;

(23) "public carrier" means an owner of a transport vehicle who transports or undertakes to transport goods, or any class of goods, for another person at any time and in any public place for hire or reward, whether in pursuance of the terms of a contract or agreement or otherwise, and includes any person, body, association or company engaged in the business of carrying the goods of persons associated with that person, body, association or company for the purpose of having their goods transported;

(24) "public place" means a road, street, way or other place, whether a thoroughfare or not, to which the public have a right of access, and includes any place or stand at which passengers are picked up or set down by a stage carriage;

(26) "registered axle weight" means in respect of any vehicle the axle weight certified and registered by the registering authority as permissible for that vehicle;

(27) "registered laden weight" means in respect of any vehicle the total weight of the vehicle and load certified and registered by the registering authority as permissible for that vehicle;

(28) "registering authority" means an authority empowered to register motor vehicles under chapter III:

(29) "stage carriage" means a motor vehicle carrying or adapted to carry more than six persons excluding the driver which carries passengers for hire or reward at separate fares paid by or for individual passengers, either for the whole journey or for stages of the journey;

(30) "tractor" means a motor vehicle which is not itself constructed to carry any load (other than equipment used for the purpose of propulsion) the unladen weight of which does not exceed 16,000 pounds avoirdupois; but excludes a road-roller;

(31) "traffic signs" includes all signals, warning sign posts, direction posts, or other devices for the information, guidance or direction of drivers of motor vehicles;

(32) "trailer" means any vehicle other than a side-car drawn or intended to be drawn by a motor vehicle;

(33) "transport vehicle" means a public service vehicle, a goods vehicle a locomotive or a tractor other than a locomotive or tractor used solely for agricultural purposes;

(34) "unladen weight" means the weight of a vehicle or trailer including all equipment ordinarily used with the vehicle or trailer when working, but excluding the weight of a driver or attendant; and where alternative parts or bodies are used the unladen weight of the vehicle means the weight of the vehicle with the heaviest such alternative part or body;

(35) "weight" means the total weight transmitted for the time being by the wheels of a vehicle to the surface on which the vehicle rests.

CHAPTER II.

LICENSING OF DRIVERS OF MOTOR VEHICLES.

3. (1) No person shall drive a motor vehicle in any public place unless ^{Necessity for driving} he holds an effective licence issued to himself authorising him to drive the vehicle; and no person shall so drive a motor vehicle as a paid employee or shall so drive a public service vehicle unless his licence specifically entitles him so to do.

(2) A Provincial Government may prescribe the conditions subject to which sub-section (1) shall not apply to a person receiving instruction in driving a motor vehicle.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) shall for a period of twelve months after the commencement of this Act invalidate a licence to drive a motor vehicle issued by a competent authority under the provisions of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914.

^{Age limit in connection with driving of motor vehicles.}

4. (1) No person under the age of eighteen years shall drive a motor vehicle in any public place.

(2) Subject to the provisions of section 14, no person under the age of twenty years shall drive a transport vehicle in any public place.

(3) Nothing contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall prevent any person who, before the commencement of this Act, possessed a licence to drive a motor vehicle from obtaining a licence to drive a motor vehicle of the same class.

^{Responsibility of owners of motor vehicles for contraventions of sections 3 and 4.}

5. No owner or person in charge of a motor vehicle shall cause or permit any person who does not satisfy the provisions of section 3 or section 4 to drive the vehicle.

6. (1) No person shall, while he holds any licence for the time being in force, hold any other licence except a licence issued in accordance with the provisions of section 14, or a document authorising, in accordance with the rules made under section 92, the person specified therein to drive a motor vehicle.

^{Restrictions on the holding of licences.}

(2) No holder of a licence shall permit it to be used by any other person.

(3) Nothing in this section shall prevent a licensing authority having the jurisdiction referred to in sub-section (1) of section 7 from adding to the classes of vehicle which the licence authorises the holder to drive.

7. (1) Any person who is not disqualified under section 4 for driving a motor vehicle and who is not for the time being disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence may apply to the licensing authority having jurisdiction in the area in which he ordinarily resides or carries on business or, if the application is for a licence to drive as a paid employee, in which the employer resides or carries on business, for the issue to him of a licence.

(2) Every application under sub-section (1) shall be in Form A as set forth in the First Schedule, shall be signed by, or bear the thumb impression of, the applicant in two places, and shall contain the information required by the form.

(3) Where the application is for a licence to drive as a paid employee or to drive a transport vehicle, or where in any other case the licensing authority for reasons to be stated in writing so requires, the application shall be accompanied by a medical certificate in Form C, as set forth in the First Schedule, signed by a registered medical practitioner.

(4) Every application for a licence to drive as a paid employee and every application for a licence to drive a transport vehicle shall be accompanied by three clear copies of a recent photograph of the applicant.

(5) If, from the application or from the medical certificate referred to in sub-section (3), it appears that the applicant is suffering from any disease or disability specified in the Second Schedule or any other disease or disability which is likely to cause the driving by him of a motor vehicle of the class which he would be authorised by the licence applied for to drive to be a source of danger to the public or to the passengers, the licensing authority shall refuse to issue the licence:

Provided that—

(a) a licence limited to driving an invalid carriage may be issued to the applicant, if the licensing authority is satisfied that he is fit to drive such a carriage,

(b) the applicant may, except where he suffers from a disease or disability specified in Second Schedule, claim to be subjected to a test of his fitness or ability to drive a motor vehicle of a particular construction or design, and, if he passes such test to the satisfaction of the licensing authority and is not otherwise disqualified, the licensing authority shall grant him a licence to drive such motor vehicle as the licensing authority may specify in the licence.

(6) No licence shall be issued to any applicant unless—

(a) he passes to the satisfaction of the licensing authority the test of competence to drive specified in the Third Schedule, or

(b) where the application is made within twelve months from the commencement of this Act, he satisfies the licensing authority that he was at the commencement of this Act the holder of a current licence granted under the provisions of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, entitling him to drive a vehicle of the class or description which he would be entitled to drive under the licence applied for:

Provided that, where the application is for a licence to drive a motor cycle or a motor car, the licensing authority shall exempt the applicant from Part I of the test specified in the Third Schedule if the licensing authority is satisfied that the applicant has previously held a licence to drive and has had not less than twelve months' recent experience of driving a motor cycle or a motor car, as the case may be:

Provided further that where the application is for a licence to drive a motor vehicle (not being a transport vehicle) otherwise than as a paid employee, the licensing authority may exempt the applicant from Part I of the test specified in the Third Schedule if the applicant possesses a driving certificate issued by an automobile association recognised in this behalf by the Provincial Government.

(7) The test of competence to drive shall be carried out in a vehicle of the type to which the application refers, and, for the purposes of Part I of the test,—

(a) a person who passes the test in driving a motor car or a motor cab or a delivery van shall be deemed to have passed the test for all of these vehicles;

(b) a person who passes the test in driving a light transport vehicle shall be deemed also to have passed the test in driving the vehicles referred to in clause (a); and

(c) a person who passes the test in driving a heavy transport vehicle shall be deemed also to have passed the test in driving any motor vehicle other than a motor cycle.

(8) When an application has been duly made to the appropriate licensing authority and the applicant has satisfied such authority of his physical fitness and of his competence to drive and has paid to the authority a fee of five rupees, the licensing authority shall grant the applicant a licence unless the applicant is disqualified under section 4 for driving a motor vehicle or is for the time being disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence:

Provided that—

(a) the fee for a licence issued in accordance with the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (6) shall be three rupees only, and

(b) a licensing authority may issue a licence to drive a motor cycle or a motor car notwithstanding that it is not the appropriate licensing authority, if the licensing authority is satisfied that there is good reason for the applicant's inability to apply to the appropriate licensing authority.

8. (1) Every licence, except a licence issued under section 14, shall be in Form D as set forth in the First Schedule and shall have affixed thereto one of the signatures or thumb impressions given on the form of application for the licence and, in the case of a licence to drive as a paid employee or to drive a transport vehicle, one of the photographs referred to in sub-section (4) of section 7.

(2) A licence shall specify whether the holder is entitled to drive as a paid employee and whether he is entitled to drive a public service vehicle and shall further be expressed as entitling the holder to drive a motor vehicle of one or more of the following classes, namely:—

- (a) motor cycle,
- (b) motor car,
- (c) motor cab,
- (d) delivery van,
- (e) light transport vehicle,
- (f) heavy transport vehicle,
- (g) locomotive,
- (h) tractor,
- (i) road-roller,
- (j) invalid carriage, or
- (k) motor vehicle of a specified description.

9. (1) Subject to any rules made by a Provincial Government under sub-section (3), a licence issued under the foregoing sections shall be effective throughout British India.

(2) Subject, in the case of international driving permits issued in pursuance of the International Convention relative to motor traffic concluded at Paris on the 24th day of April, 1926, or of any Convention modifying the same, to any rules made by the Central Government under section 92 and subject in any other case to the provisions of sub-section (4), a licence to drive a motor vehicle issued by a competent authority in any Indian State or in the French or Portuguese Settlements bounded by India shall, if the holder is ordinarily resident in the State or Settlement in which the licence was issued, be valid throughout British India as if it were a licence issued under this Act:

Provided that such holder is not disqualified under any of the provisions of this Act for holding or obtaining a licence in British India.

(3) A Provincial Government may, by rules made under section 21,—

(a) provide that a specification entitling the holder of a licence to drive a public service vehicle shall be made in the licence only by or under the authority of the Regional Transport Authority constituted under Chapter IV,

(b) regulate the submission of applications for such licences to the said authority, or

(c) require as a condition of its validity in a province that a licence-entitling the holder to drive a public service vehicle shall be countersigned by a prescribed authority in the province.

(4) If the Central Government is satisfied that licences issued in British India under this Act are not effective in any Indian State or French of Portuguese Settlement bounded by India or are effective subject to unreasonable conditions or that like conditions and requirements to those imposed by this Act are not imposed in a reasonable degree upon the issue of licences in any State or Settlement as aforesaid, the Central Government shall, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare that licences generally or any particular class of licence issued in any such State or Settlement shall not be valid in British India.

10. A licence issued under the foregoing sections shall, subject to the provisions contained in this Act as to the cancellation of licences and the disqualification of holders of licences for holding or obtaining licences, be effective without renewal for a period of twelve months only from the date of issue or last renewal.

11. (1) Any licensing authority may on application made to it renew a licence issued under the provisions of this Act.

(2) An application for the renewal of a licence shall be made in Form B as set forth in the First Schedule and shall contain the declaration required by that form; provided that where the applicant does not or is unable to subscribe to the said declaration the provisions of sub-section (5) of section 7 shall apply.

(3) The fee payable for the renewal of a licence shall be three rupees, if the application for renewal is made previous to, or not more than fifteen days subsequent to, the date on which the licence is due to expire and shall be five rupees in any other case, unless the licensing authority is satisfied that the holder was prevented by good cause from applying for the renewal of the licence within fifteen days after its expiry.

(4) When the authority renewing the licence is not the authority which issued the licence, it shall intimate the fact of renewal to the authority which issued the licence.

12. Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing sections, a licensing authority may at any time revoke a licence issued by it, or may require, as a condition of continuing to hold such licence, the holder thereof to furnish a fresh medical certificate in Form C as set forth in the First Schedule signed as required by sub-section (3) of section 7, if the licensing authority has reasonable grounds to believe that the holder of the licence is, by virtue of any disease or disability, unfit to drive a motor vehicle.

13. (1) Where the licensing authority refuses to issue or revokes or refuses to renew any licence, it shall do so by an order communicated to the applicant or the holder, as the case may be, giving the reasons in writing for such refusal or revocation.

(2) Any person aggrieved by the refusal of a licensing authority to grant or renew a licence or by the revocation of a licence may, within thirty days of the service on him of the order of such refusal or revocation, appeal to the prescribed authority, who shall decide the appeal after giving the licensing authority an opportunity of being heard, and the decision of the appellate authority shall be binding on the licensing authority.

(3) The order of a licensing authority shall, unless the appellate authority, conditionally or unconditionally, directs otherwise, be in force pending the disposal of an appeal under sub-section (2).

14. (1) The authority specified in Part A of the Fourth Schedule may grant licences, valid throughout British India, to persons who have completed their eighteenth year to drive motor vehicles which are the property of the Central Government.

Licences to drive motor vehicles, the property of the Central Government.

(2) A licence issued under this section shall specify the class or classes of vehicle which the holder is entitled to drive and the period for which he is so entitled.

(3) A licence issued under this section shall not entitle the holder to drive any motor vehicle except a motor vehicle which is the property of the Central Government.

(4) The authority issuing any licence under this section shall at the request of any Provincial Government furnish such information respecting any person to whom a licence is issued as that Government may at any time require.

15. (1) If a licensing authority is satisfied after giving him an opportunity of being heard that any person—

Power of licensing authority to disqualify for holding a licence.

(a) is a habitual criminal or a habitual drunkard, or

(b) is using or has used a motor vehicle in the commission of a cognisable offence, or

(c) has by his previous conduct as driver of a motor vehicle shown that his driving is likely to be attended with danger to the public, it may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, make an order disqualifying that person for a specified period for holding or obtaining a licence.

(2) Upon the issue of any such order a person affected, if he is the holder of a licence, shall forthwith surrender his licence to the licensing authority making the order, if the licence has not already been surrendered, and the licensing authority shall—

(a) if the licence is a licence issued under this Act, keep it until the disqualification has expired or has been removed, or

(b) if it is not a licence issued under this Act, endorse the disqualification upon it and send it to the licensing authority by which it was issued.

(3) Any person aggrieved by an order made by a licensing authority under this section may, within thirty days of the receipt of the order, appeal to the prescribed authority, and such appellate authority shall give notice to the licensing authority and hear either party if so required by that party and may make such inquiry into the matter as it thinks fit. An order made by any such appellate authority shall be final.

16. (1) A Regional Transport Authority constituted under Chapter IV may for reasons to be recorded in writing and subject to any prescribed conditions declare any person disqualified, for a specified period, for holding or obtaining a licence to drive a public service vehicle in the province.

Power of Regional Transport Authority to disqualify.

(2) Any person aggrieved by an order of a Regional Transport Authority made under sub-section (1) may within thirty days of the receipt of intimation of such order appeal against the order to the prescribed authority.

17. (1) Where a person is convicted of an offence under this Act, or of an offence in the commission of which a motor vehicle was used, the Court by which such person is convicted may, subject to the provisions of this section, in addition to imposing any other punishment authorised by law, declare the person so convicted to be disqualified, for such period as the Court may specify; for holding any licence or for holding a licence to drive a particular class or description of vehicle.

(2) A Court shall not order the disqualification of an offender convicted for the first or second time of an offence punishable under section 115.

(3) A Court shall order the disqualification of an offender convicted of an offence punishable under section 117, and such disqualification shall be for a period of not less than six months.

(4) A Court shall order the disqualification of an offender convicted of an offence against the provisions of clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 87 or of section 89, and such disqualification shall be for a period of not less than one month.

(5) A Court shall, unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it thinks fit to order otherwise, order the disqualification of an offender—

(a) who having been convicted of an offence punishable under section 116 is again convicted of an offence punishable under that section,

(b) who is convicted of an offence punishable under section 120, or

(c) who is convicted of an offence punishable under section 123:

Provided that the period of disqualification shall not exceed, in the cases referred to in clauses (a) and (b), two years, or, in the case referred to in clause (c), one year.

(6) A Court ordering the disqualification of an offender convicted of an offence punishable under section 116 may direct that the offender shall, whether he has previously passed the test of competence to drive specified in the Third Schedule or not, remain disqualified until he has subsequent to the making of the order of disqualification passed that test to the satisfaction of the licensing authority.

(7) The Court to which an appeal lies from any conviction of an offence of the nature specified in sub-section (1) may set aside or vary any order of disqualification made by the Court below, and the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from any Court may set aside or vary any order of disqualification made by that Court, notwithstanding that no appeal lies against the conviction in connection with which such order was made.

18. (1) A person in respect of whom any disqualification order is made shall be debarred to the extent and for the period specified in such order from holding or obtaining a licence and the licence, if any, held by such person at the date of the order shall cease to be effective during such period.

(2) The operation of a disqualification order made under section 17 shall not be suspended or postponed while an appeal is pending against such order or against the conviction as a result of which such order is made, unless the appellate Court so directs.

(3) Any person in respect of whom any disqualification order has been made may at any time after the expiry of six months from the date of the order apply to the Court or other authority by which the order was made, to remove the disqualification; and the Court or authority, as the case may be, may, having regard to all the circumstances, either remove or vary the order of disqualification:

Provided that where an application has been made under this section a second application thereunder shall not be entertained before the expiry of a further period of three months.

19. (1) The Court or authority making an order of disqualification shall endorse or cause to be endorsed upon the licence, if any, held by the person disqualified particulars of the order of disqualification and of any conviction of an offence in respect of which an order of disqualification is made; and particulars of any removal or variation of an order of disqualification made under sub-section (3) of section 18 shall be similarly so endorsed.

(2) A Court by which any person is convicted of an offence specified in the Fifth Schedule shall, whether or not an order of disqualification is made in respect of such conviction, endorse or cause to be endorsed particulars of such conviction on any licence held by the person convicted.

(3) Any person accused of an offence specified in the Fifth Schedule shall when attending the Court bring with him his licence if it is in his possession.

20. (1) An endorsement on any licence shall be transferred to any new or duplicate licence obtained by the holder thereof until the holder becomes entitled under the provisions of this section to have a licence issued to him free from endorsement.

(2) Where a licence is required to be endorsed and the licence is at the time not in the possession of the Court or authority by which the endorsement is to be made then—

(a) if the person in respect of whom the endorsement is to be made is at the time the holder of a licence, he shall produce the licence to the Court or authority within five days, or such longer time as the Court or authority may fix, or

(b) if, not being then the holder of a licence, he subsequently obtains a licence, he shall within five days after obtaining the licence produce it to the Court or authority; and if the licence is not produced within the time specified it shall on the expiration of such time be of no effect until it is produced for the purpose of endorsement.

(3) A person whose licence has been endorsed shall, if during a continuous period of three years since the last endorsement was made no further order of endorsement has been made against him, be entitled, on surrendering his licence and on payment of a fee of five rupees, to receive a new licence free from all endorsements. If the endorsement was only in respect of exceeding a speed limit, he shall be entitled to have a clean licence issued on the expiration of one year from the date of the order:

Provided that in reckoning the said period of three years and one year, respectively, any period during which the said person was disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence shall be excluded.

(4) When a licence is endorsed by or an order of endorsement is made by any Court, the Court shall send particulars of the endorsement or order, as the case may be, to the licensing authority by which the licence was last renewed and to the licensing authority which granted the licence.

(5) Where the holder of a licence is disqualified by the order of any Court for holding or obtaining a licence, the Court shall take possession of the licence and forward it to the licensing authority by which it was granted or last renewed and that authority shall keep the licence until the disqualification has expired or has been removed and the person entitled to the licence has made a demand in writing for its return to him:

Provided that, if the disqualification is limited to the driving of a motor vehicle of a particular class or description, the Court shall endorse the licence to this effect and shall send a copy of the order of disqualification to the licensing authority by which the licence was granted and shall return the licence to the holder.

(6) Where on an appeal against any conviction or order of a Court which has been endorsed on a licence, the appellate Court varies or sets aside the conviction or order, the appellate Court shall inform the licensing authority by which the licence was last renewed and the licensing authority which granted the licence, and shall amend or cause to be amended the endorsement of such conviction or order.

21. (1) A Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the appointment, jurisdiction, control and functions of licensing authorities and other prescribed authorities;

(b) for the conduct and hearing of appeals that may be preferred under this Chapter;

(c) the issue of duplicate licences to replace licences lost, destroyed or mutilated, the replacement of photographs which have become obsolete, and the issue of temporary licences to persons receiving instruction in driving, and the fees to be charged therefor;

(d) the conditions subject to which a Regional Transport Authority may disqualify a person for holding a licence to drive a public service vehicle;

(e) the medical examination and testing of applicants for licences and of drivers and the fees to be charged therefor;

(f) the refund of fees paid under the provisions of this Act or of any enactment relating to motor vehicles in force in British India at the commencement of this Act;

(g) the granting by registered medical practitioners of the certificates referred to in sub-section (3) of section 7;

(h) the communication of particulars of licences granted by one licensing authority to other licensing authorities;

(i) the control of schools or establishments for the instruction of drivers of motor vehicles and the acceptance of driving certificates issued by such schools or establishments as qualifying the holder for exemption from Part I of the test specified in the Third Schedule;

(j) the exemptions of drivers of road-rollers from all or any of the provisions of this Chapter or of the rules made thereunder; and

(k) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

CHAPTER III.

REGISTRATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES.

22. (1) No person shall drive any motor vehicle and no owner of a motor vehicle shall cause or permit the vehicle to be driven in any public place or in any other place for the purpose of carrying passengers or goods unless the vehicle is registered in accordance with this Chapter and the certificate of registration of the vehicle has not been suspended or cancelled and the vehicle carries a registration mark displayed in the prescribed manner.

(2) Nothing in this section shall apply to a motor vehicle while being driven within the limits of jurisdiction of one registering authority to or from the appropriate place of registration for the purpose of being registered under section 23, 25 or 39 or to a motor vehicle exempted from the provisions of this Chapter while in the possession of a dealer in motor vehicles.

23. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 25 and section 39, every owner of a motor vehicle shall cause the vehicle to be registered by a registering authority in the province in which he has the residence or place of business where the vehicle is normally kept.

Registration, where to be made.

(2) A motor vehicle already registered under any enactment in force in British India at the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be registered under this Act until the 1st day of April, 1941, and on the application of the owner before that date shall be registered under this Act without payment of any registration fee.

(3) A Provincial Government may, by rules made under section 41, provide that within a prescribed period certificates of registration of any prescribed class of transport vehicles deemed to be registered under this Act by virtue of sub-section (2) shall be presented to a prescribed authority for the entry therein of all or any of the particulars specified in section 37.

24. (1) An application by or on behalf of the owner of a motor vehicle for registration shall be in Form E as set forth in the First Schedule, shall contain the information required by that form, and shall be accompanied by the prescribed fee.

Registration how to be made.

(2) The registering authority shall issue to the owner of a motor vehicle registered by it a certificate of registration in Form G as set forth in the First Schedule and shall enter in a record to be kept by it particulars of such certificate.

(3) The registering authority shall assign to the vehicle, for display thereon in the prescribed manner, a distinguishing mark (in this Act referred to as the registration mark) consisting of one of the groups of letters allotted to the province by the Sixth Schedule followed by a number containing not more than four figures.

25. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in section 23, the owner of a motor vehicle may apply to any registering authority to have the vehicle temporarily registered in the prescribed manner and for the issue in the prescribed manner of a temporary certificate of registration and a temporary registration mark.

Temporary registration.

(2) A registration made under this section shall be valid only for a period not exceeding one month, and shall not be renewable.

26. The registering authority may before proceeding to register a motor vehicle require the person applying for registration of the vehicle to produce the vehicle either before itself or such authority as the Provincial Government may by order appoint in order that the registering authority may satisfy itself that the particulars contained in the application are true and that the vehicle complies with the requirements of Chapter V and of the rules made thereunder.

Production of vehicle at time of registration.

27. The registering authority may refuse to register any motor vehicle if the vehicle is mechanically defective or fails to comply with the requirements of Chapter V or of the rules made thereunder, or if the applicant fails to furnish particulars of any previous registration of the vehicle, and it shall furnish the applicant whose vehicle is refused registration with the reasons in writing for such refusal.

Refusal of registration.

28. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 29, a motor vehicle registered in accordance with this Chapter in any province or deemed to be registered under this Act shall not require to be registered elsewhere in British India and a certificate of registration issued or in force under this Act in respect of such vehicle shall be effective throughout British India:

Effectiveness in British India of registration. Provided that the Provincial Government may, by rules made under section 41, provide that the certificates of registration or transport vehicles of any prescribed class issued by an authority not within the province and effective by virtue of sub-section (2) of section 23 shall not be valid unless they contain the particulars specified in section 37 or such of those particulars as may be prescribed.

(2) Subject, in the case of international motor vehicle certificates issued in pursuance of the International Convention relative to motor traffic concluded at Paris on the 24th day of April, 1926, to any rules made by the Central Government under section 92, and subject in any other case to the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 23 and sub-section (3) and sub-section (4) of this section, a motor vehicle registered by a competent authority in any Indian State or in the French or Portuguese Settlements bounded by India shall not require to be registered in British India:

Provided that there is in force in respect of the vehicle a certificate conforming to and containing substantially the same particulars as the certificate of registration in Form G as set forth in the First Schedule issued by such competent authority in respect of such vehicle.

(3) A certificate complying with the requirements of the proviso to sub-section (2) shall be effective throughout British India as if it were a certificate of registration issued under this Act.

(4) Sub-section (2) shall not apply to any motor vehicle previously registered in British India, if the certificate of registration of the vehicle in British India is for the time being suspended or cancelled for any reason other than that of permanent removal of the vehicle from British India.

(5) If at any time the Central Government is satisfied that motor vehicles registered in British India under this Act are not permitted to be driven in any Indian State or French or Portuguese Settlement without fresh registration in such State or Settlement, or are permitted to be driven only subject to unreasonable conditions or that like conditions and requirements to those imposed under this Act (including the specification of the particulars required by Form G as set forth in the First Schedule) are not imposed in a reasonable degree upon the issue and for the continued effectiveness of certificates of registration in any State or Settlement as aforesaid, the Central Government shall, by notification in the Official Gazette, declare that certificates of registration generally or in respect of any particular class of motor vehicle issued in any such State or Settlement shall not be effective in British India.

29. (1) When a motor vehicle registered in one province has been kept in another province for a period exceeding twelve months, the owner of the vehicle shall apply to the registering authority, within whose jurisdiction the vehicle then is, for the assignment of a new registration mark and shall present the certificate of registration to that registering authority.

Assignment of fresh registration mark on removal to another province. (2) The registering authority, to which application is made under sub-section (1), shall assign the vehicle a registration mark in accordance with the Sixth Schedule to be carried thenceforth on the vehicle and shall enter the mark upon the certificate of registration before returning it to the applicant and shall, in communication with the registering authority by whom the vehicle was previously registered, arrange for the transfer of the registration of the vehicle from the records of that registering authority to its own records.

(3) A Provincial Government may make rules under section 41 requiring the owner of a motor vehicle not registered within the province, which is brought into or is for the time being in the province, to furnish to a prescribed authority in the province such information with respect to the motor vehicle and its registration as may be prescribed.

30. (1) If the owner of a motor vehicle ceases to reside or have his place of business at the address recorded in the certificate of registration of the vehicle, he shall, within thirty days of any such change of address, intimate his new address to the registering authority by which the certificate of registration was issued, or, if the new address is within the jurisdiction of another registering authority, to that other registering authority, and shall at the same time forward the certificate of registration to the registering authority in order that the new address may be entered therein.

(2) A registering authority other than the original registering authority making any such entry shall communicate the altered address to the original registering authority.

(3) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall apply where the change of the address recorded in the certificate of registration is due to a temporary absence not intended to exceed six months in duration or where the motor vehicle is neither used nor removed from the address recorded in the certificate of registration.

31. (1) Within thirty days of the transfer of ownership of any motor vehicle registered under this Chapter, the transferee shall report the transfer to the registering authority within whose jurisdiction he resides and shall forward the certificate of registration to that registering authority together with the prescribed fee in order that particulars of the transfer of ownership may be entered therein.

(2) A registering authority other than the original registering authority making any such entry shall communicate the transfer of ownership to the original registering authority.

32. (1) If a motor vehicle is so altered that the particulars contained in the certificate of registration are no longer accurate, the owner of the vehicle shall, within fourteen days of the making of any such alteration, report the alteration to the registering authority within whose jurisdiction he resides and shall forward the certificate of registration to that authority together with the prescribed fee in order that particulars of the alteration may be entered therein:

Alteration in motor vehicle.

Provided that it shall not be necessary to report any change in the unladen weight of the motor vehicle consequent on the addition or removal of fittings or accessories, if such change does not exceed two per cent. of the weight entered in the certificate of registration.

(2) A registering authority other than the original registering authority making any such entry shall communicate the details of the entry to the original registering authority.

33. (1) A registering authority or other prescribed authority, which has reason to believe that any motor vehicle within its jurisdiction is in such a condition that its use in a public place would constitute a danger to the public, or that it fails to comply with the requirements of Chapter V or of the rules made thereunder, may, after giving the owner an opportunity of making any representation he may wish to make, for reasons to be recorded in writing suspend the certificate of registration of the vehicle until the defects are remedied to its satisfaction.

(2) An authority other than a registering authority shall, when making a suspension order under sub-section (1), intimate in writing the fact of suspension:

and the reasons therefor to the registering authority within whose jurisdiction the vehicle is at the time of the suspension.

(3) Where the registration of a motor vehicle has been suspended under sub-section (1) for a continuous period of not less than one month, the registering authority, within whose jurisdiction the vehicle was when the registration was suspended, shall, if it is not the original registering authority, inform that authority of the suspension; and when the suspension has continued without interruption for a period of not less than six months, the registering authority, within whose jurisdiction the vehicle was when the registration was suspended, may, if it is the original registering authority, cancel the registration, and, if it is not the original registering authority, shall forward the certificate of registration to that authority which may cancel it forthwith.

(4) The owner of a motor vehicle shall, on the demand of a registering authority or other prescribed authority which has suspended the certificate of registration of the vehicle under this section, surrender the certificate of registration and any token or card issued to authorise the use of the vehicle in a public place.

(5) A certificate of registration and any token or card surrendered under sub-section (4) shall be returned to the owner when the order suspending registration has been rescinded and not before.

34. (1) If a motor vehicle has been destroyed or has been rendered permanently incapable of use, the owner shall, within fourteen days or as soon as may be, report the fact to the registering authority within whose jurisdiction he resides and shall forward to that authority the certificate of registration of the vehicle together with any token or card issued to authorise the use of the vehicle in a public place.

(2) The registering authority shall, if it is the original registering authority, cancel the registration and the certificate of registration, or, if it is not, shall forward the report and the certificate of registration to the original registering authority and that authority shall cancel the registration and the certificate of registration.

(3) Any registering authority may order the examination of a motor vehicle within its jurisdiction by such authority as the Provincial Government may by order appoint and, if upon such examination and after giving the owner an opportunity to make any representation he may wish to make it is satisfied that the vehicle is in such a condition that its use in a public place would constitute a danger to the public and that it is beyond reasonable repair, may cancel the registration of the vehicle.

(4) If a registering authority is satisfied that a motor vehicle has been permanently removed out of British India, the registering authority shall cancel the registration.

(5) A registering authority cancelling the registration of a motor vehicle under section 33 or under this section shall communicate the fact in writing to the owner of the vehicle and the owner of the vehicle shall forthwith surrender to that authority the certificate of registration of the vehicle and any token or card issued to authorise the use of the vehicle in a public place.

(6) A registering authority making an order of cancellation under this section shall, if it is the original registering authority, cancel the certificate of registration and the entry relating to the vehicle in its records, and, if it is not the original registering authority, forward the certificate of registration to that authority, and that authority shall cancel the certificate of registration and the entry relating to the motor vehicle in its records.

(7) The expression "original registering authority" in this section and in sections 30, 31, 32 and 33 means the registering authority in whose records the registration of the vehicle is recorded.

35. (1) Any owner of a motor vehicle aggrieved by an order of refusal under section 27 to register a motor vehicle or under sub-section (1) of section 38 to issue a certificate of fitness or by an order of suspension or cancellation made under section 33 or 34 or by an order of cancellation under sub-section (3) of section 38 may, within thirty days of the date on which he has received notice of such order, appeal against the order to the prescribed authority.

Appeals.

(2) The appellate authority shall give notice of the appeal to the original authority and after giving opportunity to the original authority and the appellant to be heard either personally or by pleader in the appeal pass such orders as it thinks fit:

Provided that orders of the original authority shall remain in force pending the disposal of the appeal unless the appellate authority otherwise directs.

36. (1) After the commencement of this Act, a registering authority shall refuse to register any transport vehicle other than a motor cab, unless the application for registration is accompanied by a document in Form F as set forth in the First Schedule signed by the maker of the vehicle or an assembler duly authorised by the maker in this behalf stating the greatest laden weight and greatest axle weights for which the vehicle is and the several axles are designed:

Special requirement for registration of transport vehicle.

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to any application for the registration of a transport vehicle already registered under any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act.

(2) Where a transport vehicle or chassis, as the case may be, has affixed to it a metal plate, bearing the stamp of the maker or assembler and identified as appertaining to the particular vehicle or chassis to which it is attached, which contains the particulars specified in sub-section (1), that plate may at the discretion of a registering authority be deemed to be the document referred to in sub-section (1).

37. (1) A registering authority when registering a transport vehicle other than a motor cab, shall enter in the record of registration and shall also enter in the certificate of registration of the vehicle the following particulars, namely:—

Special particulars to be recorded on registration of transport vehicle.

(a) the unladen weight of the vehicle;
(b) the number, nature and size of the tyres attached to each wheel;
(c) the registered laden weight of the vehicle and the registered axle weights pertaining to the several axles thereof, fixed in accordance with sub-section (2) with reference to the particulars of the tyres entered in the certificate of registration; and

(d) if the vehicle is used or adapted to be used for the carriage of passengers solely or in addition to goods, the number of passengers for whom accommodation is provided, and the owner of the vehicle shall have the said particulars exhibited in the prescribed manner on the vehicle.

(2) Notwithstanding any statement contained in the document referred to in sub-section (1) of section 36 as supplied by the maker or assembler of a transport vehicle, the registered weight to be recorded by the registering authority for any axle shall not exceed the permissible weight for that axle calculated in accordance with the Seventh Schedule, nor shall the registered laden weight of the vehicle exceed the sum of the several axle weights as so determined:

Provided that where it appears to a Provincial Government that heavier weights than those specified in the Seventh Schedule may be permitted in a particular locality for vehicles of a particular type, the Provincial Government may by notification in the official Gazette direct that the provisions of this sub-section shall apply with such modifications as may be specified in the notification.

(3) When by reason of an alteration in the number, nature or size of tyres attached to the vehicle the registered laden weight or any registered axle weight recorded in the certificate of registration no longer accords with the laden weight or the axle weight as determined in accordance with sub-section (2), the provisions of section 32 shall apply, and the registering authority shall enter in the certificate of registration a revised registered laden weight and registered axle weights.

38. (1) Subject to the provisions of section 39, a transport vehicle shall not be deemed to be validly registered for the purposes of section 22, unless it carries a certificate of fitness in Form H as set forth in the First Schedule, issued by the prescribed authority, to the effect that the vehicle complies for the time being with all the requirements of Chapter V and the rules made thereunder. Where the prescribed authority refuses to issue such certificate, it shall supply the owner of the vehicle with its reasons in writing for such refusal.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), a certificate of fitness shall remain effective for three years, unless a shorter period, not being in any case less than six months, is specified in the certificate by the prescribed authority.

(3) The issuing authority or other prescribed authority may for reasons to be recorded in writing cancel a certificate of fitness at any time, if satisfied that the vehicle to which it relates no longer complies with all the requirements of this Act and the rules made thereunder; and on such cancellation the certificate of registration of the vehicle and any permit granted in respect of the vehicle under Chapter IV shall be deemed to be suspended until a new certificate of fitness has been obtained.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), a Provincial Government may, until the expiry of one year from the commencement of this Act, by rules made under section 41, dispense with the necessity for a certificate of fitness in the case of all or any transport vehicle in respect of which certificates of registration and permits had already been issued before the commencement of this Act.

39. (1) The authority specified in Part B of the Fourth Schedule may register any motor vehicle which is the property of the Central Government; and any vehicle so registered shall not, so long as it remains the property of the Central Government, require to be registered otherwise under this Act.

(2) A transport vehicle registered under this section shall carry a certificate of fitness in Form H as set forth in the First Schedule issued by the authority referred to in sub-section (1).

(3) An authority registering a vehicle under sub-section (1) shall assign a registration mark in accordance with the provisions contained in the Fourth Schedule and shall issue a certificate in respect of the vehicle that the vehicle has been registered under this section.

(4) If a vehicle registered under this section ceases to be the property of the Central Government, the provisions of section 23 shall thereupon apply.

(5) The authority registering a vehicle under sub-section (1) shall furnish to any Provincial Government all such information regarding the general nature, over all dimensions, and axle weights of the vehicle as the Provincial Government may at any time require.

40. (1) The registration mark assigned to a trailer shall be displayed in the prescribed manner on the side of the vehicle.

(2) No person shall drive a motor vehicle to which a trailer is or trailers are attached unless the registration mark of the motor vehicle so driven is displayed in the prescribed manner on the trailer or on the last trailer in the train, as the case may be.

Power to make rules. 41. (1) A Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the conduct and hearing of appeals that may be preferred under this Chapter;

(b) the appointment, functions and jurisdiction of registering and other prescribed authorities;

(c) the issue of certificates of registration and duplicate certificates of registration to replace certificates lost, destroyed or mutilated;

(d) the temporary registration of motor vehicles, and the issue of temporary certificates of registration and marks;

(e) the manner in which registration marks and the particulars referred to in sub-section (1) of section 37, and other prescribed particulars shall be exhibited;

(f) the fees to be charged for the issue or alteration of certificates of registration, for certificates of fitness, for registration marks, and for the examination or inspection of motor vehicles, and the refund of such fees;

(g) the forms, other than those set forth in the First Schedule, to be used for the purposes of this Chapter;

(h) the communication between registering authorities of particulars of certificates of registration and by owners of vehicles registered outside the province of particulars of such vehicles and of their registration;

(i) the particulars to be furnished by the owner of any motor vehicle to the registering authority, upon the transfer of possession of the motor vehicle under the terms of a hiring agreement;

(j) the extension of the validity of certificates of fitness pending consideration of applications for their renewal;

(k) the exemption from the provisions of this Chapter, and the conditions and fees for exemption, of motor vehicles in the possession of dealers;

(l) the exemption of road-rollers from all or any of the provisions of this Chapter and the rules made thereunder, and the conditions governing such exemption; and the exemption of delivery vans from the provisions of section 38 and the conditions governing such exemption; and

(m) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

CHAPTER IV.

CONTROL OF TRANSPORT VEHICLES.

42. (1) No owner of a transport vehicle shall use or permit the use of the vehicle in any public place, save in accordance with the conditions of a permit granted or countersigned by a Regional or Provincial Transport Authority authorising the use of the vehicle in that place in the manner in which the vehicle is being used:

Provided that a stage carriage permit shall, subject to any conditions that may be specified in the permit, authorise the use of the vehicle as a contract carriage:

Provided further that a stage carriage permit may, subject to any conditions that may be specified in the permit, authorise the use of the vehicle as a goods vehicle either when carrying passengers or not:

Provided further that a public carrier's permit shall, subject to any conditions that may be specified in the permit, authorise the holder to use the vehicle for the carriage of goods for or in connection with a trade or business carried on by him.

(2) In determining, for the purposes of this Chapter, whether a transport vehicle is or is not used for the carriage of goods for hire or reward,—

(a) the delivery or collection by or on behalf of the owner of goods sold, used or let on hire or hire-purchase in the course of any trade or business carried on by him other than the trade or business of providing transport.

(b) the delivery or collection by or on behalf of the owner of goods which have been or which are to be subjected to a process or treatment in the course of a trade or business carried on by him, or shall not be deemed to constitute a carrying of the goods for hire or reward; but the carriage in a transport vehicle of goods by a person not being a dealer in such goods who has acquired temporary ownership of the goods for the purpose of transporting them to another place and there relinquishing ownership shall be deemed to constitute a carrying of the goods for hire or reward.

(c) the carriage of goods in a transport vehicle by a manufacturer of or agent or dealer in such goods whilst the vehicle is being used for demonstration purposes,

(3) Sub-section (1) shall not apply—

(a) to any transport vehicle owned by or on behalf of the Central Government or a Provincial Government other than a vehicle used in connection with the business of an Indian State Railway;

(b) to any transport vehicle owned by a local authority or by a person acting under contract with a local authority and used solely for road cleansing, road watering or conservancy purposes;

(c) to any transport vehicle used solely for police, fire brigade or ambulance purposes;

(d) to any transport vehicle used solely for the conveyance of corpses;

(e) to any transport vehicle used for towing a disabled vehicle or for removing goods from a disabled vehicle to a place of safety;

(f) to any transport vehicle used for any other public purpose prescribed in this behalf;

(g) to any transport vehicle owned by, and used solely for the purposes of any educational institution which is recognised by the Provincial Government or whose managing committee is a society registered under the Societies Registration Act, 1860;

(h) subject to any prescribed conditions, to any transport vehicle owned by the Government of any Indian State or French or Portuguese Settlement bounded by India used for Government purposes unconnected with any commercial enterprise; or

(i) to any trailer used for any purpose other than the carriage of goods for hire or reward when drawn by a motor vehicle constructed for the carriage of not more than six passengers excluding the driver.

(4) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (3), sub-section (1) shall, if the Provincial Government by rule made under section 68 so prescribes, apply to any motor vehicle adapted to carry more than nine passengers excluding the driver.

Power to Provincial Government to control road transport.

43. (1) A Provincial Government, having regard to—

(a) the advantages offered to the public, trade and industry by the development of motor transport, and

(b) the desirability of co-ordinating road and rail transport, and

(c) the desirability of preventing the deterioration of the road system, and

(d) the desirability of preventing uneconomic competition among motor vehicles, and after having heard the representatives of the interests affected and having consulted the Provincial and Regional Transport Authorities concerned, may, by notification in the official Gazette,—

(i) prohibit or restrict throughout the province or in any area or on any route within the province, subject to such conditions as it may think desirable, the conveying of long distance goods traffic generally, or of prescribed classes of goods, by private or public carriers; or

(ii) fix maximum or minimum fares or freights for stage carriages and public carriers to be applicable throughout the province or within any area or on any route within the province.

(2) The Provincial Government shall permit, at such intervals of time as it may fix, the interests affected by any notification issued under sub-section (1) to make representations urging the cancellation or variation of the notification on the following grounds, namely:—

(a) that the railways are not giving reasonable facilities or are taking unfair advantage of the action of the Provincial Government under this section; or

(b) that conditions have changed since the publication of the notification; or

(c) that the special needs of a particular industry or locality require to be considered afresh.

(3) If the Provincial Government, after considering any representation made to it under sub-section (2) and having heard the representatives of the interests affected and the Provincial and Regional Transport Authorities, is satisfied that any notification issued under sub-section (1) ought to be cancelled or varied, it may cancel the notification or vary it in such manner as it thinks fit.

44. (1) The Provincial Government shall, by notification in the official Gazette, constitute for the province a Provincial Transport Authority to exercise and discharge the powers and functions specified in sub-section (3), and shall in like manner constitute Regional Transport Authorities to exercise and discharge throughout such areas (in this Chapter referred to as regions) as may be specified in the notification, in respect of each Regional Transport Authority, the powers and functions conferred by or under this Chapter on such Authorities:

Provided that in the North-West Frontier Province and in Chief Commissioners' Provinces the Provincial Government may abstain from constituting any Regional Transport Authority:

Provided further that the area specified as the region of a Regional Transport Authority shall in no case be less than an entire district, or the whole area of a Presidency-town.

(2) A Provincial Transport Authority or a Regional Transport Authority shall consist of such number of officials and non-officials as the Provincial Government may think fit to appoint; but no person who has any financial interest whether as proprietor, employee or otherwise in any transport undertaking shall be appointed as or continue as a member of a Provincial or Regional Transport Authority, and, if any person being a member of any such Authority acquires a financial interest in any transport undertaking, he shall, within four weeks of so doing, give notice in writing to the Provincial Government of the acquisition of such interest and shall vacate office.

(3) A Provincial Transport Authority shall exercise and discharge throughout the province the following powers and functions, namely:—

(a) to co-ordinate and regulate the activities and policies of the Regional Transport Authorities, if any, of the province;

(b) to perform the duties of a Regional Transport Authority where there is no such Authority and, if it thinks fit or if so required by a Regional Transport Authority, to perform those duties in respect of any route common to two or more regions;

(c) to settle all disputes and decide all matters on which differences of opinion arise between Regional Transport Authorities; and

(d) to discharge such other functions as may be prescribed.

(4) For the purpose of exercising and discharging the powers and functions specified in sub-section (3), a Provincial Transport Authority may, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, issue directions to any Regional Transport Authority and the Regional Transport Authority shall be guided by such directions.

45. Every application for a permit shall be made to the Regional Transport Authority of the region or of one of the regions in which it is proposed to use the vehicle and, if the applicant resides or has his principal place of business in any one of those regions, to the Regional Transport Authority of that region.

General provision as to applications for permits.

46. An application for a permit to use a motor vehicle as a stage carriage (in this Chapter referred to as a stage carriage permit) shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

Application for stage carriage permit.

(a) the type and seating capacity of the vehicle in respect of which the application is made;

(b) the route or routes on which or the area within which it is intended to use the vehicle;

(c) the time table, if any, of the service to be provided; and

(d) such other matters as may be prescribed.

Procedure of Regional Transport Authority in considering application for stage carriage permit.

47. (1) A Regional Transport Authority shall, in deciding whether to grant or refuse a stage carriage permit, have regard to the following matters, namely:—

(a) the interest of the public generally;

(b) the advantages to the public of the service to be provided, including the saving of time likely to be effected thereby and any convenience arising from journeys not being broken;

(c) the adequacy of existing road passenger transport services between the places to be served, the fares charged by those services and the effect upon those services of the service proposed;

(d) the benefit to any particular locality or localities likely to be afforded by the service;

(e) the operation by the applicant of other transport services and in particular of unremunerative services in conjunction with remunerative services; and

(f) the condition of the roads included in the proposed route or routes;

and shall also take into consideration any representations made by persons already providing road transport facilities along or near the proposed route or routes or by any local authority or police authority within whose jurisdiction any part of the proposed route or routes lies or by any association interested in the provision of road transport facilities.

(2) A Regional Transport Authority shall refuse to grant a stage carriage permit if it appears from any time table furnished that the provisions of this Act relating to the speed at which vehicles may be driven are likely to be contravened:

Provided that before such refusal an opportunity shall be given to the applicant to amend the time table so as to conform to the said provisions.

Power to restrict the number of stage carriages and impose conditions on stage carriage permits.

48. A Regional Transport Authority may, after consideration of the matters set forth in sub-section (1) of section 47,—

(a) limit the number of stage carriages in respect of which stage carriage permits may be granted for a specified route or for specified routes or for a specified area;

(b) limit the use of specified routes to stage carriages of a particular type or design;

(c) issue a stage carriage permit in respect of a particular stage carriage or a particular service of stage carriages;

(d) regulate timings of arrival or departure of stage carriages whether they belong to a single or more owners; or

(e) attach to a stage carriage permit any prescribed condition or any one or more of the following conditions, namely:—

(i) that the service specified in the permit shall be commenced not later than a specified date and be continued for a specified period;

(ii) that the service may be varied only in accordance with specified conditions;

(iii) that copies of the fare table and time table shall be exhibited on the stage carriage and that the fare table and time table so exhibited shall be observed;

(iv) that not more than a specified number of passengers and not more than a specified amount of luggage shall be carried on any specified vehicle at any one time;

(v) that within municipal limits and in such other areas and places as may be prescribed passengers shall not be taken up or set down at or except at specified points; or

(vi) that tickets shall be issued to passengers for the fares paid.

49. An application for a permit to use a motor vehicle as a contract carriage (in this Chapter referred to as a contract carriage permit) shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

(a) the type and seating capacity of the vehicle;

(b) the area for which the permit is required;

(c) in the case of a motor vehicle other than a motor cab, the manner in which it is claimed that the public convenience will be served by the vehicle; and

(d) any other particulars which may be prescribed.

50. A Regional Transport Authority shall, in deciding whether to grant or refuse a contract carriage permit, have regard to the extent to which additional contract carriages may be necessary or desirable in the public interest; and shall also take into consideration any representations which may then be made or which may previously have been made by persons already holding contract carriage permits in the region or by any local authority or police authority in the region to the effect that the number of contract carriages for which permits have already been granted is sufficient for or in excess of the needs of the region or any area within the region.

Procedure of Regional Transport Authority in considering application for contract carriage permit.

51. A Regional Transport Authority may, after consideration of the matters set forth in section 50,—

(a) limit the number of contract carriages generally or contract carriages of any specified type for which contract carriage permits may be granted in the region or any specified area within the region;

(b) fix in the case of motor cabs the fares which may be charged;

(c) require that every motor cab shall carry a copy of the fare table for inspection by passengers;

- (d) require that any motor cab shall be fitted with a taxi meter; or
- (e) impose on the use of a contract carriage any other condition which may be prescribed.

52. An application for a permit to use a transport vehicle for the carriage of goods for or in connection with a trade or business carried on by the applicant (in this Chapter referred to as a private carrier's permit) shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

- (a) the type and carrying capacity of the vehicle;
- (b) the nature of the goods which the applicant expects normally to carry in connection with his trade or business;
- (c) the area for which the permit is required; and
- (d) any other particular which may be prescribed.

53. (1) A Regional Transport Authority shall, in deciding whether to grant or refuse a private carrier's permit, have regard to the condition of the roads to be used by the vehicle or vehicles in respect of which the application is made, and shall satisfy itself that the vehicle or vehicles for which the permit is required will not be used except in connection with the business of the applicant.

(2) The Regional Transport Authority may in granting a private carrier's permit impose conditions to be specified in the permit relating to the description of goods which may be carried, or the area in which the permit shall be valid, or the maximum laden weight and axle weights of any vehicle used.

(3) If the applicant is the holder of a private carrier's permit which has been suspended or has been the holder of a private carrier's permit which has been revoked, the Regional Transport Authority may at its discretion notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) refuse the application,

54. An application for a permit to use a motor vehicle for the carriage of goods for hire or reward (in this Chapter referred to as a public carrier's permit) shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

- (a) the routes on which or the area in which it is intended to use the vehicle;
- (b) the type and carrying capacity of the vehicle;
- (c) the manner in which it is claimed that a public need will be served by the vehicle;
- (d) such particulars as the Regional Transport Authority may require with respect to any business as a carrier of goods for hire or reward carried on by the applicant at any time before the making of the application, and of the rates charged by the applicant;
- (e) particulars of any agreement or arrangement, affecting in any material respect the provision within the region of the Regional Transport Authority of facilities for the transport of goods for hire or reward, entered into by the applicant with any other person by whom such facilities are provided, whether within or without the region; and
- (f) any other particulars which may be prescribed.

55. A Regional Transport Authority shall, in deciding whether to grant or refuse a public carrier's permit, have regard to the following matters, namely:—

- (a) the interests of the public generally;

(b) the advantages to the public of the service to be provided and the convenience afforded to the public by the provision of such service;

(c) the adequacy of existing road transport services for the carriage of goods upon the routes or within the area to be served and the effect upon those services of the service proposed;

(d) the benefit to any particular locality or localities likely to be afforded by the service;

(e) the need for providing for occasions when vehicles are withdrawn from service for overhaul or repair; and

(f) the condition of the roads included in the proposed routes or area; and shall also take into consideration any representations made by persons already providing road transport facilities along or near to the proposed route or routes or by any local authority within whose jurisdiction any part of the proposed route or routes lies.

Power to restrict the number of and attach conditions to public carrier's permits.

56. The Regional Transport Authority may, after consideration of the matters set forth in section 55,—

(a) limit the number of transport vehicles or transport vehicles of any specified type for which public carrier's permits may be granted in the region or in any specified area or on any specified routes within the region; or

(b) attach to a public carrier's permit all or any of the following conditions, namely:—

(i) that the vehicle shall be used only on specified routes or in a specified area,

(ii) that the laden weight and the axle weights of any vehicle used shall not exceed a specified maximum,

(iii) that such records as may be prescribed relating to the plying of the vehicle shall be maintained, and

(iv) any other prescribed condition appropriate to the service to be provided by the vehicle which the Regional Transport Authority thinks proper to impose in the public interest or with a view to prevent uneconomic competition between road transport services.

Procedure in applying for and granting permits.

57. (1) An application for a contract carriage permit or a private carrier's permit may be made at any time.

(2) An application for a stage carriage permit or a public carrier's permit shall be made not less than six weeks before the date on which it is desired that the permit shall take effect, or, if the Regional Transport Authority appoints dates for the receipt of such applications, on such dates.

(3) On receipt of an application for a stage carriage permit or a public carrier's permit, the Regional Transport Authority shall make the application available for inspection at the office of the Authority and shall publish the application or the substance thereof in the prescribed manner together with a notice of the date before which representations in connection therewith may be submitted and the date, not being less than thirty days from such publication, on which, and the time and place at which, the application and any representations received will be considered.

(4) No representation in connection with an application referred to in sub-section (3) shall be considered by the Regional Transport Authority unless it is made in writing before the appointed date and unless a copy thereof is furnished simultaneously to the applicant by the person making such representation.

(5) When any representation such as is referred to in sub-section (3) is made, the Regional Transport Authority shall dispose of the application at a public hearing at which the applicant and the person making the representation shall have an opportunity of being heard either in person or by a duly authorised representative.

(6) When any representation has been made by the persons or authorities referred to in section 50 to the effect that the number of contract carriages for which permits have already been granted in any region or any area within a region is sufficient for or in excess of the needs of the region or of such area, whether such representation is made in connection with a particular application for the grant of a contract carriage permit or otherwise, the Regional Transport Authority may take any such steps as it considers appropriate for the hearing of the representation in the presence of any persons likely to be affected thereby.

(7) When a Regional Transport Authority refuses an application for a permit of any kind, it shall give to the applicant in writing its reasons for the refusal.

58. (1) A permit other than a temporary permit issued under section 62 shall be effective without renewal for such period, not less than three years and not more than five years, as the Regional Transport Authority may in its discretion specify in the permit:

Duration and renewal of permits. Provided that in the case of a permit issued or renewed within two years of the commencement of this Act, the permit shall be effective without renewal for such period of less than three years as the Provincial Government may prescribe.

(2) A permit may be renewed on an application made and disposed of as if it were an application for a permit:

Provided that, other conditions being equal, an application for renewal shall be given preference over new applications for permits.

59. (1) Save as provided in section 61, a permit shall not be transferable from one person to another except with the permission of the transport authority which granted the permit and shall not without such permission operate to confer on any person to whom a vehicle covered by the permit is transferred any right to use that vehicle in the manner authorised by the permit.

General conditions attaching to all permits. (2) The holder of a permit may, with the permission of the authority by which the permit was granted, replace by another vehicle of the same nature and capacity any vehicle covered by the permit.

(3) The following shall be conditions of every permit—

(a) that the vehicle or vehicles to which the permit relates are at all times so maintained as to comply with the requirements of chapter V and the rules made thereunder;

(b) that the vehicle or vehicles to which the permit relates are not driven at a speed exceeding the speed lawful under this Act;

(c) that any prohibition or restriction imposed and any maximum or minimum fares or freights fixed by notification made under section 43 are observed in connection with any vehicle or vehicles to which the permit relates;

(d) that the vehicle or vehicles to which the permit relates are not driven in contravention of the provisions of section 72;

(e) that the provisions of this Act limiting the hours of work of drivers are observed in connection with any vehicle or vehicles to which the permit relates; and

(f) that the provisions of chapter VIII so far as they apply to the holder of the permit are observed.

Cancellation and suspension of permits. 60. (1) The transport authority which granted a permit may cancel the permit or may suspend it for such period as it thinks fit—

(a) on the breach of any condition specified in sub-section (3) of section 59, or of any condition contained in the permit, or

(b) if the holder of the permit uses or causes or allows a vehicle to be used in any manner not authorised by the permit, or

(c) if the holder of the permit ceases to possess the vehicle or vehicles covered by the permit, or

(d) if the holder of the permit has obtained the permit by fraud or misrepresentation:

Provided that no permit shall be cancelled unless an opportunity has been given to the holder of the permit to submit his explanation.

(2) Where a transport authority cancels or suspends a permit, it shall give to the holder in writing its reasons for the revocation or suspension.

Transfer of permit on death of holder. 61. (1) Where the holder of a permit dies, the person succeeding to the possession of the vehicles covered by the permit may, for a period of three months, use the permit as if it had been granted to himself:

Provided that such person has, within thirty days of the death of the holder, informed the transport authority which granted the permit of the death of the holder and of his own intention to use the permit:

Provided further that no permit shall be so used after the date on which it would have ceased to be effective without renewal in the hands of the deceased holder.

(2) The transport authority may, on application made to it within three months of the death of the holder of a permit, transfer the permit to the person succeeding to the possession of the vehicles covered by the permit.

62. (1) A Regional Transport Authority may at its discretion, and without following the procedure laid down in section 57, grant permits, to be effective for a limited period not in any case to exceed four months, to authorise the use of a transport vehicle temporarily—

(a) for the conveyance of passengers on special occasions such as to and from fairs and religious gatherings, or

(b) for the purposes of a seasonal business, or

(c) to meet a particular temporary need, and may attach to any such permit any condition it thinks fit.

(2) A Regional Transport Authority may delegate all or any of its powers under this section to any one of its members.

63. (1) Except as may be otherwise prescribed, a permit granted by the Regional Transport Authority of any one region shall not be valid in any other region, unless the permit has been countersigned by the Regional Transport Authority of that other region, and a permit granted in any one province shall not be valid in any other province unless countersigned by the Provincial Transport Authority of that other province or by the Regional Transport Authority concerned.

(2) A Regional Transport Authority when countersigning the permit may attach to the permit any condition which it might have imposed if it had granted the permit, and may likewise vary any condition attached to the permit by the Authority by which the permit was granted.

(3) The provisions of this chapter relating to the grant, revocation and suspension of permits shall apply to the grant, revocation and suspension of countersignatures of permits.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), a Regional Transport Authority of one region may issue a temporary permit under clause (a) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 62 to be valid in another region or province with the concurrence, given generally or for the particular occasion, of the Regional Transport Authority of that other region or of the Provincial Transport Authority of that other province, as the case may be.

Appeals.

64. Any person—

(a) aggrieved by the refusal of the Provincial or a Regional Transport Authority to grant a permit, or by any condition attached to a permit granted to him, or

(b) aggrieved by the revocation or suspension of the permit or by any variation of the conditions thereof, or

(c) aggrieved by the refusal to transfer the permit to the person succeeding on the death of the holder of a permit, or

(d) aggrieved by the refusal of the Provincial or a Regional Transport Authority to countersign a permit, or by any condition attached to such countersignature, or

(e) aggrieved by the refusal of renewal of a permit, or

(f) being a local authority or police authority or an association which, or a person providing transport facilities who, having opposed the grant of a permit, is aggrieved by the grant thereof or by any condition attached thereto, or

(g) being the holder of a licence, who is aggrieved by the refusal of a Regional Transport Authority to grant an authorisation to drive a public service vehicle, may, within the prescribed time and in the prescribed manner, appeal to the prescribed authority who shall give such person and the original authority an opportunity of being heard.

65. (1) No person shall cause or allow any person who is employed by him for the purpose of driving a transport vehicle or who is subject to his control for such purpose to work—

(a) for more than five hours before he has had an interval of rest of at least half an hour; or

(b) for more than nine hours in one day; or

(c) for more than fifty-four hours in the week.

(2) The Provincial Government may by rule made under section 68 grant such exemptions from the provisions of sub-section (1) as it thinks fit, to meet cases of emergency or of delays by reason of circumstances which could not be foreseen.

(3) The Provincial Government may require persons employing any persons whose work is subject to any of the provisions of sub-section (1) to fix beforehand the hours of work of such persons so as to conform with those provisions, and may provide for the recording of the hours so fixed.

(4) No person shall work or shall cause or allow any other person to work outside the hours fixed or recorded for the work of such persons in compliance with any rule made under sub-section (3).

(5) The Provincial Government may prescribe the circumstances under which any period during which the driver of a vehicle although not engaged in work is required to remain on or near the vehicle may be deemed to be an interval for rest within the meaning of sub-section (1).

66. Any contract for the conveyance of a passenger in a stage carriage or contract carriage, in respect of which a permit has been issued under this chapter, shall, so far as it purports to negative or restrict the liability of any person in respect of any claim made against that person in respect of the death of, or bodily injury to, the passenger while being carried in, entering or alighting from the vehicle, or purports to impose any conditions with respect to the enforcement of any such liability, be void.

Power to make rules as to stage carriages and contract carriages.

67. (1) A Provincial Government may make rules to regulate, in respect of stage carriages and contract carriages,—

(a) the conduct of persons licensed to act as drivers of, and the licensing of and the conduct of conductors of, such vehicles when acting as such; and

(b) the conduct of passengers in such vehicles.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, such rules may—

(a) authorise the removal from such vehicle of any person infringing the rules by the driver or conductor of the vehicle, or, on the request of the driver or conductor, or any passenger by any police officer;

(b) require a passenger who is reasonably suspected by the driver or conductor of contravening the rules to give his name and address to a police officer or to the driver or conductor on demand;

(c) require a passenger to declare, if so requested by the driver or conductor, the journey he intends to take or has taken in the vehicle and to pay the fare for the whole of such journey and to accept any ticket provided therefor;

(d) require, on demand being made for the purpose by the driver or conductor or other person authorised by the owner of the vehicle, production during the journey and surrender at the end of the journey by the holder thereof of any ticket issued to him;

(e) require a passenger, if so requested by the driver or conductor, to leave the vehicle on the completion of the journey the fare for which he has paid;

(f) require the surrender by the holder thereof on the expiry of the period for which it is issued of a ticket issued to him;

(g) require the maintenance of complaint books in stage carriages and prescribe the conditions under which passengers can record any complaints in the same.

Power to make rules for the purposes of this Chapter.

68. (1) A Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules under this section may be made with respect to all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(a) the period of appointment and the terms of appointment of and the conduct of business by Regional and Provincial Transport Authorities and the reports to be furnished by them;

(b) the conduct and hearing of appeals that may be preferred under this Chapter;

(c) the forms to be used for the purposes of this Chapter, including the forms of permits;

- (d) the issue of copies of permits in place of permits lost or destroyed;
- (e) the documents, plates and marks to be carried by transport vehicles, the manner in which they are to be carried and the languages in which any such documents are to be expressed;
- (f) the badges and uniform to be worn by drivers and conductors of stage carriages and contract carriages;
- (g) the fees to be paid in respect of permits, duplicate permits, plates and badges;
- (h) the custody, production and cancellation on revocation or expiration of permits, and the return of permits which have become void or have been revoked;
- (i) the conditions subject to which a permit issued in one region shall be valid in another region;
- (j) the authorities to whom, the time within which and the manner in which appeals may be made;
- (k) the construction and fittings of, and the equipment to be carried by, stage and contract carriages, whether generally or in specified areas;
- (l) the determination of the number of passengers a stage or contract carriage is adapted to carry and the number which may be carried;
- (m) the conditions subject to which goods may be carried on stage and contract carriages partly or wholly in lieu of passengers;
- (n) the safe custody and disposal of property left in a stage or contract carriage;
- (o) prohibiting the painting or marking of a stage or a contract carriage in such colour or manner as to induce any person to believe that the vehicle is used for the transport of mails;
- (p) the conveyance in stage or contract carriages of corpses or persons suffering from any infectious or contagious disease or goods likely to cause discomfort or injury to passengers and the inspection and disinfection of such carriages, if used for such purposes;
- (q) the provision of taxi meters on motor cabs requiring approval or standard types of taxi meters to be used and examining, testing and sealing taxi meters;
- (r) prohibiting the picking up or setting down of passengers by stage or contract carriages at specified places or in specified areas or at places other than duly notified stands or halting places and requiring the driver of a stage carriage to stop and remain stationary for a reasonable time when so required by a passenger desiring to board or alight from the vehicle at a notified halting place;
- (s) the requirements (including the provision of proper sanitary arrangements) which shall be complied with in any duly notified stand or halting place;
- (t) requiring the owners of transport vehicles to notify any change of address or to report the failure of or damage to any vehicle used for the conveyance of passengers for hire or reward;
- (u) requiring the person in charge of a stage carriage to carry any person tendering the legal or customary fare;
- (v) the conditions under which and the types of containers or vehicles in which animals or birds may be carried and the seasons during which animals or birds may or may not be carried;
- (w) the licensing of and the conduct of agents for the sale of tickets for travel by stage carriages;
- (x) the inspection of transport vehicles and their contents and of the permits relating to them;

- (y) the carriage of persons other than the driver in goods vehicles;
- (z) the records to be maintained and the returns to be furnished by the owners of transport vehicles; and
- (za) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

CHAPTER V.

CONSTRUCTION, EQUIPMENT AND MAINTENANCE OF MOTOR VEHICLES.

General provision regarding construction and maintenance.

69. Every motor vehicle shall be so constructed and so maintained as to be at all times under the effective control of the person driving the vehicle.

70. (1) A Provincial Government may make rules regulating the construction, equipment and maintenance of motor vehicles and trailers.

Power to make rules.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules may be made under this section governing any of the following matters either generally in respect of motor vehicles or trailers or in respect of motor vehicles or trailers of a particular class or in particular circumstances, namely:—

- (a) the width, height, length and overhang of vehicles and of the loads carried;
- (b) seating arrangements in public service vehicles and the protection of passengers against the weather;
- (c) the size, nature and condition of tyres;
- (d) brakes and steering gear;
- (e) the use of safety glass;
- (f) signalling appliances, lamps and reflectors;
- (g) speed governors;
- (h) the emission of smoke, visible vapour, sparks, ashes, grit or oil;
- (i) the reduction of noise emitted by or caused by vehicles;
- (j) prohibiting or restricting the use of audible signals at certain times or in certain places;
- (k) prohibiting the carrying of appliances likely to cause annoyance or danger;
- (l) the periodical testing and inspection of vehicles by prescribed authorities;
- (m) the particulars other than registration marks to be exhibited by vehicles and the manner in which they shall be exhibited; and
- (n) the use of trailers with motor vehicles.

CHAPTER VI.

CONTROL OF TRAFFIC.

71. (1) No person shall drive a motor vehicle or cause or allow a motor vehicle to be driven in any public place at a speed exceeding the maximum speed fixed for the vehicle by or under this Act or by or under any law for the time being in force:

Limits of speed.

Provided that such maximum speed shall in no case exceed the maximum fixed for the vehicle in the Eighth Schedule.

(2) The Provincial Government or any authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, if satisfied that it is necessary to restrict the speed of motor vehicles in the interests of public safety or convenience or because of the nature of any road or bridge, by notification in the official Gazette, fix such maximum speed limits as it thinks fit for motor vehicles or any specified class of motor vehicles or for motor vehicles to which a trailer is attached, either generally or in a particular area or on a particular road or roads.

72. (1) The Provincial Government may prescribe conditions for the issue of permits for heavy transport vehicles by the Provincial or Regional Transport Authorities and may prohibit or restrict the use of such vehicles in any area or route within the province:

Limits of weight and limitations on use.

Provided that any permit issued before the commencement of this Act may be continued or renewed by the competent authority for a period not exceeding three years under the conditions upon which the permit was originally issued, unless the Provincial Government directs otherwise.

(2) Except as may be otherwise prescribed, no person shall drive or cause or allow to be driven in any public place any motor vehicle which is not fitted with pneumatic tyres.

(3) No person shall drive or cause or allow to be driven in any public place any motor vehicle or trailer—

(a) the unladen weight of which exceeds the unladen weight specified in the certificate of registration of the vehicle, or

(b) the laden weight of which exceeds the registered laden weight specified in the certificate of registration, or

(c) any axle weight of which exceeds the maximum axle weight specified for that axle in the certificate of registration.

(4) Where the driver or person in charge of a motor vehicle or trailer driven in contravention of sub-section (2) or clause (a) of sub-section (3) is not the owner, a Court may presume that the offence was committed with the knowledge of or under the orders of the owner of the motor vehicle or trailer.

73. Any person authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, if he has reason to believe that a goods vehicle or trailer is being used in contravention of section 72, require the driver to convey the vehicle to a weighing device, if any, within a distance of one mile from any point on the forward route or within a distance of five miles from the destination of the vehicle for weighment; and if on such weighment the vehicle is found to contravene in any respect the provisions of section 72 regarding weight, he may, by order in writing, direct the driver to convey the vehicle or trailer to the nearest place, to be specified in the notice, where facilities exist for the storage of goods, and not to remove the vehicle or trailer from that place until the laden weight or axle weight has been reduced or the vehicle has otherwise been treated so that it complies with section 72.

74. The Provincial Government or any authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government, if satisfied that it is necessary in the interests of public safety or convenience, or because of the nature of any road or bridge, may, by notification in the official Gazette prohibit or restrict, subject to such exceptions and conditions as may be specified in the notification, the driving of motor vehicles or of any specified class of motor vehicles or the use of trailers either generally in a specified area or on a specified road.

75. (1) The Provincial Government or any authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may cause or permit traffic signs to be placed or erected in any public place for the purpose of regulating motor vehicle traffic.

Power to erect traffic signs.

(2) Traffic signs erected under sub-section (1) for any purpose for which provision is made in the Ninth Schedule shall be of the size, colour and type and shall have the meanings set forth in the Ninth Schedule, but the Provincial Government or any authority empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government may make or authorise the addition to any sign set forth in the said Schedule, of transcriptions of the words, letters or figures thereon in such script as the Provincial Government may think fit, provided that the transcriptions shall be of similar size and colour to the words, letters or figures set forth in the Ninth Schedule.

(3) Except as provided by sub-section (1) no traffic sign shall, after the commencement of this Act, be placed or erected on or near any road; but all traffic signs erected prior to the commencement of this Act by any competent authority shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be traffic signs erected under the provisions of sub-section (1).

(4) A Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, empower any District Magistrate or Superintendent of Police to remove or cause to be removed any sign or advertisement which is so placed in his opinion as to obscure any traffic sign from view or any sign or advertisement which is in his opinion so similar in appearance to a traffic sign as to be misleading.

76. The Provincial Government or any authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, in consultation with the local authority having jurisdiction in the area concerned, determine places at which motor vehicles may stand either indefinitely or for a specified period of time, and may determine the places at which public service vehicles may stop for a longer time than is necessary for the taking up and setting down of passengers.

77. A Provincial Government or any authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette or by the erection at suitable places of the appropriate traffic sign referred to in Part A of the Ninth Schedule, designate certain roads as main roads for the purposes of the regulations contained in the Tenth Schedule.

78. Every driver of a motor vehicle shall drive the vehicle in conformity with any indication given by a traffic sign included in Part A of the Ninth Schedule and in conformity with the driving regulations set forth in the Tenth Schedule, and shall comply with all directions given him by any police officer for the time being engaged in the regulation of traffic in any public place.

79. The driver of a motor vehicle shall on the occasions specified in the Eleventh Schedule make the signals specified therein:

Provided that the signal of an intention to turn to the right or left or to stop may be given by a mechanical or an electrical device of a prescribed nature affixed to the vehicle.

80. No person shall drive or cause or allow to be driven in any public place any motor vehicle with a left hand steering control unless it is equipped with a mechanical or electrical signalling device of a prescribed nature and in working order.

81. No person in charge of a motor vehicle shall cause or allow the vehicle or any trailer to remain at rest on any road in such a position or in such a condition or in such circumstances as to cause or be likely to cause danger, obstruction or undue inconvenience to other users of the road.

82. No person driving or in charge of a motor vehicle shall carry any person or permit any person to be carried on the running board or otherwise than within the body of the vehicle.

83. No person driving a motor vehicle shall allow any person to stand or sit or anything to be placed in such a manner or position as to hamper the driver in his control of the vehicle.

84. No person driving or in charge of a motor vehicle shall cause or allow the vehicle to remain stationary in any public place, unless there is in the driver's seat a person duly licensed to drive the vehicle or unless the mechanism has been stopped and a brake or brakes applied or such other measures taken as to ensure that the vehicle cannot accidentally be put in motion in the absence of the driver.

85. No driver of a two wheeled motor cycle shall carry more than one person in addition to himself on the cycle and no such person shall be carried otherwise than sitting on a proper seat securely fixed to the cycle behind the driver's seat.

86. (1) The driver of a motor vehicle in any public place shall, on demand by any police officer in uniform, produce his licence for examination.

(2) The owner of a motor vehicle, or in his absence the driver or other person in charge of the vehicle, shall, on demand by a registering authority or any person authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government, produce the certificate of registration of the vehicle and, where the vehicle is a transport vehicle, the certificate of fitness referred to in section 38.

(3) If the licence or certificates, as the case may be, are not at the time in the possession of the person to whom demand is made, it shall be a sufficient compliance with this section if such person produces the licence or certificates within ten days at any police station in British India which he specifies to the police officer or authority making the demand:

Provided that, except to such extent and with such modifications as may be prescribed, the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply to a driver driving as a paid employee, or to the driver of a transport vehicle or to any person required to produce the certificate of registration or the certificate of fitness of a transport vehicle.

87. (1) The driver of a motor vehicle shall cause the vehicle to stop and remain stationary so long as may reasonably be necessary—

(a) when required to do so by any police officer in uniform, or
 (b) when required to do so by any person in charge of an animal if such person apprehends that the animal is, or being alarmed by the vehicle will become, unmanageable, or
 (c) when the vehicle is involved in the occurrence of an accident to a person, animal or vehicle or of damage to any property, whether the driving or management of the vehicle was or was not the cause of the accident or damage, and he shall give his name and address and the name and address of the owner of the vehicle to any person affected by any such accident or damage who demands it provided such person also furnishes his name and address.

(2) The driver of a motor vehicle shall, on demand by a person giving his own name and address and alleging that the driver has committed an offence punishable under section 116, give his name and address to that person.

(3) In this section the expression "animal" means any horse, cattle, elephant, camel, ass, mule, sheep or goat.

88. The owner of a motor vehicle the driver of which is accused of any offence under this Act shall, on the demand of any police officer authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government, give all information regarding the name and address of and the licence held by the driver which is in his possession or could by reasonable diligence be ascertained by him.

Duty of owner of motor vehicle to give information.

89. When any person is injured as the result of an accident in which a motor vehicle is involved, the driver of the vehicle or other person in charge of the vehicle shall—

(a) take all reasonable steps to secure medical attention for the injured person, and, if necessary, convey him to the nearest hospital, unless the injured person or his guardian, in case he is a minor, desires otherwise;

(b) give on demand by a police officer any information required by him, or, if no police officer is present, report the circumstances of the occurrence at the nearest police station as soon as possible, and in any case within twenty-four hours of the occurrence.

90. When any accident occurs in which a motor vehicle is involved, any person authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, on production if so required of his authority, inspect the vehicle and for that purpose may enter at any reasonable time any premises where the vehicle may be, and may remove the vehicle for examination:

Inspection of vehicle involved in accident.

Provided that the place to which the vehicle is so removed shall be intimated to the owner of the vehicle, and the vehicle shall be returned without unnecessary delay.

91. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

Power to make rules.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the nature of the mechanical or electrical signalling devices which may be used on motor vehicles;

(b) the removal and the safe custody of vehicles including their loads which have broken down or which have been left standing or have been abandoned on roads;

(c) the installation and use of weighing devices;

(d) the exemption from all or any of the provisions of this Chapter of Fire Brigade vehicles, ambulances and other special classes of vehicle, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed;

(e) the maintenance and management of parking places and stands and the fees, if any, which may be charged for their use;

(f) prohibiting the driving down hill of a motor vehicle with the gear disengaged either generally or in a specified place;

(g) prohibiting the taking hold of or mounting of a motor vehicle in motion;

(h) prohibiting the use of foot-paths or pavements by motor vehicles;

(i) generally, the prevention of danger, injury or annoyance to the public or any person, or of danger or injury to property or of obstruction to traffic; and

(j) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

CHAPTER VII.

MOTOR VEHICLES TEMPORARILY LEAVING OR VISITING BRITISH INDIA.

Power of Central Government to make rules.

92. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make rules for all or any of the following purposes, namely:—

(a) the grant and authentication of travelling passes, certificates or authorisations to persons temporarily taking motor vehicles out of British India to any place outside India or to persons temporarily proceeding out of British India to any place outside India and desiring to drive a motor vehicle during their absence from British India;

(b) prescribing the conditions subject to which motor vehicles brought temporarily into British India from outside India by persons intending to make a temporary stay in British India may be possessed and used in British India; and

(c) prescribing the conditions subject to which persons entering British India from any place outside India for a temporary stay in British India may drive motor vehicles in British India.

(2) No rule made under this section shall operate to confer on any person any immunity in any province from the payment of any tax levied in that province on motor vehicles or their users.

(3) Rules made under clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) shall, in case of motor vehicles and persons entering British India from the French and Portuguese Settlements bounded by India, be applicable only to motor traffic to which the International Convention relating to motor traffic concluded at Paris on the 24th day of April, 1926, applies.

(4) Nothing in this Act or in any rule made thereunder by a Provincial Government relating to—

(a) the registration and identification of motor vehicles, or

(b) the requirements as to construction, maintenance and equipment of motor vehicles, or

(c) the licensing and the qualifications of drivers of motor vehicles shall apply to any motor vehicle to which or to any driver of a motor vehicle to whom any rules made under clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1) apply.

CHAPTER VIII.

INSURANCE OF MOTOR VEHICLES AGAINST THIRD PARTY RISKS.

Definitions.

93. In this Chapter—

(a) "authorised insurer" means an insurer in whose case the requirements of the Insurance Act, 1938, with respect to the registration of and deposits by insurers are complied with, and

(b) "certificate of insurance" means a certificate issued by an authorised insurer in pursuance of sub-section (4) of section 95; and includes where more than one certificate has been issued in connection with a policy, or where a copy of a certificate has been issued, all those certificates or that copy, as the case may be.

94. (1) No person shall use except as a passenger or cause or allow any other person to use a motor vehicle in a public place, unless there is in force in relation to the use of the vehicle by that person or that other person, as the case may be, a policy of insurance complying with the requirements of this Chapter.

Explanation.—A person driving a motor vehicle merely as a paid employee, while there is in force in relation to the use of the vehicle no such policy as is required by this sub-section, shall not be deemed to act in contravention of the sub-section unless he knows or has reason to believe that there is no such policy in force.

(2) This section shall not apply to any vehicle owned by or on behalf of the Central Government or a Provincial Government or a local authority notified in this behalf by the Provincial Government, or a State-owned railway, at any time when the vehicle is driven by a servant of the owner in the course of his employment, or is otherwise subject to the control of the owner.

Requirements of policies and limits of liability.

95. (1) In order to comply with the requirements of this chapter, a policy of insurance must be a policy which—

(a) is issued by a person who is an authorised insurer, and

(b) insures the person or classes of person specified in the policy to the extent specified in sub-section (2) against any liability which may be incurred by him or them in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle in a public place:

Provided that a policy shall not, except as may be otherwise provided under sub-section (3), be required—

(i) to cover liability in respect of the death, arising out of and in the course of his employment, of the employee of a person insured by the policy or in respect of bodily injury sustained by such an employee arising out of and in the course of his employment, or

(ii) except where the vehicle is a vehicle in which passengers are carried for hire or reward or by reason of or in pursuance of a contract of employment, to cover liability in respect of the death of or bodily injury to persons being carried in or upon or entering or mounting or alighting from the vehicle at the time of the occurrence of the event out of which a claim arises, or

(iii) to cover any contractual liability.

(2) Subject to the proviso to sub-section (1), a policy of insurance shall cover any liability incurred in respect of any one accident up to the following limits, namely:—

(a) where the vehicle is a vehicle used or adapted to be used for the carriage of goods, a limit of twenty thousand rupees;

(b) where the vehicle is a vehicle in which passengers are carried for hire or reward or by reason of or in pursuance of a contract of employment, in respect of persons other than passengers carried for hire or reward, a limit of twenty thousand rupees; and in respect of passengers a limit of twenty thousand rupees in all, and four thousand rupees in respect of an individual passenger, if the vehicle is registered to carry not more than six passengers excluding the driver or two thousand rupees in respect of an individual passenger, if the vehicle is registered to carry more than six passengers excluding the driver;

(c) where the vehicle is a vehicle of any other class, the amount of the liability incurred.

(3) A Provincial Government may prescribe that a policy of insurance shall in order to comply with the requirements of this chapter cover any liability arising under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, in respect of the death of or bodily injury to any paid employee engaged in driving or otherwise in attendance on or being carried in a motor vehicle.

(4) A policy shall be of no effect for the purposes of this chapter unless and until there is issued by the insurer in favour of the person by whom the policy is effected a certificate of insurance or a cover note in the prescribed form and containing the prescribed particulars of any conditions subject to which the policy is issued and of any other prescribed matters; and different forms, particulars and matters may be prescribed in different cases.

(5) Notwithstanding anything elsewhere contained in any law, a person issuing a policy of insurance under this section shall be liable to indemnify the person or classes of person specified in the policy in respect of any liability which the policy purports to cover in the case of that person or those classes of person.

96. (1) If, after a certificate of insurance or a cover note has been issued under sub-section (4) of section 95 in favour of the person by whom a policy has been effected, judgment in respect of any such liability as is required to be covered by a policy under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 95 (being a liability covered by the terms of the policy) is obtained against any person insured by the policy, then, notwithstanding that the insurer may be entitled to avoid or cancel or may have avoided or cancelled the policy, the insurer shall, subject to the provisions of this section, pay to the person entitled to the benefit of the decree any sum not exceeding the sum assured payable thereunder, as if he were the judgment-debtor, in respect of the liability, together with any amount payable in respect of costs and any sum payable in respect of interest on that sum by virtue of any enactment relating to interest on judgments.

(2) No sum shall be payable by an insurer under sub-section (1) in respect of any judgment unless before or after the commencement of the proceedings in which the judgment is given the insurer had notice through the Court of the bringing of the proceedings, or in respect of any judgment so long as execution is stayed thereon pending an appeal; and an insurer to whom notice of the bringing of any such proceedings is so given shall be entitled to be made a party thereto and to defend the action on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) that the policy was cancelled by mutual consent or by virtue of any provision contained therein before the accident giving rise to the liability, and that either the certificate of insurance was surrendered to the insurer or that the person to whom the certificate was issued has made an affidavit stating that the certificate has been lost or destroyed, or that either before or not later than fourteen days after the happening of the accident the insurer has commenced proceedings for cancellation of the certificate after compliance with the provisions of section 105; or

(b) that there has been a breach of a specified condition of the policy, being one of the following conditions, namely:—

(i) a condition excluding the use of the vehicle—

(a) for hire or reward, where the vehicle is on the date of the contract of insurance a vehicle not covered by a permit to ply for hire or reward, or

(b) for organised racing and speed testing, or

(c) for a purpose not allowed by the permit under which the vehicle is used, where the vehicle is a public service vehicle or a goods vehicle, or

(d) without side-car being attached, where the vehicle is a motor cycle; or

(*) a condition excluding driving by a named person or persons or by any person who is not duly licensed, or by any person who has been disqualified for holding or obtaining a driving licence during the period of disqualification; or

(iii) a condition excluding liability for injury caused or contributed to by conditions of war, civil war, riot or civil commotion; or

(c) that the policy is void on the ground that it was obtained by the non-disclosure of a material fact or by a representation of fact which was false in some material particular.

(3) Where a certificate of insurance or cover note has been issued under sub-section (4) of section 95 to the person by whom a policy has been effected, so much of the policy as purports to restrict the insurance of the persons insured thereby by reference to any conditions other than those in clause (b) of sub-section (2) shall, as respects such liabilities as are required to be covered by a policy under clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 95, be of no effect:

Provided that any sum paid by the insurer in or towards the discharge of any liability of any person which is covered by the policy by virtue only of this sub-section shall be recoverable by the insurer from that person.

(4) If the amount which an insurer becomes liable under this section to pay in respect of a liability incurred by a person insured by a policy exceeds the amount for which the insurer would apart from the provisions of this section be liable under the policy in respect of that liability, the insurer shall be entitled to recover the excess from that person.

(5) In this section the expressions "material fact" and "material particular" mean, respectively, a fact or particular of such a nature as to influence the judgment of a prudent insurer in determining whether he will take the risk and, if so, at what premium and on what conditions, and the expression "liability covered by the terms of the policy" means a liability which is covered by the policy or which would be so covered but for the fact that the insurer is entitled to avoid, or cancel or has avoided or cancelled the policy.

(6) No insurer to whom the notice referred to in sub-section (2) has been given shall be entitled to avoid his liability to any person entitled to the benefit of any such judgment as is referred to in sub-section (1) otherwise than in the manner provided for in sub-section (2).

Rights of third parties against insurers on insolvency of the insured.

97. (1) Where under any contract of insurance effected in accordance with the provisions of this chapter a person is insured against liabilities which he may incur to third parties then—

(a) in the event of the person becoming insolvent or making a composition or arrangement with his creditors, or

(b) where the insured person is a company, in the event of a winding up order being made or a resolution for a voluntary winding up being passed with respect to the company or of a receiver or manager of the company's business or undertaking being duly appointed, or of possession being taken by or on behalf of the holders of any debentures secured by a floating charge of any property comprised in or subject to the charge, if, either before or after that event, any such liability is incurred by the insured person, his rights against the insurer under the contract in respect of the liability shall, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any provision of law, be transferred to and vest in the third party to whom the liability was so incurred.

(2) Where an order for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor is made according to the law of insolvency, then, if any debt provable in insolvency is owing by the deceased in respect of a liability to a third party against which he was insured under a contract of insurance in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, the deceased debtor's rights against the insurer in respect of that liability shall, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any provision of law, be transferred to and vest in the person to whom the debt is owing.

(3) Any condition in a policy issued for the purposes of this chapter purporting either directly or indirectly to avoid the policy or to alter the rights of the parties thereunder upon the happening to the insured person of any of the events specified in clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section (1) or upon the making of an order for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor according to the law of insolvency shall be of no effect.

(4) Upon a transfer under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) the insurer shall be under the same liability to the third party as he would have been to the insured person, but—

(a) if the liability of the insurer to the insured person exceeds the liability of the insured person to the third party, nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights of the insured person against the insurer in respect of the excess, and

(b) if the liability of the insurer to the insured person is less than the liability of the insured person to the third party, nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights of the third party against the insured person in respect of the balance.

98. (1) No person against whom a claim is made in respect of any liability referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 95 shall on demand by or on behalf of the person making the claim refuse to state whether or not he was insured in respect of that liability by any policy issued under the provisions of this chapter, or would have been so insured if the insurer had not avoided or cancelled the policy, nor shall he refuse, if he was or would have been so insured, to give such particulars with respect to that policy as were specified in the certificate of insurance issued in respect thereof.

(2) In the event of any person becoming insolvent or making a composition or arrangement with his creditors or in the event of an order being made for the administration of the estate of a deceased person according to the law of insolvency, or in the event of a winding up order being made or a resolution for a voluntary winding up being passed with respect to any company or of a receiver or manager of the company's business or undertaking being duly appointed or of possession being taken by or on behalf of the holders of any debentures secured by a floating charge on any property comprised in or subject to the charge, it shall be the duty of the insolvent debtor, personal representative of the deceased debtor or company, as the case may be, or the official assignee or receiver in insolvency, trustee, liquidator, receiver or manager, or person in possession of the property to give at the request of any person claiming that the insolvent debtor, deceased debtor or company is under such liability to him as is covered by the provisions of this chapter, such information as may reasonably be required by him for the purpose of ascertaining whether any rights have been transferred to and vested in him by section 97, and for the purpose of enforcing such rights, if any; and any such contract of insurance as purports whether directly or indirectly to avoid the contract or to alter the rights of the parties thereunder upon the giving of such information in the events aforesaid, or otherwise to prohibit or prevent the giving thereof in the said events, shall be of no effect.

(3) If, from the information given to any person in pursuance of sub-section (2) or otherwise, he has reasonable ground for supposing that there have or may have been transferred to him under this chapter rights against any particular insurer, that insurer shall be subject to the same duty as is imposed by the said sub-section on the persons therein mentioned.

(4) The duty to give the information imposed by this section shall include a duty to allow all contracts of insurance, receipts for premiums, and other relevant documents in the possession or power of the person on whom the duty is so imposed to be inspected and copies thereof to be taken.

99. (1) No settlement made by an insurer in respect of any claim which might be made by a third party in respect of any liability of the nature referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 95 shall be valid unless such third party is a party to the settlement.

(2) Where a person who is insured under a policy issued for the purposes of this chapter has become insolvent, or where, if such insured person is a company, a winding up order has been made or a resolution for a voluntary winding up has been passed with respect to the company, no agreement made between the insurer and the insured person after liability has been incurred to a third party and after the commencement of the insolvency or winding up, as the case may be, nor any waiver, assignment or other disposition made by or payment made to the insured person after the commencement aforesaid shall be effective to defeat the rights transferred to the third party under this chapter, but those rights shall be the same as if no such agreement, waiver, assignment or disposition or payment has been made.

100. (1) For the purposes of sections 97, 98 and 99, a reference to "liabilities to third parties" in relation to a person insured under any policy of insurance shall not include a reference to any liability of that person in the capacity of insurer under some other policy of insurance.

(2) The provisions of sections 97, 98 and 99 shall not apply where a company is wound up voluntarily merely for the purposes of reconstruction or of an amalgamation with another company.

101. Where a certificate of insurance has been issued to the person by whom a policy has been effected, the happening in relation to any person insured by the policy of any such event as is mentioned in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) of section 97 shall, notwithstanding anything in this chapter, not affect any liability of that person of the nature referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 95; but nothing in this section shall affect any rights against the insurer conferred under the provisions of sections 97, 98 and 99 on the person to whom the liability was incurred.

102. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 306 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the death of a person in whose favour a certificate of insurance or cover note had been issued, if it occurs after the happening of an event which has given rise to a claim under the provisions of this chapter, shall not be a bar to the survival of any cause of action arising out of the said event against his estate or against the insurer.

103. When an insurer has issued a certificate of insurance in respect of a contract of insurance between the insurer and the insured person, then—

(a) if and so long as the policy described in the certificate has not been issued by the insurer to the insured, the insurer shall, as between himself and any other person except the insured, be deemed to have issued to the insured person a policy of insurance conforming in all respects with the description and particulars stated in such certificate; and

(b) if the insurer has issued to the insured the policy described in the certificate, but the actual terms of the policy are less favourable to persons claiming under or by virtue of the policy against the insurer either directly or through the insured than the particulars of the policy as stated in the certificate, the policy shall, as between the insurer and any other person except the insured, be deemed to be in terms conforming in all respects with the particulars stated in the said certificate.

104. (1) Whenever the period of cover under a policy of insurance issued under the provisions of this Chapter is terminated or suspended by any means before its expiration by effluxion of time, the insured person shall within seven days after such termination or suspension deliver to the insurer by whom the policy was issued the latest certificate of insurance given by the insurer in respect of the said policy, or, if the said certificate has been lost or destroyed, make an affidavit to that effect.

(2) Whoever fails to surrender a certificate of insurance or to make an affidavit, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be punishable with fine which may extend to fifteen rupees for every day that the offence continues subject to a maximum of five hundred rupees.

105. Whenever a policy of insurance issued under the provisions of this Chapter is cancelled or suspended by the insurer who has issued the policy, the insurer shall within seven days notify such cancellation or suspension to the registering authority in whose records the registration of the vehicle covered by the policy of insurance is recorded or to such other authority as the Provincial Government may prescribe.

106. (1) Any person driving a motor vehicle in any public place shall on being so required by a police officer in uniform produce the certificate of insurance relating to the use of the vehicle:

Provided that if the driver of a motor vehicle within seven days from the date on which the production of the certificate of insurance was so required produces the certificate at such police station as may have been specified by him at the time its production was required he shall not be liable to conviction under this sub-section by reason only of failure to produce the certificate to the police officer.

(2) If, where owing to the presence of a motor vehicle in a public place an accident occurs involving bodily injury to another person, the driver of the vehicle does not at the time produce the certificate of insurance to a police officer, he shall produce the certificate of insurance at the police station at which he makes the report required by section 89:

Provided that no person shall be liable to conviction under this sub-section by reason only of failure to produce his certificate of insurance if within seven days from the occurrence of the accident he produces the certificate at such police station as may be specified by him to the police officer at the site of the accident or to the officer in charge of the police station at which he reported the accident.

(3) The owner of a motor vehicle shall give such information as he may be required by or on behalf of a police officer empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government to give for the purpose of determining whether the vehicle was or was not being driven in contravention of section 94 and on any occasion when the driver was required under this section to produce his certificate of insurance.

(4) In this section the expression "produce his certificate of insurance" means produce for examination the relevant certificate of insurance or such other evidence as may be prescribed that the vehicle was not being driven in contravention of section 94.

107. A Provincial Government may make rules requiring the owner of any motor vehicle when applying whether by payment of a tax or otherwise for authority to use the vehicle in a public place to produce such evidence as may be prescribed by those rules to the effect that either—

(a) on the date when the authority to use the vehicle comes into operation there will be in force the necessary policy of insurance in relation to the use of the vehicle by the applicant or by other persons on his order or with his permission, or

(b) the vehicle is a vehicle to which section 94 does not apply.

108. (1) A Provincial Government may, on the application of a co-operative society of public service vehicle owners registered or deemed to have been registered under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, or under an Act of a Provincial Legislature governing the registration of Co-operative Societies and subject to the control of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies of the province, allow the society to transact the business of an insurer for the purposes of this Chapter as if the society were an authorised insurer, subject to the following conditions, namely:—

(a) the society shall establish and maintain a fund of not less than twenty-five thousand rupees for the first fifty vehicles or fractional part thereof and pro rata for every additional vehicle in the possession of members of the society, and the said fund shall be lodged in such custody as the Provincial Government may prescribe and shall not be available for meeting claims or other expenses except in the event of the winding up of the society;

(b) the liability of the society shall be limited as specified in clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 95;

(c) the society shall, if required by the Provincial Government, re-insure against claims above a prescribed amount;

(d) the provisions of this Chapter, in so far as they relate to the protection of third parties and to the issue and production of certificates, shall apply in respect of any insurance effected by the society;

(e) an independent authority not associated with the society shall be appointed by the Provincial Government to facilitate and assist in the settling of claims against the society;

(f) the society shall operate on an insurance basis, that is to say,—

(i) it shall levy its premiums in respect of a period not exceeding twelve months, during which period the insured shall be held covered in respect of all accidents arising, subject to the limits of liability specified in clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 95;

(ii) it shall charge premiums estimated to be sufficient, having regard to the risks, to meet the capitalised value of all claims arising during the period of cover, together with an adequate charge for expenses attaching to the issue of policies and to the settlement of claims arising thereunder;

(g) the society shall furnish to the Superintendent of Insurance the returns required to be furnished by insurers under the provisions of the Insurance Act, 1938, and the Superintendent of Insurance may exercise in respect thereof any of the powers exercisable by him in respect of returns made to him under the said Act; and

(h) any provisions of law applicable to the winding up of authorised insurers shall be equally applicable to the society.

(2) Except as provided in sub-section (1), the Insurance Act, 1938, shall not apply to any co-operative society of public service vehicle owners allowed to transact the business of an insurer under this section.

109. A registering authority or the officer in charge of a police station shall, if so required by a person who alleges that he is entitled to claim compensation in respect of an accident arising out of the use of a motor vehicle, or if so required by an insurer against whom a claim has been made in respect of any motor vehicle, furnish to that person or to that insurer, as the case may be, on payment of the prescribed fee any information at the disposal of the said authority or the said police officer relating to the identification marks and other particulars of the vehicle and the name and address of the person who was using the vehicle at the time of the accident or was injured by it.

110. A Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint a person or a body of persons to investigate and report on accidents involving the death of or bodily injury to any person arising out of the use of motor vehicles and the extent to which their claims to compensation have been satisfied and to advise and assist such persons or their representatives in presenting their claims for compensation:

Provided that nothing in this section shall confer on any such person or body of persons the right to adjudicate in any way on the liability of the insurer or on the amount of damages to be awarded except at the express desire of the insurer concerned.

111. (1) The Central Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Chapter.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

- (a) the forms to be used for the purposes of this Chapter;
- (b) the making of applications for and the issue of certificates of insurance;
- (c) the issue of duplicates to replace certificates of insurance lost or destroyed;
- (d) the custody, production, cancellation and surrender of certificates of insurance;
- (e) the records to be maintained by insurers of policies of insurance issued under this Chapter;
- (f) the identification by certificates or otherwise of persons or vehicles exempted from the provisions of this Chapter;
- (g) the furnishing of information respecting policies of insurance by insurers;
- (h) the carrying into effect of the provisions of section 108;
- (i) adapting the provisions of this Chapter to vehicles brought into British India by persons making only a temporary stay therein by applying those provisions with prescribed modifications; and
- (j) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

CHAPTER IX.

OFFENCES, PENALTIES AND PROCEDURE.

112. Whoever contravenes any provision of this Act or of any rule made thereunder shall, if no other penalty is provided for the offence, be punishable with fine which may extend to twenty rupees, or, if having been previously convicted of any offence under this Act he is again convicted of an offence under this Act, with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

113. Whoever wilfully disobeys any direction lawfully given by any person or authority empowered under this Act to give such direction, or obstructs any person or authority in the discharge of any functions which such person or authority is required or empowered under this Act to discharge, or, being required by or under this Act to supply any information, withholds such information or gives information which he knows to be false or which he does not believe to be true, shall, if no other penalty is provided for the offence, be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

Disobedience of orders, obstruction and refusal of information.

114. Whoever, being disqualified under this Act for holding or obtaining a licence, drives a motor vehicle in a public place or applies for or obtains a licence or, not being entitled to have a licence issued to him free of endorsement, applies for or obtains a licence without disclosing the endorsements made on a licence previously held by him or, being disqualified under this Act for holding or obtaining a licence, uses in British India a licence such as is referred to in sub-section (2) of section 9, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred and fifty rupees, or with both, and any licence so obtained by him shall be of no effect.

Offences relating to licences.

115. (1) Whoever drives a motor vehicle in contravention of section 71 shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

Driving at excessive speed.

(2) Whoever causes any person who is employed by him or is subject to his control in driving to drive a motor vehicle in contravention of section 71 shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence punishable under sub-section (1) solely on the evidence of one witness to the effect that in the opinion of the witness such person was driving at a speed which was unlawful, unless that opinion is shown to be based on an estimate obtained by the use of some mechanical timing device.

(4) The publication of a time table under which, or the giving of any direction that, any journey or part of a journey is to be completed within a specified time shall, if in the opinion of the Court it is not practicable in the circumstances of the case for that journey or part of a journey to be completed in the specified time without infringing the provisions of section 71, be prima facie evidence that the person who published the time table or gave the direction has committed an offence punishable under sub-section (2).

116. Whoever drives a motor vehicle at a speed or in a manner which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case including the nature, condition and use of the place where the vehicle is driven and the amount of traffic which actually is at the time or which might reasonably be expected to be in the place, shall be punishable on a first conviction for the offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and for a subsequent offence if committed within three years of the commission of a previous similar offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

Driving recklessly or dangerously.

117. Whoever while driving or attempting to drive a motor vehicle is under the influence of drink or a drug to such an extent as to be incapable of exercising proper control over the vehicle, shall be punishable for a first offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both, and for a subsequent offence if committed within three years of the commission of a previous similar offence with imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both.

118. Whoever drives a motor vehicle in any public place when he is to his knowledge suffering from any disease or disability calculated to cause his driving of the vehicle to be a source of danger to the public, shall be punishable for a first offence with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees and for a second or subsequent offence with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

Punishment for abetment of certain offences.

119. Whoever abets the commission of an offence under section 116, 117 or 118, shall be punishable with the punishment provided for the offence.

120. Whoever without the written consent of the Provincial Government permits or takes part in a race or trial of speed between motor vehicles in any public place shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to three hundred rupees, or with both.

121. Any person who drives or causes or allows to be driven in any public place a motor vehicle or trailer while the vehicle or trailer has any defect, which such person knows of or could have discovered by the exercise of ordinary care and which is calculated to render the driving of the vehicle a source of danger to persons and vehicles using such place, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred and fifty rupees or, if as a result of such defect an accident is caused causing bodily injury or damage to property, with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

122. Whoever, being an importer of or dealer in motor vehicles, sells or delivers or offers to sell or deliver a motor vehicle or trailer in such condition that the use thereof in a public place would be in contravention of Chapter V or any rule made thereunder or alters the motor vehicle or trailer so as to render its condition such that its use in a public place would be in contravention of Chapter V or any rule made thereunder shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees:

Provided that no person shall be convicted under this section if he proves that he had reasonable cause to believe that the vehicle would not be used in a public place until it had been put into a condition in which it might lawfully be so used.

123. (1) Whoever drives a motor vehicle or causes or allows a motor vehicle to be used or lets out a motor vehicle for use in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 42 shall be punishable for a first offence with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and for a subsequent offence if committed within three years of the commission of a previous similar offence with a fine which shall not be less than one hundred rupees and may extend to one thousand rupees.

(2) Nothing in this section shall apply to the use of a motor vehicle in an emergency for the conveyance of persons suffering from sickness or injury or for the transport of materials for repair or of food or materials to relieve distress or of medical supplies for a like purpose:

Provided that the person using the vehicle reports such use to the Regional Transport Authority within seven days.

124. Whoever drives a motor vehicle or causes or allows a motor vehicle to be driven in contravention of the provisions of section 72 or of the conditions of any permit issued thereunder, or in contravention of any prohibition or restriction imposed under section 74 shall be punishable for a first offence with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, and for a second or subsequent offence with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

125. Whoever drives a motor vehicle or causes or allows a motor vehicle to be driven in contravention of the provisions of section 94 shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

126. Whoever takes and drives away any motor vehicle without having either the consent of the owner thereof or other lawful authority shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both:

Provided that no accused person shall be convicted under this section if the Court is satisfied that the accused acted in the reasonable belief that he had lawful authority or in the reasonable belief that the owner would in the circumstances of the case have given his consent if he had been asked therefor.

127. Whoever otherwise than with lawful authority or reasonable excuse enters or mounts any stationary motor vehicle or tampers with the brake or any part of the mechanism of a motor vehicle shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees.

128. (1) A police officer in uniform may arrest without warrant any person who commits in his view an offence punishable under section 116 or section 117 or section 126:

Provided that any person so arrested in connection with an offence punishable under section 117 shall be subjected to a medical examination by a registered medical practitioner within two hours of his arrest or shall then be released from custody.

(2) A police officer in uniform may arrest without warrant—

(a) any person who being required under the provisions of this Act to give his name and address refuses to do so, or gives a name or address which the police officer has reason to believe to be false, or

(b) any person concerned in an offence under this Act or reasonably suspected to have been so concerned, if the police officer has reason to believe that he will abscond or otherwise avoid the service of a summons.

(3) A police officer arresting without warrant the driver of a motor vehicle shall, if the circumstances so require, take or cause to be taken any steps he may consider proper for the temporary disposal of the vehicle.

129. (1) Any police officer authorised in this behalf or other person authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, if he has reason to believe that any identification mark carried on a motor vehicle or any license, permit, certificate of registration, certificate of insurance or other document produced to him by the driver or person in charge of a motor vehicle is a false document within the meaning of section 464 of the Indian Penal Code, seize the mark or document and call upon the driver or owner of the vehicle to account for his possession of or the presence in the vehicle of such mark or document.

(2) Any police officer authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government may, if he has reason to believe that the driver of a motor vehicle who is charged with any offence under this Act may abscond or otherwise avoid the service of a summons, seize any license held by such driver and forward it to the Court taking cognizance of the offence.

(3) A police officer seizing a license under sub-section (2) shall give to the person surrendering the license a temporary acknowledgment therefor and such acknowledgment shall authorise the holder to drive until the licence has been returned to him or the Court has otherwise ordered.

130. (1) A Court taking cognizance of an offence under this Act may, unless the offence is an offence specified in Part A of the Fifth Schedule, state upon the summons to be served on the accused person that he—

- (a) may appear by pleader and not in person, or
- (b) may by a specified date prior to the hearing of the charge plead guilty to the charge by registered letter and remit to the Court such sum not exceeding twenty-five rupees as the Court may specify.

(2) Where the offence dealt with in accordance with sub-section (1) is an offence specified in Part B of the Fifth Schedule, the accused person shall, if he pleads guilty to the charge, forward his licence to the Court with the letter containing his plea in order that the conviction may be endorsed on the licence.

(3) Where an accused person pleads guilty and remits the sum specified and has complied with the provisions of sub-section (2), no further proceedings in respect of the offence shall be taken against him, nor shall he be liable to be disqualified for holding or obtaining a licence by reason of his having pleaded guilty.

131. No person prosecuted for an offence punishable under section 115 or section 116 shall be convicted unless—

- (a) he was warned at the time the offence was committed that the question of prosecuting him would be taken into consideration, or
- (b) within fourteen days from the commission of the offence, a notice specifying the nature of the offence and the time and place where it is alleged to have been committed was served on or sent by registered post to him or the person registered as the owner of the vehicle at the time of the commission of the offence, or
- (c) within twenty-eight days of the commission of the offence, a summons for the offence was served on him:

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply where the Court is satisfied that—

- (a) the failure to serve the notice or summons referred to in this sub-section was due to the fact that neither the name and address of the accused nor the name and address of the registered owner of the vehicle could with reasonable diligence have been ascertained in time, or

(b) such failure was brought about by the conduct of the accused.

132. No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the second class shall try any offence punishable under this Act or any rule made thereunder.

CHAPTER X.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Publication of and commencement of rules.

133. (1) Every power to make rules given by this Act is subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication.

(2) All rules made under this Act shall be published in the official Gazette, and shall, unless some later date is appointed, come into force on the date of such publication.

(3) All rules made under this Act by the Central Government or by any Provincial Government shall be laid for not less than fourteen days before the Central or Provincial Legislature, as the case may be, as soon as possible after they are made, and shall be subject to such modifications as the Legislature may make during the session in which they are so laid.

Repeal.

134. (1) The Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, is hereby repealed.

(2) Notwithstanding the repeal of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, rules made by any Provincial Government under sub-section (2) of section 11 of that Act and rules made by the Governor-General in Council under section 14 of that Act, being rules in force at the commencement of this Act, shall subject to the provisions of sub-section (3) continue to be in force for a period of nine months from the commencement of this Act, unless before the expiry of that period they are cancelled by a Provincial Government or by the Central Government, as the case may be, by notification in the official Gazette.

(3) Notwithstanding the repeal of the Indian Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, rules made or purporting to be made by a Provincial Government under sub-section (2) of section 11 of that Act, requiring or relating to the insurance of motor vehicles, being rules in force at the commencement of this Act, shall, until Chapter VIII of this Act takes effect in the province, have effect as if enacted in this Act.

(4) Nothing contained in this Act shall, until the expiry of a period of nine months from the commencement of this Act, operate to invalidate any provisions relating to the taxation of motor vehicles contained in any Provincial enactment or rules made thereunder in force at the commencement of this Act.

THE SECOND SCHEDULE.

[See section 7 (5).]

I. Diseases and Disabilities absolutely disqualifying a person for obtaining a Licence to drive a motor vehicle.

1. Epilepsy.
2. Lunacy.
3. Heart disease likely to produce sudden attacks of giddiness or fainting.
4. Inability to distinguish with each eye at a distance of twenty-five yards in good daylight (with the aid of glasses, if worn) a series of seven letters and figures in white on a black ground of the same size and arrangement as those of the registration mark of a motor car.
5. A degree of deafness which prevents the applicant from hearing the ordinary sound signals.
6. Colour-blindness.
7. Night-blindness.

II. Diseases and Disabilities absolutely disqualifying a person for obtaining a Licence to drive a public service vehicle.

1. Leprosy.

THE THIRD SCHEDULE.

[See section 7 (6) (a) and 17 (6).]

TEST OF COMPETENCE TO DRIVE.

Part I.

The candidate shall satisfy the person conducting the test that he is able to—

1. Start the engine of the vehicle.
2. Move away straight ahead or at an angle.
3. Overtake, meet, or cover the path of other vehicles and take an appropriate course.
4. Turn right and left corners correctly.
5. Stop the vehicle in an emergency and normally, and in the latter case bring it to rest at an appropriate part of the road.
6. Drive the vehicle backwards and whilst so doing enter a limited opening either to the right or left.
7. Cause the vehicle to face in the opposite direction by means of forward and reverse gears.
8. Give by hand and by mechanical means (if fitted to the vehicle), or, in the case of a disabled driver for whom it is impracticable or undesirable to give signals by hand, by mechanical means, in a clear and unmistakable manner, appropriate signals at appropriate times to indicate his intended actions.
9. Act correctly and promptly on all signals given by traffic signs and traffic controllers, and take appropriate action on signs given by other road users.

NOTE.—(i) Requirements 6 and 7 are not applicable in the case of a motor-cycle or tricycle not equipped with means for reversing.

(ii) Requirements 6, 7 and 8 are not applicable in the case of invalid carriages.

Part II.

The candidate shall satisfy the person conducting the test that he is cognizant of the provisions of sections 81, 82, 83, 84 and 85 and of the Tenth Schedule; that he knows the meaning of the traffic signs specified in the Ninth Schedule; and, if he has not been medically examined, that he is not so deaf as to be unable to hear the ordinary sound signals, and is able to distinguish with each eye at a distance of twenty-five yards in good daylight (with the aid of glasses, if worn) a registration mark containing seven letters and figures.

Explanation.—The figures "5.00-17", etc., in Table A represent, respectively, the nominal sectional diameter of the tyre and the diameter of the wheel rim; and the figures "30×5", etc., in Table B represent, respectively, the over-all diameter of wheel and tyre and the nominal sectional diameter of the tyre, all figures being in inches. The actual sectional diameter of the tyre when mounted on its appropriate rim and inflated shall in no case be less than the nominal sectional diameter.

Note.—Tyres may be calibrated in so-called metric sizes, for example, "170×20". In that case the first number represents the sectional diameter of the tyres in millimetres and the second number represents the diameter of the rim in inches. The permissible weight in pounds for each such tyre shall be determined by dividing the nominal sectional diameter of the tyre in millimetres by the figure 25.4, the quotient being the nominal sectional diameter in inches. The permissible weight given in Table A for the nearest equivalent nominal sectional diameter in inches and the actual rim-diameter shall be the permissible weight for that tyre.

DRIVING REGULATIONS.

1. The driver of a motor vehicle shall drive the vehicle as close to the left hand side of the road as may be expedient, and shall allow all traffic which is proceeding in the opposite direction to pass him on his right hand side.

2. Except as provided in regulation 3, the driver of a motor vehicle shall pass to the right of all traffic proceeding in the same direction as himself.

3. The driver of a motor vehicle may pass to the left of a vehicle the driver of which having indicated an intention to turn to the right has drawn to the centre of the road and may pass a tram-car or other vehicle running on fixed rails, whether travelling in the same direction as himself or otherwise, on either side:

Provided that in no case shall he pass a tram-car at a time or in a manner likely to cause danger or inconvenience to other users of the road or pass on the left hand side a tram-car, which when in motion would be travelling in the same direction as himself, while the tram-car is at rest for the purpose of setting down or taking up passengers.

4. The driver of a motor vehicle shall not pass a vehicle travelling in the same direction as himself—

(a) if his passing is likely to cause inconvenience or danger to other traffic proceeding in any direction, or

(b) where a point or corner or a hill or an obstruction of any kind renders the road ahead not clearly visible

5. The driver of a motor vehicle shall not, when being overtaken or being passed by another vehicle, increase speed or do anything in any way to prevent the other vehicle from passing him.

6. The driver of a motor vehicle shall slow down when approaching a road intersection, a road junction or a road corner, and shall not enter any such intersection or junction until he has become aware that he may do so without endangering the safety of persons thereon.

7. The driver of a motor vehicle shall on entering a road intersection, if the road entered is a main road designated as such, give way to the vehicles proceeding along that road, and in any other case give way to all traffic approaching the intersection on his right hand.

8. The driver of a motor vehicle shall, when passing or meeting a procession or a body of troops or police on the march or when passing workmen engaged on road repair, drive at a speed not greater than fifteen miles an hour.

9. The driver of a motor vehicle shall—

(a) when turning to the left, drive as close as may be to the left hand side of the road from which he is making the turn and of the road which he is entering;

(b) when turning to the right, draw as near as may be to the centre of the road along which he is travelling and cause the vehicle to move in such a manner that—

(i) as far as may be practicable it passes beyond, and so as to leave on the driver's right hand, a point formed by the intersection of the centre lines of the intersecting roads; and

(ii) it arrives as near as may be at the left hand side of the road which the driver is entering.

THE ELEVENTH SCHEDULE.

SIGNALS.

1. When about to turn to the right or to drive to the right hand side of the road in order to pass another vehicle or for any other purpose, a driver shall extend his right arm in a horizontal position outside of and to the right of his vehicle with the palm of the hand turned to the front.

2. When about to turn to the left or to drive to the left hand side of the road, a driver shall extend his right arm and rotate it in an anti-clockwise direction.

3. When about to slow down, a driver shall extend his right arm with the palm downward and to the right of the vehicle and shall move the arm so extended up and down several times in such a manner that the signal can be seen by the driver of any vehicle which may be behind him.

4. When about to stop, a driver, shall raise his right forearm vertically outside of and to the right of the vehicle, palm to the front.

5. When a driver wishes to indicate to the driver of a vehicle behind him that he desires that driver to overtake him, he shall extend his right arm and hand horizontally outside of and to the right of the vehicle and shall swing the arm backwards and forwards in a semi-circular motion.

THE INDIAN COTTON CESS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. V OF 1939.

[17th February, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called the INDIAN COTTON CESS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of section 2, Act XIV of 1923.

2. In section 2 of the Indian Cotton Cess Act, 1923, (hereinafter referred to as the said Act),—

(a) the word "and" at the end of clause (e) shall be omitted; and

(b) after clause (f), the following clause shall be added, namely:—

“(g) a reference to British India includes a reference to Berar”.

3. In clause (viii) of section 4 of the said Act, for the word “ten” the word “eleven” and for the words “one to represent the industry in Bombay” the words “two to represent the industry in Bombay” shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 4,
Act XIV of 1923.

THE INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VI OF 1939.

[17th February, 1939.

An Act further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN MERCHANT SHIPPING (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of section 62,
Act XXI of 1923.

2. In section 62 of the Indian Merchant Shipping Act, 1923, sub-section (2) shall be re-numbered as sub-section (3) and the following shall be inserted as sub-section (2), namely:—

“(2) The provisions of clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (1) shall not apply to so much of the wages of a seaman as have been or are hereafter assigned by way of contribution to any fund approved in this behalf by the Central Government, the main purpose of which is the provision of benefits for seamen on retirement; and the provisions of clauses (a) and (d) of sub-section (1) shall not apply to anything done or to be done for giving effect to such an assignment.”

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VII OF 1939.

[17th February, 1939.

An Act further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) This section and Part I shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint, and Part II shall come into force on such subsequent date, not later than two years from the date appointed for the coming into force of Part I, as the Central Government may, in like manner, appoint:

Provided that sub-clauses (iii) and (iv) of clause (b) of section 11 shall not take effect earlier than the 1st day of April, 1940.

PART I.

Amendment of section 2,
Act XI of 1922.

2. In section 2 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act),—

(a) in clause (3), before the word "Assistant", in both places where it occurs, the word "Appellate" shall be inserted;

(b) after clause (6) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

(6-A) 'dividend' includes—

(a) any distribution by a company of accumulated profits, whether capitalised or not, if such distribution entails the release by the company to its shareholders of all or any part of the assets of the company;

(b) any distribution by a company of debentures or debenture-stock, to the extent to which the company possesses accumulated profits, whether capitalised or not;

(c) any distribution made to the shareholders of a company out of accumulated profits of the company on the liquidation of the company:

Provided that only the accumulated profits so distributed which arose during the six previous years of the company preceding the date of liquidation shall be so included; and

(d) any distribution by a company on the reduction of its capital to the extent to which the company possesses accumulated profits which arose after the end of the previous year ending next before the 1st day of April, 1933, whether such accumulated profits have been capitalised or not:

Provided that 'dividend' does not include a distribution in respect of any share issued for full cash consideration which is not entitled in the event of liquidation to participate in the surplus assets, when such distribution is made in accordance with sub-clause (c) or (d).

Explanation.—The words 'accumulated profits', wherever they occur in this clause, shall not include 'capital profit.';

(c) existing clause (6-A) shall be re-numbered as clause (6-B) and, in that clause, as so re-numbered, for the words and figures "the Indian Contract Act, 1872;" the words and figures "the Indian Partnership Act, 1932;" shall be substituted, and the following words shall be added, namely:—

"provided that the expression 'partner' includes any person who being a minor has been admitted to the benefits of partnership;"

(d) after clause (6-B), as so re-numbered, the following clauses shall be inserted, namely:—

"(6-C) 'income' includes anything included in 'dividend' as defined in clause (6A) and anything which under Explanation 2 to sub-section (1) of section 7 is a profit received in lieu of salary for the purposes of that sub-section and any sum deemed to be profits under the second proviso to clause (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10 and the profits of any business of insurance carried on by a mutual insurance company computed in accordance with Rule 9 in the Schedule;

(i) after the word "means" the following words shall be inserted, namely:—

"in respect of any separate source of income, profits and gains";

(ii) for the proviso to sub-clause (a) - the following proviso shall be substituted, namely:—

"Provided that where an assessee has once been assessed in respect of a particular source of income, profits and gains, he shall not in respect of that source exercise this option so as to vary the meaning of the expression 'previous year' as then applicable to him except with the consent of the Income-tax Officer and upon such conditions as the Income-tax Officer may think fit; or";

(iii) after sub-clause (b) the following shall be added, namely:—

"or

Provided that when such other date does not fall between the setting up of the business, profession or vocation and the next following 31st day of March, it shall be deemed that there is no previous year; and when the assessee is a partner in a firm, 'previous year' in respect of his share of the income, profits and gains of the firm means the previous year as determined for the assessment of the income, profits and gains of the firm;"; and

(g) in clause (15), for the words "from all sources to which this Act applies" the words, brackets and figures "referred to in sub-section (1) of section 4" shall be substituted, for the word and figures "section 16" the words "this Act" shall be substituted, and the following words shall be added, namely:—

" 'total world income' includes all income, profits and gains wherever accruing or arising except income to which, under the provisions of sub-section (3) of section 4, this Act does not apply; and".

3. In section 3 of the said Act, the words "applicable to the total income of an assessee" shall be omitted; for the words "all income, profits and gains" the words "the total income" shall be substituted, and for the words "company, firm and other association of individuals" the words "company and local authority, and of every firm and other association of persons or the partners of the firm or members of the association individually" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 4,
Act XI of 1922.

4. In section 4 of the said Act,—

(a) for sub-sections (1) and (2) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the total income of any previous year of any person includes all income, profits and gains from whatever source derived which—

(a) are received or are deemed to be received in British India in such year by or on behalf of such person, or

(b) if such person is resident in British India during such year,—

(i) accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in British India during such year, or

(ii) accrue or arise to him without British India during such year, or

(iii) having accrued or arisen to him without British India before the beginning of such year and after the 1st day of April, 1933, are brought into or received in British India by him during such year; or

(c) if such person is not resident in British India during such year, accrue or arise or are deemed to accrue or arise to him in British India during such year:

Provided that there shall not be included in any assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, both the amount of the income, profits and gains referred to in sub-clause, (ii) of clause (b) and the amount of the income, profits and gains referred to in sub-clause (iii) of clause (b) but only the greater of these two amounts:

Provided further that, in the case of a person not ordinarily resident in British India, income, profits and gains which accrue or arise to him without British India shall not be so included unless they are derived from a business controlled in or a profession or vocation set up in India or unless they are brought into or received in British India by him during such year:

Provided further that if in any year the amount of income accruing or arising without British India exceeds the amount brought into British India in that year, there shall not be included in the assessment of the income of that year so much of such excess as does not exceed four thousand five hundred rupees.

Explanation 1.—Income, profits and gains accruing or arising without British India shall not be deemed to be received in or brought into British India within the meaning of this sub-section by reason only of the fact that they are taken into account in a balance-sheet prepared in British India.

Explanation 2.—Income which would be chargeable under the head 'Salaries' if payable in British India and not being pension payable without India shall be deemed to accrue or arise in British India wherever paid if it is earned in British India.

Explanation 3.—A dividend paid without British India shall be deemed to be income accruing and arising in British India to the extent to which it has been paid out of profits subjected to income-tax in British India.

(2) For the purposes of sub-section (1), where a husband is not resident in British India, remittances received by his wife resident in British India out of any part of his income which is not included in his total income shall be deemed to be income accruing in British India to the wife.”;

(b) in sub-section (3),—

(i) for the words “This Act shall not apply to the following classes of income” the words “Any income, profits or gains falling within the following classes shall not be included in the total income of the person receiving them” shall be substituted;

(ii) after clause (i) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

“(ia) Any income derived from business carried on on behalf of a religious or charitable institution when the income is applied solely to the purposes of the institution and—

(a) the business is carried on in the course of the carrying out of a primary purpose of the institution, or

(b) the work in connection with the business is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the institution.”;

(iii) to clause (iii) the following words shall be added, namely:—

“except income from a trade or business carried on by the authority so far as that income is not income arising from the supply of a commodity or service within its own jurisdictional area”;

(iv) in clause (iv), for the figures “1897” the figures “1925” shall be substituted;

(v) clause (v) shall be omitted;

(vi) to the last paragraph the following words shall be added, namely:—

“, but nothing contained in clause (i), clause (ia) or clause (ii) shall operate to exempt from the provisions of this Act that part of the income of a private religious trust which does not enure for the benefit of the public”.

Insertion of new sections
4-A and 4-B in Act XI of 1922.

5. After section 4 of the said Act and in Chapter I the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

Residence in British India.

“4-A. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) any individual is resident in British India in any year if he—

(i) is in British India in that year for a period amounting in all to one hundred and eighty-two days or more; or

(ii) maintains or has maintained for him a dwelling place in British India for a period or periods amounting in all to one hundred and eighty-two days or more in that year, and is in British India for any time in that year; or

(iii) having within the four years preceding that year been in British India for a period of or for periods amounting in all to three hundred and sixty-five days or more, is in British India for any time in that year otherwise than on an occasional or casual visit;

(b) a Hindu undivided family, firm or other association of persons is resident in British India unless the control and management of its affairs is situated wholly without British India; and

(c) a company is resident in British India in any year (a) if the control and management of its affairs is situated wholly in British India in that year, or (b) if its income arising in British India in that year exceeds its income arising without British India in that year.

Ordinary residence.

4-B. For the purposes of this Act—

(a) an individual is ‘not ordinarily resident’ in British India in any year if he has not been resident in British India in nine out of the ten years preceding that year or if he has not during the seven years preceding that year been in British India for a period of, or for periods amounting in all to, more than two years;

(b) a Hindu undivided family is deemed to be ordinarily resident in British India if its manager is ordinarily resident in British India;

(c) a company, firm or other association of persons is ordinarily resident in British India if it is resident in British India.”

Substitution of new section for section 5, Act XI
of 1922.

6. For section 5 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Income-tax authorities.

“5. (1) There shall be the following classes of Income-tax authorities for purposes of this Act, namely:—

(a) the Central Board Revenue,

(b) Commissioners of Income-tax,

(c) Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax who may be either Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax.

(d) Income-tax Officers.

(2) The Central Government may appoint a Commissioner of Income-tax for any area specified in the order of appointment, and may appoint Commissioners of Income-tax, not more than three in all, each to discharge, without reference to area, and to the exclusion of any Commissioner appointed for any area, the functions of a Commissioner in respect of any cases or classes of cases assigned to him by the Central Board of Revenue.

(3) The Central Government may appoint for any area as many Appellate or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers as it thinks fit.

(4) Appellate Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax shall be under the direct control of the Central Board of Revenue and shall perform their functions in respect of such persons or classes of persons and of such incomes or classes of income and in respect of such areas as the Central Board of Revenue may direct, and, where two or more Appellate Assistant Commissioners have been appointed for the same area, in accordance with any orders which the Central Board of Revenue may make for the distribution and allocation of the work to be performed.

(5) Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers shall perform their functions in respect of such persons or classes of persons and of such incomes or classes of income and in respect of such areas as the Commissioner of Income-tax may direct, and, where two or more Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax or Income-tax Officers have been appointed for the same area, in accordance with any orders which the Commissioner of Income-tax may make for the distribution and allocation of the work to be performed. The Commissioner may, with the previous approval of the Central Board of Revenue, by general or special order in writing, direct that the powers conferred on the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner by or under this Act shall, in respect of any specified case or class of cases, be exercised by the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner, respectively, and, for the purposes of any case in respect of which such order applies, references in this Act or in any rules made hereunder to the Income-tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner shall be deemed to be references to the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner, respectively.

(6) The Central Board of Revenue may, by notification in the official Gazette, empower Commissioners of Income-tax, Appellate or Inspecting Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers to perform such functions in respect of such classes of persons or such classes of income and for such area as may be specified in the notification, and thereupon the functions so specified shall cease within the specified area to be performed in respect of the specified classes of persons or classes of income by the other authorities appointed under sub-sections (2) and (3).

(7) Assistant Commissioners of Income-tax and Income-tax Officers shall, for the purposes of this Act, be subordinate to the Commissioner of Income-tax for the area in which they perform their functions, or where they perform functions assigned to them by a Commissioner of Income-tax appointed without reference to area, to that Commissioner.

(8) All officers and persons employed in the execution of this Act shall observe and follow the orders, instructions and directions of the Central Board of Revenue:

Provided that no such orders, instructions or directions shall be given so as to interfere with the discretion of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate functions."

7. In section 6 of the said Act, for clauses (iii), Amendment of section 6, (iv), (v) and (vi) the following clauses shall be Act XI of 1922. substituted, namely:—

- "(iii) Income from property.
- (iv) Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation.
- (v) Income from other sources."

Amendment of section 7, 8. In sub-section (1) of section 7 of the said Act XI of 1922. Act,—

- (a) the words "received by him" shall be omitted;
- (b) for the words "which are paid by or on behalf of the Crown" the words "which are due to him from, whether paid or not, or are paid by or on behalf of, the Crown" shall be substituted;
- (c) for the words "by or on behalf of any private employer" the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

"any private employer; and for the purposes of this sub-section advances by way of loan or otherwise of income chargeable under this head shall be deemed to be salary due on the date when the advance is received:

Provided that the tax shall not be payable in respect of any sum which the assessee by the conditions of his employment is required to spend out of his remuneration wholly, necessarily and exclusively in the performance of his duties:";

- (d) in the existing proviso after the word "Provided" the word "further" shall be inserted;

- (e) after the proviso the following further proviso shall be inserted, namely:—

"Provided further that where tax is deductible at the source under section 18, the assessee shall not be called upon to pay the tax himself unless he has received the salary without such deduction."; and

- (f) the existing Explanation shall be numbered Explanation 1, and after that Explanation, the following Explanation shall be added, namely:—

"Explanation 2.—A payment due to or received by an assessee from an employer or former employer or from a provident or other fund at or in connection with the termination of his employment, whether or not the employment is then terminated or to be terminated, is to the extent to which it does not consist of contributions by the assessee or interest on such contributions a profit received in lieu of salary for the purposes of this sub-section, unless the payment is made solely as compensation for loss of employment and not by way of remuneration for past services:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall render liable to income-tax any payment from a provident fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies, or any payment from a recognised provident fund within the meaning of Chapter IX-A if such payment is exempted from payment of income-tax under the provisions of Chapter IX-A, or any payment from an approved super-annuation fund within the meaning of Chapter IX-B made on the death of a beneficiary or in lieu of or in commutation of an annuity, or by way of refund of contributions on the death of a beneficiary or on his leaving the employment in connection with which the fund is established."

Amendment of section 8, 9. In section 8 of the said Act, to the first proviso Act XI of 1922. the following shall be added, namely:—

"or in respect of any interest payable on money borrowed for the purpose of investment in the securities by the assessee except interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, unless in respect of interest which is so chargeable tax has been paid or deducted under section 18, or unless there is a person in British India who may be appointed an agent under section 43 in respect of such interest".

Amendment of section 9,
Act XI of 1922.

10. In section 9 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—
(i) for the words “under the head ‘Property’” the words “under the head ‘Income from Property’” shall be substituted, and for the words “his business” the words “any business, profession or vocation carried on by him the profits of which are assessable to tax” shall be substituted;

(ii) for clause (iv) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(iv) where the property is subject to a mortgage or other capital charge, the amount of any interest on such mortgage or charge; where the property is subject to an annual charge not being a capital charge, the amount of such charge; where the property is subject to a ground rent, the amount of such ground rent; and where the property has been acquired, constructed, repaired, renewed or reconstructed with borrowed capital, the amount of any interest payable on such capital:

Provided that no allowance shall be made in respect of any interest or annual charge payable without British India and chargeable under this Act, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, except interest or a charge on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18 or in respect of which there is an agent for the payee in British India who may be assessed under section 43;”;

(iii) for clause (vii) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(vii) in respect of vacancies, that part of the net annual value, after deducting the foregoing allowances, which is proportional to the period during which the property is wholly unoccupied or, where the property is let out in parts, that portion of the net annual value, after deducting the foregoing allowances appropriate to any vacant part, which is proportional to the period during which such part is wholly unoccupied;”;

(iv) the proviso shall be omitted;

(b) after sub-section (2) the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(3) Where property is owned by two or more persons and their respective shares are definite and ascertainable, such persons shall not in respect of such property be assessed as an association of persons, but the share of each such person in the income from the property as computed in accordance with this section shall be included in his total income.”

Amendment of section 10,
Act XI of 1922.

11. In section 10 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the word “Business” where it first occurs, the words “Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation” shall be substituted, and for the word “business”, in all other places where it occurs throughout the section, the words “business, profession or vocation” shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (2),—

(i) in clause (i), for the words “proportional part” the words “proportional annual value of the part” shall be substituted;

(ii) in clause (iii), the words “where the payment of interest thereon is not in any way dependent on the earning of profits” shall be omitted; and to the clause the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

“Provided that no allowance shall be made under this clause in any case for any interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, except interest on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18 or in respect of which there is an agent in British India who may be assessed under section 43 or, in the case of a firm, for any interest paid to a partner of the firm;”;

(iii) in clause (vi),—

(a) for the words "original cost thereof to the assessee" the words "written down value thereof" shall be substituted;

(b) in clause (b) of the proviso, after the words "in any year" the words and figures "not being a year which ended prior to the 1st day of April, 1939," shall be inserted;

(iv) for clause (vii) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

"(vii) in respect of any machinery or plant which has been sold or discarded, the amount by which the written down value of the machinery or plant exceeds the amount for which the machinery or plant is actually sold or its scrap value:

Provided that such amount is actually written off in the books of the assessee:

Provided further that where the amount for which any such machinery or plant is sold exceeds the written down value, the excess shall be deemed to be profits of the previous year in which the sale took place;"

(v) clauses (viiia) (viii) and (viiiia) shall be re-numbered, respectively, clause (viii), clause (ix) and clause (x), and in clause (c) of the proviso to the clause re-numbered clause (x), for the word "businesses," the words "businesses, professions or vocations" shall be substituted;

(vi) after clause (x), as as re-numbered by this Act, the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

Provided that if the amount ultimately recovered on any such debt or loan is greater than the difference between the whole debt or loan and the amount so allowed, the excess shall be deemed to be a profit of the year in which it is recovered, and if less, the deficiency shall be deemed to be a business expense of that year;"

(vii) existing clause (ix) shall be re-numbered (xii), and in that clause, for the brackets and words "(not being in the nature of capital expenditure) incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains" the brackets and words "(not being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee) laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, profession or vocation" shall be substituted and the proviso at the end of that clause shall be omitted;

(c) for sub-section (3) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(3) Where any building, machinery, plant or furniture in respect of which any allowance is due under clause (iy), clause (v), clause (vi) or clause (vii) of sub-section (2) is not wholly used for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation, the allowance shall be restricted to the fair proportional part of the amount which would be allowable if such building, machinery, plant or furniture was wholly so used.

(4) Nothing in clause (ix) or clause (xii) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise the allowance of any sum paid on account of any cess, rate or tax levied on the profits or gains of any business, profession or vocation or assessed at a proportion of or otherwise on the basis of any such profits or gains; and nothing in clause (xii) of sub-section (2) shall be deemed to authorise—

(a) any allowance in respect of a payment which is chargeable under the head 'Salaries' if it is payable without British India and tax has not been paid thereon nor deducted therefrom under section 18; or

(b) any allowance in respect of any payment by way of interest, salary, commission or remuneration made by a firm to any partner of the firm; or

(c) any allowance in respect of a payment to a provident or other fund established for the benefit of employees unless the employer has made effective arrangements to secure that tax shall be deducted at source from any payments made from the fund which are taxable under the head 'Salaries'.

(5) In sub-section (2), 'paid' means actually paid or incurred according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the profits or gains are computed under this section; 'plant' includes vehicles, books, scientific apparatus and surgical equipment purchased for the purposes of the business, profession or vocation; and 'written down value' means—

(a) in the case of assets acquired in the previous year, the actual cost to the assessee;

(b) in the case of assets acquired before the previous year but after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, the actual cost to the assessee less all depreciation allowable to him under this section;

(c) in the case of assets acquired before the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, the actual cost to the assessee less for each financial year since acquisition the amount of depreciation applicable to the assets at the rates in force for each such year since the 1st day of April, 1922, and at the rates in force on the 1st day of April, 1922, for each such year prior to that date:

Provided that where the provisions of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 26 are applicable, the actual cost to the assessee referred to in clauses (a), (b) and (c) shall be the actual cost to the person succeeded in the business, profession or vocation:

Provided further that there shall not be so deducted from the actual cost any depreciation allowance or part of any depreciation allowance which was due for a year which ended prior to the 1st day of April, 1939, but to which full effect was not given owing to the absence of profits or gains chargeable for that year, or owing to the profits or gains so chargeable being less than the allowance.

(6) A trade, professional or similar association performing specific services for its members for remuneration definitely related to those services shall be deemed for the purpose of this section to carry on business in respect of those services, and the profits and gains therefrom shall be liable to tax accordingly.

(7) Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 8, 9, 10, 12 or 18, the profits and gains of any business of insurance and the tax payable thereon shall be computed in accordance with the rules contained in the Schedule to this Act."

Omission of section 11,
Act XI of 1922.

12. Section 11 of the said Act shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 12,
Act XI of 1922

13. In section 12 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the words "Other sources" the words "Income from other sources" shall be substituted, and for the words "and from every source to which this Act applies" the words "which may be included in his total income" shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the words "provided that no allowance shall be made on account of any personal expenses of the assessee" the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"provided that no allowance shall be made on account of—

(a) any personal expenses of the assessee, or

(b) any interest chargeable under this Act which is payable without British India, not being interest on a loan issued for public subscription before the 1st day of April, 1938, or not being interest on which tax has been paid or from which tax has been deducted under section 18, or

(c) any payment which is chargeable under the head 'Salaries', if it is payable without British India and tax has not been paid thereon nor deducted therefrom under section 18.";

(c) after sub-section (2) the following sub-section shall be added; namely:—

"(3) Where an assessee lets on hire machinery, plant or furniture belonging to him, he shall be entitled to allowances in accordance with the provisions of clauses (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii) of sub-section (2) of section 10."

Insertion of new section 12-A in Act XI of 1922.

14. After section 12 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

12-A. Where a managing agent of a company is liable under an agreement made for adequate consideration to share managing agency commission with a third party or parties, the said agent and the said party or parties shall file a declaration showing the proportion in which such commission is shared between them, and on proof to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer of the facts contained in such declaration such agent and each such party shall be chargeable only on the share to which such agent or party is entitled under the agreement."

Amendment of section 13, Act XI of 1922.

15. In section 13 of the said Act, the figures "11" shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 14, Act XI of 1922.

16. For sub-section (2) of section 14 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(2) The tax shall not be payable by an assessee—

(a) if a partner of an unregistered firm, in respect of any portion of his share in the profits and gains of the firm computed in the manner laid down in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 16 on which the tax has already been paid by the firm; or

(b) if a member of an association of persons other than a Hindu undivided family, a company or a firm, in respect of any portion of the amount which he is entitled to receive from the association on which the tax has already been paid by the association."

Amendment of section 15, Act XI of 1922.

17. In section 15 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the figures "1897" the figures "1925" shall be substituted, and for the words "by an assessee in respect of any sums paid by him to effect an insurance on his own life or on the life of his wife, or in respect of a contract for a deferred annuity on his own life or on the life of his wife" the words "in respect of any sums paid by an assessee to effect an insurance on the life of the assessee or on the life of a wife or husband of the assessee or in respect of a contract for a deferred annuity on the life of the assessee or on the life of a wife or husband of the assessee" shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (3), for the word "proviso" the words "second proviso" shall be substituted, and for the words "one-sixth of the total income of the assessee" the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

"in the case of an individual, one-sixth of the total income of the assessee, or six thousand rupees, whichever is less, and in the case of a Hindu undivided family, one-sixth of the total income of the assessee, or twelve thousand rupees, whichever is less".

Amendment of section 16,
Act XI of 1922.

18. In section 16 of the said Act,—

(a) for sub-sections (1) and (2) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“(1) In computing the total income of an assessee—

(a) any sums exempted under the second proviso to sub-section (1) of section 7, the second and third provisos to section 8, sub-section (2) of section 14 and section 15 shall be included;

(b) when the assessee is a partner of a firm, then, whether the firm has made a profit or a loss, his share (whether a net profit or a net loss) shall be taken to be any salary, interest, commission or other remuneration payable to him by the firm in respect of the previous year increased or decreased respectively by his share in the balance of the profit or loss of the firm after the deduction of any interest, salary, commission or other remuneration payable to any partner in respect of the previous year:

Provided that if his share so computed is a loss, such loss may be set off or carried forward and set off in accordance with the provisions of section 24;

(c) all income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition whether revocable or not, and whether effected before or after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, from assets remaining the property of the settlor or disponer shall be deemed to be income of the settlor or disponer, and all income arising to any person by virtue of a revocable transfer of assets shall be deemed to be income of the transferor:

Provided that for the purposes of this clause a settlement, disposition or transfer shall be deemed to be revocable if it contains any provision for the retransfer directly or indirectly of the income or assets to the settlor, disponer or transferor, or in any way gives the settlor, disponer or transferor a right to reassume power directly or indirectly over the income or assets:

Provided further that the expression ‘settlement or disposition’ shall for the purposes of this clause include any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement, or arrangement, and the expression ‘settlor or disponer’ in relation to a settlement or disposition shall include any person by whom the settlement or disposition was made:

Provided further that this clause shall not apply to any income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition which is not revocable for a period exceeding six years or during the lifetime of the person and from which income the settlor or disponer derives no direct or indirect benefit but that the settlor shall be liable to be assessed on the said income as and when the power to revoke arises to him.

(2) For the purposes of inclusion in the total income of an assessee any dividend shall be deemed to be income of the previous year in which it is paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed to him, and shall be increased by the amount of income-tax (but not super-tax) payable thereon calculated at the rate applicable to the total income of a company for the financial year in which the dividend is paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed:

Provided that when any portion of the profits and gains of the company out of which such dividend has been paid, credited or distributed or deemed to have been paid, credited or distributed was not liable to income-tax in the hands of the company, the income-tax to be added under this section shall be calculated upon only such proportion of the dividend as the amount of the profits and gains of the company liable to income-tax bears to the total profits and gains of the company.”;

(b) in sub-clause (iv) of clause (a) of sub-section (3), after the words “by such individual” the words “otherwise than for adequate consideration” shall be inserted;

(c) in clause (b) of sub-section (3), for the words "association of individuals" the words "person or association of persons" shall be substituted, the words "consisting of such individual and his wife" shall be omitted, for the words "to the association" the words "otherwise than for adequate consideration to the person or association" shall be substituted, and to the clause the words "for the benefit of his wife or a minor child or both" shall be added.

Substitution of new section for section 17, Act XI of 1922.

19. For section 17 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"17. (1) Where a person is not resident in British India, and is a British subject as defined in section 17 of the British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914, or a subject of a State in India or Burma, the tax, including super-tax, payable by him or on his behalf on his total income shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of the tax including super-tax which would have been payable on his total world income had it been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to his total world income; and in the case of any other non-resident person, the income-tax payable by him or on his behalf on his total income shall be at the maximum rate and the super-tax payable thereon shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of super-tax which would have been payable on his total world income had it been his total income the same proportion as his total income bears to his total world income.

(2) Where there is included in the total income of any assessee any income (including income from a share in an unregistered firm, if assessed as such) exempted from tax by or under the provisions of this Act, the income-tax excluding super-tax payable by the assessee shall be an amount bearing to the total amount of the income-tax excluding super-tax which would have been payable on the total income had no part of it been exempted the same proportion as the unexempted portion of the total income bears to the total income."

Amendment of section 18, Act XI of 1922.

20. In section 18 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (2), for the words "but not super-tax" the words "and super-tax" shall be substituted, and for the words "at the rate applicable to the estimated income of the assessee under this head" the words "at a rate representing the average of the rates applicable to the estimated total income of the assessee under this head" shall be substituted;

(b) after sub-section (2-A) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

"(2-B) Any person responsible for paying any income chargeable under the head 'Salaries' to a person not resident in British India shall at the time of payment deduct income-tax at the maximum rate and also super-tax at the rate or rates applicable to the estimated income of the assessee under this head.";

(c) in the proviso to sub-section (3), after the words "the total income" the words "or the total world income" shall be inserted and for the words "herein referred to" the words, brackets, figure and letter "referred to in this sub-section or in sub-section (2-B), as the case may be," shall be substituted;

(d) after sub-section (3) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

"(3-A) Any person responsible for paying to a person not resident in British India any interest not being 'Interest on Securities', or any other sum chargeable under the provisions of this Act, shall, at the time of payment, unless he is himself liable to pay income-tax thereon as an agent, deduct income-tax at the maximum rate.";

(e) existing sub-sections (3-A), (3-B), (3-C) and (3-D) shall be re-numbered, respectively, (3-B), (3-C), (3-D) and (3-E);

CHAPTER II.

CONTROLLING AUTHORITIES AND THEIR POWERS.

Public Health Board.

4. (1) As soon as may be after the commencement of this Act, the Government shall cause to be constituted for the Province of Madras a Public Health Board consisting of the following members, namely:—

- (a) the Minister for Public Health;
 (b) the Minister for Local Administration;
 (c) three Members of the Madras Legislature nominated by the Government;
 (d) the Surgeon-General with the Government of Madras;
 (e) the Director of Public Health;
 (f) the Sanitary Engineer; and
 (g) one other officer of the Government nominated by the Government.

(2) Members nominated under clause (c) of sub-section (1) shall hold office for a period of one year from the date of nomination, but shall be eligible for re-nomination.

(3) The Minister for Public Health shall be the President of the Public Health Board and the Director of Public Health shall be its Secretary.

5. (1) The Public Health Board shall advise the Government on such matters as the Government may from time to time refer to it.

(2) The meetings of the Board and the mode of transaction of business at such meetings shall be governed by such regulations as may be framed by it.

(3) The proceedings of the Board shall not be invalidated by reason of any vacancy in the office of the President, the Secretary, or a member.

Powers of the Government and of the Director of Public Health.

6. (1) The Government shall have power to inspect, control and superintend the operations of local authorities under this Act.

Powers of the Government and of the Director of Public Health and his staff.

(2) The Government may, from time to time, define the powers to be exercised, and the duties to be performed, by the Director of Public Health or any member of his staff for the purposes of sub-section (1).

(3) Nothing contained in sub-sections (1) and (2) shall be deemed to affect, or derogate from, any powers possessed by the Government or the District Collector under any other law for the time being in force.

7. The Director of Public Health may, from time to time as occasion requires, recommend for adoption, by any local authority, such measures as may be necessary for improving the public health administration in the local area, or for safeguarding the public health therein:

Powers of the Director of Public Health to advise local authorities.

Provided that if on account of financial or other reasons, any local authority is unable to carry out such measures, or if there is any difference of opinion between the local authority and the Director, the matter shall be referred to the Government whose decision shall be final.

Public Health Establishments of Local Authorities.

8. (1) The public health establishment of every local authority (other than the Corporation of Madras) shall be on such scale as the Government may from time to time direct.

Public Health staff in local areas.

(2) The authorities who may make appointments to the public health establishments referred to in sub-section (1), the conditions of service of the members of such establishments, and the duties of such members shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, or the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, be governed by regulations, not inconsistent with this Act, made by the Government. Such regulations may lay down the extent to which the Director of Public Health shall have disciplinary control over the members of such public health establishments.

9. (1) A local authority shall, if so required by the Government, include the post of a Health Officer in its establishment schedule.

Appointment of the Health Officer.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, or the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, the Government—

(a) shall appoint the Health Officers of all the local authorities (other than the Corporation of Madras) in respect whereof a direction is issued under sub-section (1); and

(b) may recover from each such local authority, the whole or such proportion of the salary and allowances paid to the Health Officer, and such contribution towards his leave allowances, pension and provident fund as the Government may, by general or special order, determine.

10. (1) In the event of the prevalence or threatened outbreak of any infectious disease in any local area, or of any unusual mortality therein, the Government may, by order, appoint temporarily for such period as may be specified therein, one or more additional Health Officers, for the treatment of such infectious disease and preventing it from spreading, or for investigating the cause of, and preventing, such mortality, as the case may be.

Appointment of temporary Health Officers in emergencies.

(2) For the purpose of sub-section (1) the Government may appoint any medical practitioner registered under the Madras Medical Registration Act, 1914, either on an honorary basis or on such salary or allowances or both as the Government may fix. The salary and allowances shall be payable from the funds of the local authority.

11. The Government may, by general or special order, authorize any officer of the Government or of a local authority, to exercise such of the powers of a Health Officer under this Act, in such area, and subject to such restrictions, limitations and conditions and to such control and revision, as may be specified in such order.

12. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in any other Act or Acts governing the local authority or authorities concerned, the Government may, by general or special order, appoint any person or persons to carry out such provisions of this Act, and in such areas, as may be specified in the order.

(2) The expenses incurred by such person or persons in doing so shall be met from the funds of the local authority or authorities concerned, either wholly or in part, and, where more than one local authority is concerned, in such proportions, as may be determined by the Government.

13. (1) Subject to such rules as may be prescribed including rules for consultation with the executive authorities concerned, the Director of Public Health shall have power—

(a) to transfer any member of the public health establishment of a local authority to the public health establishment of another local authority; and

(b) in times of emergency, to assign one or more members of the public health establishment of one local authority for temporary duty in the area of another local authority.

(2) Nothing contained in clause (a) of sub-section (1) shall apply to the Corporation of Madras.

(3) In the case referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1), the local authority within whose jurisdiction the member or members of the public health establishment of another local authority are working, shall pay for the period of such temporary duty, the salary and allowances of such member or members and such contribution towards their leave allowances, pension and provident fund as the Government may, by general or special order, determine.

14. (1) The Health Officer in charge of any local area shall exercise supervision and control over all other members of the public health establishment in such area.

(2) (a) Save as otherwise provided in this Chapter or in any rules or regulations made under it, all appointments, transfers and punishments of the members of the public health establishment under the supervision and control of the Health Officer shall be made by the Health Officer, subject to the approval of the executive authority.

(b) If for any reason the executive authority disagrees with the orders of the Health Officer under clause (a), the executive authority shall refer the matter to the Government whose decision shall be final.

15. Every local authority shall provide its Health Officer with such clerical assistance, office accommodation, furniture, equipment, stationery, and forms as may in the opinion of the Director of Public Health be necessary for the proper conduct of the business of such Health Officer.

16. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919, the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918, and the Places of Public Resort Act, 1888, the Health Officer of a local authority shall perform such of the functions, and discharge such of the duties, of its executive authority in regard to public health matters under any of the provisions applicable to such local authority contained in the Acts aforesaid, subject to such appeal and control as the Government may, by general or special order, determine.

CHAPTER III.

WATER-SUPPLY.

17. (1) Every local authority may, and if the Government so direct shall, provide or arrange for the provision of a sufficient supply of drinking water for consumption by the inhabitants of the area within its jurisdiction.

(2) The local authority shall, so far as may be practicable, make adequate provision for securing—

(a) that the water-supply is continuous throughout the year, and

(b) that the water supplied is at all times wholesome and fit for human consumption.

(3) A local authority may also provide or arrange for the provision of a sufficient supply of water for other domestic purposes or for non-domestic purposes.

18. (1) If in the opinion of the Government, a local area does not possess a sufficient supply of wholesome water fit for the consumption of its inhabitants, they may direct the local authority concerned, either singly or in combination with the local authority or authorities having jurisdiction over any local area or areas in the neighbourhood which are similarly situated, to execute within such time as the Government may fix, such works as may be directed by the Government for providing a sufficient supply of wholesome water fit for human consumption.

(2) A local authority may, with the previous sanction of the Government—

(a) construct, lay, or erect filters, reservoirs, engines, conduits, pipes or other works without the limits of its local area, for supplying such area with water;

(b) purchase or take on lease any water-work, or any water, or any right to store or to take or convey water, either within or without the limits of its local area; and

(c) contract with any local authority or other person or agency for the supply of water.

(3) A local authority may, with the previous sanction of the Government, by public notice, declare any lake, stream, spring, well, tank, reservoir, pond, or other source of water-supply, whether within or without the limits of its local area (other than a source under the control of the Government), from which water is or may be made available for the use of the public in the local area for domestic purposes, to be a source of public water-supply for such purposes and every such source shall thereafter be under the control of the local authority, only to the extent necessary for such purposes.

19. The Government shall have power to take water from any water-main belonging to, or in the control of, a local authority for supplying water to any other area, subject to such payment being made to the local authority concerned and subject also to such other conditions as the Government may consider reasonable:

Provided that before taking action under this section, the Government shall communicate to the local authority the grounds on which they propose to do so, fix a reasonable period for the local authority to show cause against the proposal, and consider its explanations or objections, if any.

20. (1) The Collector of the district, or any other officer appointed by the Government in this behalf, may cause inquiries to be made in any local area or part thereof, with a view to ascertaining—Power of Collector in regard to water-supply.

(a) whether the source of water-supply for such local area or part is contaminated from any cause against which effective means of protection can be taken, and

(b) whether the provision of any additional source or sources of water-supply is necessary for such local area or part.

(2) The Collector or other officer aforesaid may, after taking into consideration the result of such inquiries, by notice, direct that any source of water-supply be cleaned, improved, repaired or otherwise protected from contamination, or that such additional source or sources of water-supply be provided, as the case may be:

Provided that before issuing a notice under this sub-section, the Collector or other officer shall give the authorities or persons affected, a reasonable opportunity to make any representations they may wish to make and consider the same.

(3) Against any direction issued by the Collector or other officer under sub-section (2), an appeal shall lie to the Government whose decision shall be final.

(4) (a) Every notice issued under sub-section (2) shall specify the nature and extent of the works to be executed, the estimated cost thereof, and the authority or authorities or the person or persons by whom, and the period within which, they are to be executed.

(b) The notice shall either—

(i) be published in the prescribed manner; or

(ii) be served on the local authority or on the person owning or having control over the source of water-supply, as the case may be, in the prescribed manner.

(5) If the directions contained in any notice issued under sub-section (2) have not been satisfactorily complied with, the officer issuing the notice may himself cause the works specified in the notice to be executed, provided that he may, on sufficient cause being shown, extend the period specified in the notice, or modify or rescind any direction contained therein.

(6) (a) If a water-tax is imposed in the local area, the cost of carrying out the works specified in the notice issued under sub-section (2), whether such works are executed by the authority or person specified therein or under sub-section (5) by the officer issuing the notice, shall be borne by the local authority concerned.

(b) If no water-tax is imposed in the local area, such cost shall be borne by the inhabitants of the local area who, on inquiry, are found to be benefited by the works or shall be shared between such inhabitants and the local authority concerned in such proportions as may be determined by the Government.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this sub-section, 'water-tax' means—

(a) a tax levied under section 25 of this Act, or

(b) a water and drainage-tax levied under section 81 (1) (b) of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, or under section 99 (1) (b) of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919, or

(c) a tax levied under section 75 (2) of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, for the specific purpose of executing, maintaining or improving any work for the supply of water.

21. If the Director of Public Health is satisfied upon investigation that any source of public water-supply in a local area is contaminated or is subject to imminent risk of contamination by reason of unsatisfactory location, protection, construction, operation or maintenance, and speedy remedy or immediate prevention is, in his opinion, desirable, he may, by order, direct the local authority to take such measures as may be specified therein; and the local authority shall take action accordingly.

22. In the case of any railway in the Province of Madras, the Government may, by general or special order, require the authority administering the railway to submit for analysis, to such person or institution, in such manner, and at such intervals, as may be prescribed, samples of drinking water supplied by such authority at any station or stations on such railway. For such analysis, the authority aforesaid shall pay to the Government such fee as may be prescribed by them.

Rules for the protection and periodical examination of water-supply.

23. The Government shall have power to make rules providing for the protection and periodical examination of sources of water-supply in the Province.

24. (1) The Health Officer may at any time by written notice require that the owner of, or any person having control over, any lake, stream, spring, well, tank, reservoir, pond or other source of water-supply which is used for drinking, bathing or washing clothes shall, whether the same is private property or not, within a reasonable time to be specified in the notice, or in any case falling under clause (d) within such time as may be specified in the notice not being less than thirty-six hours from the receipt thereof—

(a) keep and maintain any such source of supply in such manner as the Health Officer may direct; or

(b) cleanse any such source of water-supply from silt, refuse and vegetation; or

(c) protect any such source of water-supply from pollution by surface drainage in such manner as the Health Officer may direct; or

(d) fill in, repair, protect or enclose in such manner as the Health Officer may direct, any such source of water-supply, if for want of sufficient repair, protection or enclosure, such source of water-supply is in his opinion dangerous to the health or safety of the public or of any persons having occasion to use or to pass or approach the same; or

(e) desist from using, and from permitting others to use, for drinking purposes any such source of water-supply if, in the opinion of the Health Officer, the water is unfit for drinking; or

(f) close any such source of water-supply, either temporarily or permanently, or fill up, enclose or fence the same in such manner as the Health Officer considers sufficient to prevent the use thereof for drinking purposes, if in his opinion the water is unfit for drinking; or

(g) drain off or otherwise remove from any such source of water-supply, or from any land or premises or receptacle or reservoir attached or adjacent thereto, any stagnant water which the Health Officer considers to be either injurious to health or offensive to the neighbourhood:

Provided that the provisions of clauses (a) and (b) shall not apply to a stream:

Provided further that a notice shall not be issued under clause (f) unless a notice has first been issued under clause (e) and the source of water-supply in question continues to be used for drinking purposes notwithstanding the issue of such notice, and the Health Officer considers that such use cannot be prevented otherwise than by the issue of a notice under clause (f).

(2) If the owner or person having control as aforesaid fails or neglects to comply with any notice issued under sub-section (1) within the time specified therein, the Health Officer may, if immediate action is necessary to protect the health or safety of any person or persons, at once proceed to execute the work specified in such notice; and all the expenses incurred in respect thereof by the Health Officer shall be paid by the owner of, or person having control over, such source of water-supply, and shall be recoverable as if it were a tax due to the local authority concerned:

Provided that in the case of any private source the water of which is used by the public or by any section of the public as of right, the expenses which have been incurred by the Health Officer or which, in the opinion of the local authority, have been necessarily incurred by the owner of, or person having control over, the source of water-supply shall be paid from the funds of the local authority.

25. (1) Any local authority may with the previous sanction of the Government, and shall, if so directed by them, levy within its area or any part thereof, any tax which may be necessary for providing water-supply in such area or part.

Levy of water-tax and earmarking the proceeds for water-works.

(2) Any tax levied under sub-section (1) may be a new tax levied on such basis and assessed and realized in such manner as may be sanctioned or directed by the Government, or may be a tax or additional tax levied under any head of taxation specified in any law for the time being in force governing the local authority concerned in which case all the provisions of such law relating to the incidence, assessment or realization of a tax under such head or in any manner connected therewith shall be applicable to the tax or additional tax, with such modifications and restrictions, if any, as may be prescribed.

(3) (a) The rates at which any tax may be levied under this section shall be determined by the local authority with the previous sanction of the Government in case the tax is levied by the local authority of its own motion, and by the Government in case the tax is levied at their direction.

(b) The local authority may with the previous sanction of the Government and shall, if so directed by them, alter the rates at which any such tax is to be levied.

(4) (a) Every local authority levying a tax under this section shall earmark the net revenue therefrom for expenditure on the execution, maintenance and improvement of works of water-supply in the local area or part thereof within which it is levied.

(b) Such revenue shall be expended in accordance with such orders as may be issued by the Government in this behalf.

(5) Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to affect the power of the Corporation of Madras to levy a water and drainage tax under section 99 (1) (b) of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919, or of any municipality governed by the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, to levy a water and drainage tax under section 81 (1) (b) of that Act.

26. No owner of any dwelling-house which may be constructed or recon-

New house not to be occupied without adequate water-supply.

structed after the commencement of this Act in any urban local area shall occupy it, or cause or permit it to be occupied, until he has obtained a certificate from an officer of the Public Health Department of the local authority concerned, not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, that there is within the house, or within a reasonable distance therefrom, a supply of wholesome water sufficient for the domestic purposes of the inmates of the house.

CHAPTER IV.

DRAINAGE.

27. (1) Every urban local authority shall, so far as the funds at its disposal may permit, provide and maintain a sufficient and satisfactory system of public drains for the effectual draining of its local area.

Local authority to maintain public drains.

(2) If, in the opinion of the Government, any local area or part thereof should, for any special reason, be provided with a system of public drains or with any other means of drainage, they may direct the local authority to provide or execute, within such time as may be fixed by them in this behalf, such works as may be considered necessary by them.

(3) The local authority shall at all times keep in good repair all drains, cesspools and the like vested in or belonging to them.

28. (1) If any premises are in the opinion of the Health Officer without sufficient means of effectual drainage, he may, by notice, direct the owner of such premises to construct a drain leading therefrom to the nearest public drain or other place set apart by the local authority for the discharge of sewage:

Power of Health Officer to require drains to be constructed.

Provided that—

(a) the cost of constructing that portion of the drain which is situated more than one hundred feet from the said premises, shall be paid from out of the funds of the local authority concerned; and

(b) if, in the opinion of the Health Officer, there is no public drain or other place set apart for the discharge of sewage within a reasonable distance of such premises, he may, by notice, require the owner of the premises to construct—

(i) a closed cesspool, tank, filter or other work of such material, size and description, as he may direct; and

(ii) a house-drain communicating with such closed cesspool, tank, filter or other work.

(2) Where by reason of a local authority changing its system of drainage or undertaking a new system of drainage, it becomes necessary for the owner of any premises to reconstruct or alter any drain, the cost of the reconstruction or alteration of such drain shall be borne wholly by the local authority, or wholly by the owner, or partly by the local authority and partly by the owner, in accordance with such rules as may be prescribed.

29. Where a house-drain belonging to one or more premises has been laid in any private street which is common to more than one premises and the Health Officer considers it desirable that any other premises should be drained into such drain, he may, by notice, require the owner of such premises to connect his house-drain with such first-mentioned drain; and the owner or owners of such first-mentioned drain shall thereupon be bound to permit such connexion to be made:

Provided that no such connexion shall be made—

(a) except upon such terms as may be mutually agreed upon between or among the owners concerned, or

(b) in default of such agreement, except upon such terms as may be laid down by the local authority and in particular, until any payment which may be directed by the local authority to be made to the owner or owners concerned, has been duly made.

30. (1) Drains for the drainage of huts shall be of such size and description, and be constructed of such material, as may be considered by the Health Officer to be practicable, having regard to the circumstances of the locality and the position of the nearest public drain or other place set apart by the local authority for the discharge of sewage.

(2) If the Health Officer considers that a new drain should be constructed for the benefit of the occupants of any hut, he may, by notice, require the owner of the land on which such hut stands, to construct such drain and such owner shall construct such drain, and cause it to be cleansed and repaired to the satisfaction of the Health Officer.

31. For the purpose of efficiently draining any land or building, the Health Officer may, by notice, require the owner of any court, yard, alley, lane, passage or open space—

(a) to pave the same with such material and in such manner as may be approved by the Health Officer and to keep such paving in proper repair; or

(b) to raise the level of such court, yard, alley, lane, passage or open space.

Explanation.—It shall be open to the Health Officer to require that in any case both the measures specified in clauses (a) and (b) of this section shall be taken.

Construction and closure of cesspools.

32. (1) No person shall construct a cesspool—

(a) beneath any part of any building or within fifty feet of any tank, reservoir, water-course or well or within such other distance therefrom as the Health Officer may consider to be practicable having regard to the circumstances of the locality; or

(b) within any local area, or outside such area but within three hundred feet of any reservoir used for the storage of filtered water to be supplied to such area, except upon a site and in a position which have been approved in writing by the Health Officer.

(2) The Health Officer may, at any time, by notice, require any person within whose premises any cesspool is constructed in contravention of sub-section (1) to remove such cesspool or to fill it up with such material as may be approved by him.

33. No owner of any building constructed or reconstructed after the commencement of this Act in any urban local area shall occupy it, or cause or permit it to be occupied, until he has obtained a certificate from the Health Officer that the building has been provided with sufficient means of drainage.

Prohibition of occupation of new building without drains.

Sullage or sewage not to be let out into streets.

34. No person having control over any building or land shall cause or allow—

(a) the water of any sink, sewer, latrine or sanitary convenience, or any other liquid or other matter which is, or is likely to become, offensive, to run or drain into, or to be thrown or put upon, any street or open space or to soak through any external wall; or.

(b) any offensive matter from any sewer, latrine or sanitary convenience, to run, drain or be thrown into a surface drain in any street.

35. No person shall, save as may be generally or specially prescribed, throw, empty, or turn, or suffer or permit to be thrown, emptied or turned or to pass, into any public drain, or into any drain communicating with a public drain—

Injurious refuse not to be discharged into public drain.

(a) any matter likely to injure the drain or to interfere with the free flow of its contents, or to affect prejudicially the treatment and disposal of such contents; or

(b) any liquid being refuse or steam or other liquid which is, either alone or in combination with the contents of the drain, dangerous, or the cause of a nuisance, or prejudicial to health; or

(c) any explosive or inflammable substance.

Pollution of water-courses prohibited.

36. No person shall, save as may be generally or specially prescribed—

(1) put, or cause to be put, or cause to fall or flow or be carried, or knowingly permit to be put or to fall or flow or be carried, into any water-course—

(a) any solid or liquid sewage matter, or

(b) any poisonous, noxious or polluting liquid proceeding from any manufactory or manufacturing process, or

(2) put, or cause to be put, or cause to fall or be carried, or knowingly permit to be put or to fall or be carried, into any water-course, so as, either singly or in combination with other similar acts of the same or any other person, to interfere with the due flow of such water-course, or to pollute the water therein, the solid refuse of any manufactory, manufacturing process or quarry, or any rubbish or cinders, or any other waste or putrid solid matter, or

(3) commit nuisance in or in the neighbourhood of any water-course.

CHAPTER V.

SANITARY CONVENIENCES.

37. Every local authority shall provide and maintain in proper and convenient places a sufficient number of sanitary conveniences for the use of the public and cause all such places to be kept in proper order so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health.

Obligation of local authority to provide public sanitary conveniences.

38. If in any local area any building intended for human habitation is constructed or is reconstructed after being pulled down to or below the ground floor, the owner thereof shall provide such sanitary conveniences and in such positions as the Health Officer may, by notice, require.

New houses to be provided with sanitary conveniences.

39. (1) If any building intended for human habitation is without any sanitary convenience or if, in the opinion of the Health Officer, the sanitary convenience or conveniences provided therein are insufficient, having regard to the number of persons occupying the building, or are inefficient, or are objectionable on sanitary grounds, he may, by notice in writing, require the owner of such building—

Additional sanitary conveniences.

(a) to provide such sanitary conveniences or such additional sanitary conveniences and in such positions, as may be specified in the notice; or

(b) to make such structural or other alterations as may be specified in the notice.

(2) Every owner of the ground on which a group of six or more huts stands shall provide such latrine accommodation, in such positions, and within such time as the Health Officer may, by notice, require, for the use of the inhabitants of such group of huts.

Mode of construction of latrines.

40. (1) All latrines shall—

(a) be so constructed as to screen persons using the same and the filth from the view of persons passing by or residing in the neighbourhood; and

(b) be maintained, repaired, altered and used in accordance with the rules and by-laws made under this Act.

(2) If any latrine opening on any street, whether such latrine be erected before or after the commencement of this Act, is so placed or constructed as to be a nuisance or offensive to public decency, the Health Officer may, by notice in writing, require the owner to remove it or to carry out such improvements therein and within such time as may be specified in the notice.

(3) When any latrine is used in common by the occupiers of two or more premises or by the members of two or more families, no person shall injure or improperly foul any such latrine or anything used in connexion therewith.

CHAPTER VI.

ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES.

41. Without prejudice to the generality of the definition of the expression "nuisance" contained in clause (25) of section 3, the following shall be deemed specifically to be nuisances for the purposes of this Chapter:—

(1) any premises in such a state as to be prejudicial to health or a nuisance;

(2) any pond, pool, ditch, gutter, water-course, water-trough, latrine, cess-pool, drain or ashpit which is so foul or in such a state as to be prejudicial to health or a nuisance;

(3) any animal kept in such a place or manner as to be prejudicial to health or a nuisance;

(4) any accumulation or deposit of refuse or other matter which is prejudicial to health or a nuisance;

(5) any factory (not being a factory governed by the provisions of the Factories Act, 1934), workshop or workplace, which is not provided with sufficient means of ventilation, or in which sufficient ventilation is not maintained, or which is not kept clean or not kept free from noxious effluvia, or which is so over-crowded while work is carried on as to be prejudicial to the health of those employed therein;

(6) any fireplace or furnace which does not as far as practicable consume the smoke arising from the combustible used therein, and which is used for working engines by steam, or in any mill, factory, dyehouse, brewery, bake-house or gaswork, or in any manufacturing or trade process whatsoever;

(7) any chimney sending forth smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance; and

(8) any noise, vibration, dust, cinders, irritating smell or offensive odour produced by a factory, workshop or workplace which is a nuisance to the neighbourhood.

Detection of nuisance.

42. Every urban local authority shall—

(a) cause its local area to be inspected from time to time with a view to ascertain what nuisances exist therein calling for abatement under the powers conferred on such authority by this Act; and

(b) enforce the provisions of this Act in order to abate such nuisances.

43. Any person aggrieved by a nuisance in any local area may give information of the same to the Health Officer or any other officer of the public health establishment of the local authority.

44. If the Health Officer is satisfied, whether upon information given under section 43 or otherwise of the existence of a nuisance, he may, by notice, require the person by whose act, default or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or, if that person cannot be found, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises or continues, to abate the nuisance and to execute such works and take such steps as may be necessary for that purpose:

Provided that—

(a) where the nuisance arises from any defect of a structural character, the notice shall be served on the owner of the premises; and

(b) where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found and it is clear that the nuisance does not arise or continue by the act, default or sufferance of the owner or the occupier of the premises, the Health Officer may himself forthwith do what he considers necessary to abate the nuisance and to prevent a recurrence thereof.

45. If the person on whom a notice to abate a nuisance has been served under section 44 makes default in complying with any of its requirements within the time specified therein, or if the nuisance although abated within such time is, in the opinion of the local authority, likely to recur on the same premises, the local authority may arrange for the execution of any works necessary to abate the nuisance, or to prevent its recurrence, as the case may be, and may recover the cost from such person as if it were a tax due to the local authority.

46. Where a house or other building is, in the opinion of the Health Officer, unfit for human habitation by reason of a nuisance existing therein, he may apply to a Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the third class) to prohibit the use of such house or building for human habitation until it is rendered fit therefor.

47. (1) A local authority may sell any materials which have been removed by it from any premises (including any street), when executing works under this Chapter or otherwise carrying into effect the provisions thereof, if such materials are not claimed and taken away by the owner before the expiration of seven days from the date on which they were removed by the local authority.

(2) A local authority selling any materials under sub-section (1) shall pay the sale-proceeds to the person to whom the materials belonged, after deducting therefrom the amount of any expenses recoverable from him by such authority.

(3) The provisions of this section shall not apply to any offensive matter removed by a local authority under the Act governing such authority.

48. The executive authority or any officer of the Public Health Department of the Government or of the local authority, not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, may enter and inspect any premises for the purpose of enforcing any of the provisions contained in this Chapter:

Provided that—

(a) no such entry shall be made between sunset and sunrise except when a nuisance is caused by anything done or omitted to be done in the premises between sunset and sunrise;

(b) no dwelling house shall be so entered without the consent of the occupier thereof, unless he has received at least twenty-four hours previous notice of the intention to make such entry;

(c) sufficient notice shall in every case be given to enable the inmates of any apartment appropriated to women to withdraw to some part of the premises where their privacy may be preserved; and

(d) due regard shall be paid, so far as may be compatible with the exigencies of the purpose of the entry, to the social and religious usages of the persons residing in the premises.

49. If the local authority or its Health Officer makes default in doing its or his duty under this Act in regard to the abatement of nuisances, the Government may authorize any of their officers to perform such duty and for that purpose to exercise any specified powers of the local authority or of its Health Officer or of both, in the local area concerned and the expenses incurred by such officers shall be met from the funds of the local authority.

50. If a nuisance under this Act within, or affecting any part of, a local area, appears to be wholly or partly caused by some act or default committed or taking place outside such local area, the local authority may take or cause to be taken against any person in respect of such act or default any proceedings in relation to nuisances, authorized by this Act in the like cases and with the like incidents and consequences as if the act or default were committed or took place wholly within such local area.

51. (1) No person shall deposit, or cause or suffer any member of his family or household to deposit, any carcasses of animals, any dust, dirt, dung, ashes or refuse or filth of any kind, any animal matter, any broken glass, earthenware or other rubbish, or any other thing which is or may be a nuisance, in any street or in any arch under a street, or in any drain beside a street, or on any open space (not being private property); or on any quay, jetty or landing place, or on any part of the sea-shore, or on the bank of any water-course, except in such receptacles as may be provided or at such places, in such manner and at such hours, as may be fixed by the Health Officer.

(2) No person shall ease himself, or cause, permit or suffer any member of his family or household to ease himself, in any such street, arch, drain, open space, quay, jetty, landing place, sea-shore or bank aforesaid.

(3) Any person easing himself in any private open space shall immediately cover up the excreta with earth.

CHAPTER VII.

PREVENTION, NOTIFICATION AND TREATMENT OF DISEASES.

Part I.

Infectious diseases in general.

52. For the purposes of this Part, 'infectious disease' means (a) acute influenzal pneumonia, (b) anthrax, (c) cerebro-spinal fever, (d) chickenpox, (e) cholera, (f) diphtheria, (g) enteric fever, (h) leprosy, (i) measles, (j) plague, (k) rabies, (l) relapsing fever, (m) scarlet fever, (n) smallpox, (o) tuberculosis, (p) typhus or (q) any other disease which the Government may from time to time, by notification declare to be an infectious disease either generally throughout the Province or in such part or parts thereof as may be specified in the notification.

53. (1) In the event of the prevalence or threatened outbreak of any infectious disease in any local area, or of any unusual mortality therein, the local authority concerned shall provide such additional staff, medicines, appliances, equipment and other things as may, in the opinion of the Health Officer, be necessary for the treatment of such infectious disease and preventing it from spreading, or for investigating the cause of such mortality, and preventing it, as the case may be:

Provided that, if the local authority does not agree with the opinion of the Health Officer, the matter shall be referred to the Director of Public Health whose decision shall be final.

(2) In the event aforesaid, if the Health Officer considers that immediate action is necessary in the interests of public health, he may, notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), appoint such additional staff and obtain such medicines, appliances, equipment and other things as may be necessary; and the expenses incurred in respect thereof shall be met from the funds of the local authority.

(3) Every appointment made under sub-section (2) shall be reported forthwith to the executive authority and by such authority to the local authority concerned at its next meeting.

54. (1) (a) The local authority may, and if so required by the Government shall, provide or cause to be provided, hospitals, wards or other places for the reception and treatment of persons suffering from infectious diseases.

(b) For the purpose of the reception and treatment of such persons a local authority may—

- (i) itself build such hospitals, wards or places of reception, or
- (ii) contract for the use of any such hospital or part of a hospital or place of reception, or
- (iii) enter into an agreement with any person having the management of any such hospital, for the reception and treatment therein of persons suffering from infectious diseases.

(c) For the purpose aforesaid, two or more local authorities may in combination provide a common hospital or place of reception.

(2) A local authority shall not be deemed to have discharged its obligation under sub-section (1) unless the hospitals, wards or places of reception in question are maintained in accordance with such general or special orders as may from time to time be issued by the Director of Public Health.

55. A local authority may, and if so required by the Director of Public Health shall, -

(a) provide and maintain suitable conveyances, with sufficient attendants and other requisites, for the free carriage of persons suffering from any infectious disease; and

(b) provide proper places and apparatus and establishment, for the disinfection of conveyances, clothing, bedding or other articles which have been exposed to infection; and when any conveyances, clothing, bedding or articles are brought to any such place for disinfection, may cause them, at its discretion, to be disinfected, either free of charge, or on payment of such fee as it may fix.

56. Every medical practitioner who in the course of his practice becomes cognizant of the existence of any case of enteric fever or tuberculosis in any private or public dwelling other than a public hospital shall, if the case has not been already reported, give information of the same with the least practicable delay—

(a) in municipal areas, to the executive authority, the Health Officer or a Sanitary Inspector; and

(b) in non-municipal areas, to the Health Officer, a Health or Sanitary Inspector or the village headman.

Explanation.—In this section, 'medical practitioner' includes a hakim or vaidya, whether registered or not.

57. (1) If it appears to the Health Officer that the water in any tank, well or other place, if used for drinking or any other domestic purpose, is likely to engender or cause the spread of any infectious disease, he may, by public notice, prohibit the removal or use of the said water generally or for any specified domestic purpose.

(2) No person shall remove or use any water in respect of which any such notice has been issued in contravention of the terms thereof.

58. (1) If it appears to the Health Officer that any person is suffering from an infectious disease, and that such person—

(a) (i) is without proper lodging or accommodation, or
(ii) is lodged in a place occupied by more than one family, or
(iii) is without medical supervision directed to the prevention of the spread of the disease, or

(iv) is in a place where his presence is a danger to the people in the neighbourhood; and

(b) should be removed to a hospital or other place at which patients suffering from such disease are received for treatment, the Health Officer may remove such person or cause him to be removed to such hospital or place.

(2) If any woman who, according to custom, does not appear in public, is removed to any such hospital or place—

(i) the removal shall be effected in such a way as to preserve her privacy; and

(ii) special accommodation in accordance with the custom aforesaid shall be provided for her in such hospital or place.

(3) No person shall leave, or be taken away from, any hospital or other place referred to in sub-section (1) without the permission of the medical officer-in-charge or of the Health Officer.

(4) Whoever—

(a) obstructs the removal of any person to any hospital or other place under sub-section (1), or

(b) leaves, or takes away any person from, any such hospital or place in contravention of sub-section (3), shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

59. (1) No person who knows that he is suffering from an infectious disease not specified in Part II of this Chapter shall expose other persons to the risk of infection by his presence or conduct in—

- (a) any market, theatre or other place of entertainment or assembly, or
- (b) any school, college, play-ground or such other place, or
- (c) any hotel, hostel, boarding house, choultry, rest-house, or club, or
- (d) any factory or shop.

Explanation.—A person shall be deemed to know that he is suffering from an infectious disease within the meaning of this sub-section if he has been informed by the Health Officer or any other officer of the Public Health Department of the Government or of a local authority, not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, or a medical practitioner registered under the Madras Medical Registration Act, 1914, that he is so suffering.

(2) No person who has the care of a person whom he knows to be suffering from an infectious disease not specified in Part II of this Chapter shall cause or permit that person to expose others to the risk of infection by his presence or conduct in any place referred to in sub-section (1).

Infected persons not to engage in certain trades and occupations. 60. No person shall, while suffering from, or in circumstances in which he is likely to spread, any infectious disease—

(a) make, carry or offer for sale, or take any part in the business of making, carrying or offering for sale, any article of food for human consumption; or

(b) engage in any other occupation without a special permit from the Health Officer of the local authority concerned or otherwise than in accordance with the conditions specified therein.

61. If, in any local area, any infectious disease transmissible to man breaks out or is in the opinion of the Health Officer likely to break out, amongst cattle, or other animals, it shall be the duty of the Health Officer to recommend to the local authority the adoption of such measures as he may deem necessary for suppressing or mitigating the disease or for preventing the outbreak or threatened outbreak thereof; and the local authority shall consider such recommendations and take such action thereon as to it may seem suitable.

Part II.

Notified Infectious Diseases.

Notified diseases.

62. In this Part, notified disease means,

- (a) cerebro-spinal fever,
- (b) chicken-pox,
- (c) cholera,
- (d) diphtheria,
- (e) leprosy,
- (f) measles,
- (g) plague,
- (h) rabies,
- (i) scarlet fever,
- (j) smallpox,
- (k) typhus, or

(l) any other disease which the Government may from time to time by notification declare to be a notified disease for the purposes of this Part either generally throughout the Province or in such part or parts thereof as may be specified in the notification.

63. (1) The Health Officer may, in cases of emergency, with the sanction of the District Collector, enter upon, occupy and use, or depute any person to enter upon, occupy and use, without having recourse to the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, any building or place which, in the opinion of the Health Officer, is required, and is suitable for any purposes connected with the prevention or control of infection from a notified disease:

Provided that, if the building or place is occupied, notice shall be given in writing to the occupant, or be conspicuously affixed on such building or place, not less than thirty-six hours before it is entered upon.

(2) The owner or lessee of such building or place shall be entitled to compensation for any damage or expenses incurred and to a reasonable rent for the period during which it had been occupied or used for any of the purposes referred to in sub-section (1). Such compensation and rent shall be fixed by the District Collector.

(3) The Health Officer shall, when any such building or place ceases to be occupied or used for any of the purposes aforesaid, cause it to be thoroughly disinfected and cleansed.

Information regarding notified disease. 64. Every medical practitioner who, in the course of his practice, becomes cognizant of the existence of any notified disease in any private or public dwelling other than a public hospital and every manager of any factory or public building, every keeper of a lodging house, every head of a family and every owner or occupier of a house, who knows or has reason to believe that any person in any premises under his management, control or occupation is suffering from, or has died of, a notified disease, shall, if the case has not been already reported, give information of the same with the least practicable delay—

(a) in municipal areas, to the executive authority, the Health Officer or a Sanitary Inspector, and

(b) in non-municipal areas, to the Health Officer, a Health or Sanitary Inspector or the village headman.

Explanation.—In this section, 'medical practitioner' includes a hakim or vaidya, whether registered or not.

Power of entry of local officers to take preventive measures.

65. (1) The Health Officer or any person authorized by him in this behalf may—

(a) at all reasonable hours, inspect with or without assistants any place in which any notified disease is reported or suspected to exist, without notice in the case of factories, workshops, workplaces, offices, business places and the like and after giving such notice as may appear to him reasonable in other cases, including dwelling houses; and

(b) take such measures as he may consider necessary to prevent the spread of such disease beyond such place.

(2) The powers conferred by sub-section (1) on the Health Officer may, in municipal areas, be exercised also by the executive authority or any person authorized by such authority.

66. (1) If it appears to the Health Officer that the destruction of any hut or shed is necessary to prevent the spread of any notified disease, he may, after giving to the owner and the occupier of such hut or shed such previous notice of his intention as may in the circumstances of the case appear to him reasonable, take measures for having such hut or shed and all the materials thereof destroyed.

(2) Such compensation as the local authority may consider reasonable, shall be paid to any person who in its opinion sustains loss by the destruction of any hut or shed under the powers conferred by sub-section (1); but save as provided in this sub-section, no claim for compensation shall lie for any loss or damage caused by any exercise of the powers aforesaid.

67. If, on the application of the Health Officer, a Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the third class) is satisfied that it is necessary in the interests of public health that a lodging house or any place where articles of food are sold, or prepared, stored, or exposed for sale, or distributed, should be closed on account of the existence or recent occurrence in such lodging house or place of a case of notified disease, the Magistrate may, by order, direct it to be closed until the expiry of such period as may be specified in the order or until it is certified by the Health Officer to be free from infection.

Infected clothes not to be sent to laundry.

68. No person shall—

(1) send or take to any laundry or public wash-house or any public water-course, tank or well, for the purpose of being washed, or to any place for the purpose of being cleaned, any clothing, bedding or other article which he knows to have been exposed to infection from any notified disease, unless such article has been disinfected by, or to the satisfaction of, the Health Officer, or a registered medical practitioner, or unless under instructions from such a person, it is sent with proper precautions to a laundry for the purpose of disinfection with notice that it has been exposed to infection; or

(2) place or cause or permit to be placed in any dust-bin or other receptacle for the deposit of refuse any matter which he knows to have been exposed to infection from a notified disease and which has not been disinfected.

Infected persons not to use public conveyance. 69. (1) No person who knows that he is suffering from a notified disease shall—

(a) enter any public conveyance used for the conveyance of passengers at separate fares or

(b) enter any other public conveyance, without previously notifying the owner, driver or conductor thereof that he is so suffering.

(2) No person having the care of a person whom he knows to be suffering from a notified disease shall permit that person to be carried—

(a) in any public conveyance used for the conveyance of passengers at separate fares, or

(b) in any other public conveyance, without previously notifying the owner, driver or conductor thereof that the person is so suffering.

(3) The owner, driver, or conductor of a public conveyance used for the conveyance of passengers at separate fares shall not convey therein a person whom he knows to be suffering from a notified disease, at any time when a passenger not suffering from such disease is being conveyed therein:

Provided that a person suffering from a notified disease may be conveyed in the public conveyance aforesaid, in such cases of emergency and subject to such restrictions and safeguards as may be notified by the Government.

(4) The owner or driver of any other public conveyance may refuse to convey therein any person suffering from a notified disease until he has been paid a sum sufficient to cover any loss and expense which will be incurred by reason of the provisions of the next succeeding sub-section.

(5) If a person suffering from a notified disease is conveyed in a public conveyance, the person in charge thereof shall as soon as practicable give notice to the Health Officer of the local area in which the conveyance is usually kept and before permitting any other person to enter the conveyance shall cause it to be disinfected.

(6) The local authority when so requested by the person in charge of a public conveyance in which a person suffering from a notified disease has been conveyed shall provide for its disinfection.

70. No person shall, without a special permit from the Health Officer, let or sub-let, or permit or suffer any prospective tenant to enter, a building in which he knows or has reason to know that a person has been suffering from a notified disease, within the three months immediately preceding.

Prohibition of the exposure of other persons to infection. 71. (1) No person who knows that he is suffering from a notified disease shall expose other persons to the risk of infection by his presence or conduct in—

(a) any street or public place, or

(b) any market, theatre or other place of entertainment or assembly, or

- (c) any school, college, play-ground or such other place, or
- (d) any hotel, hostel, boarding house, choultry, rest-house, or club, or
- (e) any factory or shop.

Explanation.—A person shall be deemed to know that he is suffering from a notified disease within the meaning of this sub-section if he has been informed by the Health Officer or any other officer of the Public Health Department of the Government or of a local authority, not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, or a medical practitioner registered under the Madras Medical Registration Act, 1914, that he is so suffering.

(2) No person who has the care of a person whom he knows to be suffering from a notified disease shall cause or permit that person to expose others to the risk of infection by his presence or conduct in any place referred to in sub-section (1).

72. (1) If a case of notified disease occurs on any premises, the Health Officer may, whether the person suffering from the disease has been removed from the premises or not, make an order forbidding any work to which this section applies, to be given out to any person living or working on those premises or in such part thereof as may be specified in the order, and any order so made may be served on the occupier of the factory from which the work is given out or on any contractor employed by such occupier.

(2) An order under this section may be expressed to be operative for a specified time or until the premises or any part thereof specified in the order have been disinfected to the satisfaction of the Health Officer, or may be expressed to be inoperative so long as any other reasonable precautions specified in the order are taken.

(3) This section applies to the making, cleaning, washing, altering, ornamenting, finishing or repairing of wearing apparel and any work incidental thereto, and to such other classes of work as may from time to time be notified by the Director of Public Health.

73. No person who knows that he is suffering from a notified disease shall take any book, or cause any book to be taken for his use, or use any book taken, from any public or circulating library.

74. (1) No person having the charge or control of the body of any person who has died while suffering from a notified disease shall permit or suffer persons to come unnecessarily into contact with, or proximity to, the body.

(2) No person shall, without the sanction in writing of an officer of the Public Health Department of the Government or of the local authority concerned, not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, retain in any premises (elsewhere than in a public mortuary) for more than twelve hours the body of any person who has died while suffering from any notified disease.

(3) (a) If any such body (not being a body kept in a mortuary) remains undisposed of for more than twelve hours without the sanction referred to in sub-section (2), or if the dead body of any person is retained in any building so as to endanger the health of the inmates of such building, or of any adjoining or neighbouring building, any Magistrate may, on the application of any officer referred to in sub-section (2), order the body to be removed and disposed of within a specified time.

(b) A Magistrate may, in the case of the body of a person who has died while suffering from a notified disease, or in any other case in which he considers the immediate disposal of the body necessary, direct the body to be so disposed of, unless the friends or the relatives of the deceased undertake the disposal of the body within a time specified in the order.

(c) The expenses of the removal and disposal of any body under clause (a) or clause (b) shall be borne by the local authority; but such expenses may be recovered, as if it were a tax due to it, by the local authority from any person who would have been legally liable therefor but for such removal and disposal, unless in the opinion of the local authority he is too poor to do so.

(4) (a) If any person dies in a hospital or a place of temporary accommodation for the sick, while suffering from a notified disease, and the Health Officer certifies that in his opinion it is desirable, in order to prevent the spread of infection, that the body should not be removed from such hospital or place except for the purpose of being taken direct to a burial or burning ground or a crematorium for being forthwith buried or cremated, no person shall remove the body from the hospital or place except for such a purpose.

(b) When the body is removed for the purpose aforesaid, it shall forthwith be taken direct to a burial or burning ground or a crematorium, and there buried or cremated with the least practicable delay.

(5) Without the permission of the Health Officer or a Magistrate, no person shall cause or permit to be carried in a public conveyance the dead body of any person who has died while suffering from a notified disease.

75. In the event of the prevalence of a notified disease in any local area, on the application of the Health Officer, any Magistrate, not being a Magistrate of the third class, having local jurisdiction shall have power to prohibit either generally, or by special order in any individual case, assemblages consisting of any number of persons exceeding fifty, in any place whether public or private, or in any circumstances, or for any purpose, if in his opinion such assemblages in such place, in such circumstances, or for such purpose, would be likely to become a means of spreading the disease or of rendering it more virulent.

Power of Magistrate to prohibit an assembly of fifty or more persons.

76. (1) In the event of the prevalence or threatened outbreak of a notified disease in any local area, the Government may, by notification—

(a) declare that such local area is visited or threatened with an outbreak of notified disease, and

(b) confer on the Health Officer or any other officer of the local authority concerned, or on any officer of the Government, all or any of the powers specified in sub-section (2).

(2) The powers which may be conferred under sub-section (1) are—

(a) power to order the evacuation of infected houses and houses adjoining them or in their neighbourhood, or generally of all houses in an infected locality;

(b) power to make vaccination and preventive inoculations compulsory subject to the provisions of sub-section (3);

(c) power to direct—

(i) that persons arriving from places outside the local area, or residing in any building adjacent to, or in the neighbourhood of, an infected building, shall be examined by any specified medical officer or by any one of a specified class of medical officers;

(ii) that the clothing, bedding or other articles belonging to such persons shall be disinfected, if there is reason to suspect that they have been exposed to infection; and

(iii) that any such person shall give his address and present himself daily for medical examination at a specified time and place, for a period not exceeding ten days;

(d) power to take such measures as may be necessary—

(i) in respect of, or in relation to, persons exposed to infection from any notified disease, or likely to infect other persons with any such disease, and

(ii) in respect of, or in relation to, articles exposed to infection from any notified disease, or likely to infect persons with any such disease, including, in case (i) the placing of restrictions on the movements of such persons, and in case (ii), the destruction of such articles and the placing of restrictions on their export from, import into, or transport within, the local area;

(e) power to direct that at any place within or outside the local area, any consignment of grain exported from, or imported into, such area by rail, road or otherwise, shall be examined and, if necessary, unloaded and disinfected in any specified manner; and

(f) power to close all or any existing markets and to appoint special places where markets may be held.

(3) (a) If any person who, or a child in whose care, is sought to be vaccinated or inoculated in pursuance of the power referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (2), declares before a Magistrate specially empowered by the Government in this behalf that as a result of a careful inquiry into the subject, he believes that such vaccination or inoculation will be injurious to his health or the health of the child, as the case may be, the Magistrate may, after giving notice to the Health Officer and hearing any representations made by him or on his behalf, exempt such person or child from vaccination or inoculation, on condition of the person aforesaid undertaking to subject himself and the members of his family to isolation of such description and for such period and to such further restrictions, if any, as may be directed by the Magistrate:

Provided that any exemption granted under this clause shall cease to have effect after a conviction under clause (b) and no exemption shall be granted to any person who has been so convicted.

(b) Any person who commits a breach of any undertaking given by him under clause (a) shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine, or with both.

(4) Any officer on whom powers are conferred by a notification under sub-section (1) shall, subject to such limitations, restrictions and conditions, if any, as the Government may in the same or in any subsequent notification impose, exercise every power so conferred on him until it is withdrawn by notification.

(5) The local authority may, in its discretion, give compensation to any person who in its opinion has sustained substantial loss by the destruction of any property under the powers conferred by this section; but save as provided in this sub-section, no claim for compensation shall lie for any loss or damage caused by any exercise of the powers aforesaid.

77. (1) The occupier of every premises, or if the premises are unoccupied, the owner thereof, shall take such steps as may be reasonably practicable for the destruction of rats, mice, etc. and other animals susceptible to plague infesting such premises.

(2) Where the Health Officer is of opinion that the occupier or owner of any premises has failed to fulfil the obligation laid on him by sub-section (1), he may either—

(a) serve a notice on such occupier or owner, requiring him to take such steps and within such time as may be specified in the notice, or

(b) enter upon such premises and take such steps as may be necessary for the purpose of destroying the rats, mice and other animals susceptible to plague infesting the same, after giving not less than twenty-four hours previous notice to such occupier or owner:

(3) Any expenses incurred under clause (b) of sub-section (2) may be recovered by the local authority concerned from the occupier or owner, as the case may be, as if it were a tax due from him to the local authority.

Part III.

Venereal diseases.

Provision for treatment of venereal disease by local authorities.

78. (1) A local authority may, and if so required by the Government shall, make such arrangements in its local area as may be directed by the Government for—

(a) the free diagnosis and treatment of persons suffering, or suspected to suffer, from venereal diseases; and

(b) the prevention of infection from such diseases.

(2) The local authority may, for the purpose mentioned in sub-section (1), enter into a contract—

(a) with any other local authority, or

(b) with a hospital or medical institution recognized by the Government in this behalf, or

(c) with the sanction of the Government, with any medical practitioner registered under the Madras Medical Registration Act, 1914.

Patient to be instructed in methods of prevention of the spread of venereal disease.

79. Every physician or other person treating, or examining with a view to treatment, a person having a venereal disease shall, at the first visit—

(a) impress upon such person the necessity for treatment until the cure is effected;

(b) instruct him in regard to the measures necessary for preventing the spread of the disease; and

(c) furnish him with such other information relating to the disease as may be provided by the Director of Public Health.

80. Every medical practitioner registered under the Madras Medical Registration Act, 1914, and included in a panel published by the Government for the purposes of this section shall be bound, at the instance of a person desirous of obtaining a certificate under this section and on payment of a fee of five rupees, to examine such person, and if he finds that that such person is not suffering from a venereal disease, or has been cured thereof, to furnish to such person a certificate to that effect in the prescribed form.

Certain medical practitioners to certify as to freedom from venereal disease.

Part IV.

Power to make rules.

81 The Government shall have power to make such rules as they deem fit for the treatment of persons affected with any epidemic, endemic or infectious disease and for preventing the spread of such diseases and the rules may declare by what authority or authorities such rules shall be enforced and executed.

Rules for the prevention, treatment and control of certain diseases.

CHAPTER VIII.

MATERNITY AND CHILD-WELFARE.

Local authority to carry out maternity and child-welfare measures.

82. Every Local authority shall be bound to carry out such measures pertaining to maternity and child-welfare as may be prescribed.

CHAPTER IX.

MOSQUITO CONTROL.

Prohibition of mosquito breeding in collections of water.

83. (1) If the provisions of this section have been extended to any local area, no person or local authority shall, after such extension—

(a) have, keep, or maintain within such area any collection of standing or flowing water in which mosquitoes breed or are likely to breed, or

(b) cause, permit, or suffer any water within such area to form a collection in which mosquitoes breed or are likely to breed, unless such collection has been so treated as effectively to prevent such breeding

Explanation.—Troughs used for cattle and in frequent use shall not, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to be collections of water in which mosquitoes breed or are likely to breed.

(2) The natural presence of mosquito larvæ in any standing or flowing water shall be evidence that mosquitoes are breeding in such water.

84. (1) The Health Officer may, by notice in writing, require the owner or the occupier of any place containing any collection of standing or flowing water in which mosquitoes breed or are likely to breed, within such time as may be specified in the notice, not being less than twenty-four hours, to take such measures with respect to the same, or to treat the same by such physical, chemical or biological method, being measures or a method, approved by the Director of Public Health, as the Health Officer may consider suitable in the circumstances.

(2) If a notice under sub-section (1) is served on the occupier, he shall, in the absence of a contract, expressed or implied, to the contrary, be entitled to recover from the owner the reasonable expenses incurred by him in taking the measures or adopting the method of treatment, specified in the notice, and may deduct the amount of such expenses from the rent which is then, or which may thereafter be, due from him to the owner.

85. If the person on whom a notice is served under section 84 fails or refuses to take the measures, or adopt the method of treatment, specified in such notice within the time specified therein, the Health Officer may himself take such measures or adopt such treatment and recover the cost of doing so from the owner or occupier of the property, as the case may be, in the same manner as if it were a property tax.

86. Where, with the object of preventing the breeding of mosquitoes in any land or building, the Government or any local authority, or the owner or occupier at the instance of the Government or any local authority, has constructed any works in such land or building, the owner for the time being as well as the occupier for the time being of such land or building shall prevent its being used in any manner which causes, or is likely to cause, the deterioration of such works, or which impairs, or is likely to impair, their efficiency.

87. (1) No person shall, without the consent of the Health Officer, interfere with, injure, destroy or render useless, any work executed or any material or thing placed in, under, or upon any land or building, by or under the Protection of anti-mosquito works.

Prohibition of interference with such works.

orders of the Health Officer with the object of preventing the breeding of mosquitoes therein.

(2) If the provisions of sub-section (1) are contravened by any person, the Health Officer may re-execute the work or replace the materials or things, as the case may be, and the cost of doing so shall be recovered from such person in the same manner as if it were a property tax.

88. For the purpose of enforcing the provisions contained in this Chapter, the Health Officer or any of his subordinates not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector may, at all reasonable times, after giving such notice in writing as may appear to him reasonable, enter and inspect any land or building within his jurisdiction; and the occupier or the owner, as the case may be, of such land or building, shall give all facilities necessary for such entry and inspection, and supply all such information as may be required of him for the purpose aforesaid.

CHAPTER X.

SANITATION AND BUILDINGS.

Part I.

Residential Areas.

89. (1) Every urban local authority shall, within one year from the commencement of this Act or within such further time as the Government may allow in the case of any such authority, notify in the prescribed manner the localities, divisions, wards, streets or portions of streets in its local area which shall be reserved for residential purposes.

(2) An urban local authority may, at any time subsequent to the issue of a notification under sub-section (1), notify additional localities, divisions, wards, streets or portions of streets, as areas which shall be reserved for residential purposes.

(3) A notification issued under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) may declare that operations in any factory, workshop or workplace in existence at the time when it comes into force, or that the continuance of any offensive trade carried on by any person at such time, shall be subject to such restrictions, limitations and conditions as may be specified in the notification.

Approval of Director of Public Health and of Director of Town-Planning to be obtained for notification.

90. (1) Before issuing a notification under section 89, the local authority shall—

(a) obtain the approval both of the Director of Public Health and of the Director of Town-Planning, in regard to—

(i) the suitability of the areas proposed to be reserved for residential purposes; and

(ii) the restrictions, limitations and conditions, if any, proposed to be imposed under sub-section (3) of section 89; and

(b) publish in the prescribed manner for general information the situation and limits of the areas proposed to be reserved for residential purposes and the restrictions, limitations and conditions, if any, proposed to be imposed under sub-section (3) of section 89, and consider all objections received by it within six weeks of such publication.

(2) In the event of a difference of opinion between the local authority and the Director of Public Health or the Director of Town-Planning the matter shall be referred to the Government whose decision shall be final.

91. Any person aggrieved by the issue of a notification under section 89, may appeal to the Government whose decision shall be final.

Appeal against notification.

92. Upon the issue of a notification under section 89, the following consequences shall ensue, namely:—

(a) The construction or establishment of any new factory, workshop or workplace, or the carrying on of any new offensive trade in the areas specified in the notification shall be absolutely prohibited.

(b) In the case of any factory, workshop or workplace in existence at the time when the notification comes into force or of any offensive trade in existence at such time, the restrictions, limitations and conditions, if any, specified in the notification, shall be observed in the areas aforesaid.

Explanation (1).—If work in any factory, workshop, or workplace existing at the time when the notification under section 89 comes into force or any offensive trade carried on by any person at such time ceases to be carried on for a continuous period of not less than one year, the resumption of work in such factory, workshop, or workplace or of such offensive trade, as the case may be, shall, unless the Government otherwise order, be deemed to be absolutely prohibited under clause (a).

Explanation (2).—In the case referred to in Explanation (1), where the period exceeds six months but does not extend to one year, work in the factory, workshop or workplace or the offensive trade, as the case may be, shall not be resumed without the written permission of the Health Officer unless the Government otherwise order.

93. The Government may, by notification, direct that the provisions of sections 89 to 92 shall apply to any non-urban local authority specified in such notification; and thereupon, the provisions of those sections shall apply to such authority as if it were an urban local authority and as if the reference to the commencement of this Act in sub-section (1) of section 89 were a reference to the date of publication of the notification under this section.

Part II.

Control over Insanitary Buildings.

94. (1) No person shall erect a new building on any ground which has been filled up with faecal or offensive vegetable or offensive animal matter or upon which any such matter has been deposited, unless and until the Health Officer certifies that such matter has been properly removed by excavation or otherwise, or has become or been rendered innocuous.

(2) Against the refusal of the Health Officer to issue a certificate under sub-section (1), an appeal shall lie to the Government whose decision shall be final.

95. (1) If any court, yard or passage which is used in common by the occupants of two or more buildings, but is not a public street, is not regularly swept and kept clean and free from rubbish or other accumulation to the satisfaction of the Health Officer, he may cause such court, yard or passage to be swept and cleansed.

(2) The local authority may recover any expenses reasonably incurred by the Health Officer under sub-section 1 from the occupants of the buildings which front or abut on the court or yard, or to which the passage affords access, in such proportions as may be determined by the Health Officer.

96. (1) If any dwelling house or portion thereof appears to the Health Officer to be unfit for the purpose of human habitation, he may in cases not falling under section 46, apply to the local authority to prohibit the use thereof for such purpose, and such authority shall make an order prohibiting the use of such dwelling house or portion for human habitation until in the opinion of the Health Officer it is rendered fit therefor:

Provided that before making an order under this sub-section, the local authority shall give the owner and the occupier or occupiers, if any, concerned a reasonable opportunity of showing cause why it should not be made.

(2) When any order has been made under sub-section (1), the executive authority shall cause a copy of the order to be communicated to the owner as well as to every occupier concerned; and every such occupier shall be bound to cease to inhabit the dwelling house or portion thereof, as the case may be, within thirty days after the communication of the order to him.

(3) The owner of any dwelling house or portion of a dwelling house in respect of which an order under sub-section (1) is in force, shall not let or occupy, or permit to be let or occupied, such dwelling house or portion, or any part thereof, as a human habitation.

97. Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law or provision having the force of law, for the time being in force, no person shall, without the previous permission of the Health Officer, erect any back-to-back houses intended to be used as dwelling houses and any such house the erection of which is begun after the commencement of this Act without such permission shall be deemed to be unfit for human habitation within the meaning of section 96.

Part III.

Abatement of Overcrowding.

Definitions.

98. In this Part—

(1) "tenement" means a dwelling house and includes—

(a) any part of a dwelling house which is capable of separate occupation; and

(b) a students' hostel under public or recognized control, but does not include a dwelling house or part of a dwelling house occupied by the owner thereof; and

(2) "landlord" means the immediate landlord of the occupier or occupiers of a tenement.

Duties of landlord.

99. A landlord of a tenement—

(a) shall maintain it in a habitable condition; and

(b) except temporarily on occasions such as marriages and the like, shall not cause or permit the tenement to be overcrowded:

Provided that no proceedings shall be instituted against the landlord in respect of any infringement by him of the provisions of this section, unless a notice in writing that the tenement is not in a habitable condition or that it is overcrowded, has been served upon the landlord or his agent by the Health Officer, and the landlord fails within such time as may be specified in such notice to take such steps as may be reasonably open to him for putting the tenement in a habitable condition or for securing the abatement of the overcrowding therein, as the case may be, including, if necessary, the taking of legal proceedings for possession of the tenement.

100. The Government shall have power to make rules for determining—

(a) whether a tenement or any class of tenements is or is not maintained in a habitable condition within the meaning of section 99; and

(b) whether a tenement or any class of tenements is or is not overcrowded within the meaning of that section.

CHAPTER XI.

LODGING HOUSES.

101. No person shall keep a lodging house or receive a lodger therein unless he is registered as the keeper thereof under this Act:
 Lodging houses to be registered.

Provided that a person who immediately before the commencement of this Act was keeping a lodging house shall, for a period of three months after such commencement, be deemed to have been registered as the keeper thereof.

102. Every executive authority shall keep a register in which shall be entered—Register of lodging houses.

(a) the full name and the place of residence of every person registered as the keeper of a lodging house;

(b) the situation of every such lodging house;

(c) the number of persons authorized to be received in the lodging house; and

(d) the full names and the places of residence of any persons who are to act as deputies of the keeper of the lodging house.

103. (1) An executive authority on receiving from any person an application for registration, or for the renewal of his registration, as a keeper of a lodging house, and on payment by him of such fee, if any, as may be prescribed for the purpose, shall register the applicant in respect of the lodging house named in the application or renew his registration in respect thereof and issue to him a certificate of registration or of renewal of registration:

Provided that the executive authority—

(a) shall not register an applicant until the Health Officer has inspected the premises named in the application and has recommended such registration; and

(b) may refuse to register, or to renew the registration of, an applicant if he is satisfied that—

(i) the applicant or any person employed or proposed to be employed by the applicant at the lodging house as a deputy or otherwise is not a fit person, whether by reason of age or otherwise, to keep or to be employed at a lodging house; or

(ii) the premises are not suitable for use as a lodging house or are not as regards sanitation and water-supply and in other respects including means of escape in case of fire, suitably equipped for use as such; or

(iii) the use of the premises as a lodging house is likely to occasion inconvenience or annoyance to persons residing in the neighbourhood.

(2) The registration, or the renewal of the registration, of a person as a keeper of a lodging house shall expire at the end of the year for which it is granted unless, for special reasons, the executive authority considers that it should expire at an earlier date, when it shall expire at such earlier date which shall be specified in the certificate of registration or of renewal of registration.

(3) If an executive authority refuses to grant or renew registration under this section, he shall deliver to the applicant a statement in writing of the grounds on which his application is refused.

(4) If at any time, a person registered as the keeper of a lodging house applies for the removal from the register of the name of any person entered therein as a deputy of the keeper, or for the insertion therein of the name of any other person, being a person approved by the executive authority, whom the keeper proposes to employ as a deputy, the executive authority shall alter the register accordingly and make any consequential alterations in the certificate of registration.

104. A person aggrieved by the refusal of an executive authority to grant or renew registration under section 103 may appeal to the local authority.

Rules for the upkeep and maintenance of lodging houses.

105. The Government shall have power to make rules—

(a) for fixing the number of persons who may be received into a lodging house and for the separate accommodation of the sexes therein;

(b) for promoting cleanliness and ventilation in lodging houses and requiring the walls and ceilings thereof to be lime-washed or treated with some other suitable preparation, at specified intervals;

(c) with respect to the taking of precautions when any case of infectious disease occurs in a lodging house; and

(d) generally for the well-ordering of lodging houses.

106. (1) The keeper of a lodging house shall, if so required by the executive authority, affix, and keep affixed and undefaced and legible, a notice with the words "Registered lodging house" in some conspicuous place on the outside of the house.

(2) The keeper of a lodging house and every other person having the care or taking part in the management thereof shall at all times allow the executive authority, the Health Officer or any other person authorized by the executive authority or Health Officer in this behalf, to have free access to all parts of the house.

107. When the registered keeper of a lodging house is convicted of any offence under this Chapter or under section 64 or a rule or by-law applicable to him made under this Act, the Court by which he is convicted may cancel his registration as a lodging house-keeper and may order that he be disqualified for such period as the Court thinks fit for being again registered as such keeper.

CHAPTER XII.

FOOD CONTROL.

Prohibition of sale of unsound food.

108. (1) No person shall—

(a) sell, expose or hawk about for sale, or keep, store or prepare for sale, any animal intended for human consumption which is diseased, or the flesh of any animal which has died on account of natural causes; or

(b) sell, expose or hawk about for sale, or keep, store, manufacture or prepare for sale, any food or drug intended for human consumption which is unfit for such purpose or is unwholesome.

(2) In any prosecution under sub-section (1), the Court shall, unless and until the contrary is proved, presume—

(a) that any animal found in the possession of a person who is in the habit of keeping animals of that class for sale for human consumption, has been kept by such person for sale, and

(b) that any food or drug found in the possession of a person who is in the habit of keeping, storing, manufacturing or preparing such food or drug for sale for human consumption, has been kept, stored, manufactured or prepared by such person for sale.

109. (1) Any person who does any of the acts mentioned in sub-section (1) of section 108 or in clauses (a) to (d) of sub-section (1) of section 5 of the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918, through others employed by him, whether the latter be adults or children, shall be liable to punishment for such act as if he had himself done the same.

(2) If a child under seven years of age does any of the acts aforesaid, the employer of the child, or the parent or other person having the care and custody of the child, as the case may be, shall be liable to punishment for such act as if he had himself done the same.

110. No person shall knowingly consume the flesh of any animal which has died on account of natural causes.

Explanation.—It shall be no defence to a prosecution under this section that the flesh was consumed as a matter of custom, or as a matter of right on account of services rendered in removing dead cattle, or on any other ground.

111. (1) No person shall bring into any local area, without the permission in writing of the Health Officer thereof, the flesh of any animal slaughtered outside the local area otherwise than in a slaughter-house maintained or licensed by the Government or by a local authority.

(2) Any flesh brought into the local area in contravention of sub-section (1) may be seized by the Health Officer or any officer or servant of the local authority authorized by him in that behalf, and sold or otherwise disposed of as the Health Officer may direct; and in case of sale, the sale-proceeds shall be credited to the funds of the local authority.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to—

(a) cured or preserved meat, or

(b) flesh or meat carried through any local area for consumption outside the limits thereof and not stored anywhere within such limits in the course of transit, or

(c) flesh or meat brought into the local area by any person for immediate domestic consumption and not for sale:

Provided that the local authority may, by public notice, direct that the provisions of this section shall apply to cured or preserved meat of any specified description or brought from any specified place.

112. The Health Officer may, without notice, enter any place at any time, by day or by night, where any article of food is being manufactured, prepared, exposed or stored for sale, and inspect such article and any utensil or vessel used for manufacturing, preparing or containing the same.

Power of Health Officer to enter premises used for food trade.

Powers of Health Officer to deal with carriers of disease handling food.

113. (1) The Health Officer may, at any time, examine any person engaged in selling, or in manufacturing or preparing for sale, or in any manner whatsoever handling any article of food intended for sale.

(2) If on such examination the Health Officer finds that such person is suffering from, or harbouring the germs of, any infectious disease, such person shall not take part in selling any article of food or in manufacturing, preparing or in any manner handling any article of food intended for sale, until the Health Officer certifies in writing that he is free from infection from such disease.

Investigation of diseases caused by milk or dairy produce.

114. (1) If the Health Officer has reason to believe—

(a) that any person within the local area over which he has jurisdiction is suffering from an infectious disease attributable to milk or dairy produce supplied within such area, or

(b) that the consumption of any milk or dairy produce supplied within such local area is likely to cause any person therein to suffer from an infectious disease, the Health Officer may require the person supplying the milk or dairy produce to furnish within such time as may be fixed by the Health Officer, a complete list of all dairies (whether situated within or outside the limits of the local area) from which that person's supply of milk or dairy produce is derived or has been derived during the six weeks immediately preceding.

(2) If such supply or any part of such supply is obtained, not directly from a dairy but through some other person, the Health Officer may make a similar requisition upon such other person.

(3) Every person on whom any requisition is made under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be bound to comply therewith.

115. (1) The Health Officer may inspect any dairy referred to in section 114 and the milch-cattle and the employees therein, and if, on such inspection, the Health Officer is of opinion that any infectious disease is caused, or is likely to be caused, by the consumption of the milk or dairy produce supplied from such dairy, he may make an order prohibiting the supply of any milk or dairy produce for human consumption from such dairy.

(2) An order made under sub-section (1) shall be forthwith cancelled by the Health Officer on his being satisfied that the milk supply has been changed, or that the employees objected to by him have ceased to work at the dairy, or that the cause of infection has been removed.

(3) If an order made under sub-section (1) or cancelled under sub-section (2) relates to a dairy situated outside the limits of the local area, the Health Officer shall also inform the local authority within whose jurisdiction the dairy is situated.

(4) When an order is made under sub-section (1), the Health Officer may either—

(a) permit the milk or other produce of the dairy, after being boiled or treated in such other manner as he may direct, to be sold or used as animal food, subject to any reasonable restrictions he may impose, or

(b) cause such milk or dairy produce to be destroyed.

(5) No person shall sell or supply any milk or dairy produce in contravention of the provisions of this section.

CHAPTER XIII.

FAIRS AND FESTIVALS.

Notification of fairs and festivals by Government.

116. (1) The Government may, by notification—

(a) declare that any local area or part of a local area in which a fair or festival is to be held shall, for the purposes of this Chapter, be a notified fair or festival centre, for such period as may be specified in the notification; and

(b) define the limits of the area which shall, for the purposes aforesaid, be the site for the fair or festival.

(2) The provisions of this Chapter shall apply only to fairs and festivals in connexion with which a notification under sub-section (1) has been issued.

117. (1) The Government, or the local authority with the approval of the Government, may by notification impose, during a period to be specified in the notification, a tax on persons leaving by inland waterways a notified fair or festival centre or any place within such distance therefrom as may be specified in the notification.

(2) Every such notification shall specify the rates at which the tax shall be levied:

Provided that the tax shall not exceed four annas in the case of passengers leaving by steam vessels, and two annas in the case of passengers leaving by other vessels including ferry boats.

(3) The Government shall have power to make rules regarding—

(a) the collection of the tax;

(b) the ascertainment of the expenses incurred in collecting the tax;

(c) in case the tax is collected by any authority (other than the local authority concerned) or any person, the payment of the proceeds of the tax after deducting the expenses of collecting the same, to the local authority;

(d) in the case referred to in clause (c), the returns and the information to be furnished by the authority or person collecting the tax to the local authority concerned, and the decision of disputes between the authority or person aforesaid and such local authority; and

(e) the decision of disputes between two or more local authorities.

118. (1) The Government, or the local authority with the approval of the Government, may, by notification, levy tolls on any vehicle (other than a motor vehicle) or any animal entering a notified fair or festival centre, for such period, at such rates, and subject to such exemptions, as may be specified in the notification.

(2) The Government shall have power to make rules regarding—

(a) the collection of tolls;

(b) the composition of the tolls payable by any person;

(c) the seizure, detention, and disposal of any vehicle or animal in respect of which toll is not paid;

(d) the duty of the police to assist persons authorized to collect tolls, and the powers of the police in that behalf; and

(e) the penalties to be imposed in case of evasion of tolls or of resistance to the seizure and detention of any vehicle or animal in respect of which toll is not paid.

119. (1) The person or authority in charge of any fair or festival shall, not less than sixty days before its commencement, intimate to the executive authority or Health Officer of the local authority concerned, or in case the fair or festival is to be held within the jurisdiction of more than one local authority, to the executive authority or Health Officer of each of the local authorities concerned, the date of the commencement of such fair or festival, and the period for which it will last.

(2) The person or authority in charge of the fair or festival shall also furnish such other particulars relating to the fair or festival as may be called for by the executive authority or Health Officer of the local authority or any of the local authorities concerned.

120. The local authority within whose jurisdiction a fair or festival is held, or if it is held within the jurisdiction of two or more local authorities, any person or committee appointed by such local authorities jointly, shall make provision for—

(1) the demarcation and preparation of the site of the fair or festival;

- (2) the clearing and draining of the site;
- (3) the disposition of the several parts of the fair or festival, including the alignment of roads within the site;
- (4) the supply in sufficient quantities of water fit for drinking and cooking purposes for the use of persons resorting to the fair or festival and the proper preservation of such water;
- (5) the accommodation of pilgrims and visitors, to such extent as may be practicable;
- (6) the lighting of the fair or festival site;
- (7) the supply by suitable persons of wholesome food, at reasonable rates, and in sufficient quantities, to persons resorting to the fair or festival and the proper supervision and inspection of all food prepared or offered for sale or stored or in course of transit within the fair or festival site;
- (8) the collection, removal and disposal of refuse, rubbish and sewage;
- (9) the supply and maintenance of suitable latrines for the use of persons resorting to the fair or festival;
- (10) the detection and segregation of cases of infectious disease and the prevention of the introduction and spread of such diseases;
- (11) the employment of adequate medical staff, the provision of medical relief, and the furnishing of hospital accommodation both for general and isolation purposes; and
- (12) such other purposes as may be prescribed.

121. The arrangements mentioned in section 120 shall be executed under the supervision and control of the Health Officer concerned, or if the fair or festival is held within the jurisdiction of more than one local authority, under the supervision and control of the Health Officer of one of such local authorities designated by the person or committee referred to in section 120, or in case no Health Officer is so designated, under the supervision and control of the Health Officers concerned within their respective local areas.

122. (1) The Health Officer, or a Health or Sanitary Inspector of the local authority or of any of the local authorities concerned, or any officer of the Government or of any such local authority appointed by the Government in this behalf, may—

- (a) enter and inspect any building or shop in the fair or festival site, which is a source of food-supply;
- (b) for the purpose of inspection, have access to any source of water-supply on such site or within such distance therefrom as the Government may, by general or special order, determine; and
- (c) seize any food prepared or offered for sale or stored or in course of transit within the fair or festival site which, he has reason to believe, is unwholesome or unfit for human consumption, and destroy the same forthwith, if, in his opinion, such food is of a perishable nature or the value thereof does not exceed three rupees.

(2) (a) Any officer seizing any food under clause (c) of sub-section (1) shall, if it is not destroyed under that clause, report the seizure to such authority or person as may be prescribed in that behalf.

(b) If the authority or person aforesaid is of opinion that the food is unwholesome or unfit for human consumption, such authority or person may, by order in writing, direct the food to be destroyed; and any expenses incurred in this behalf (including the cost, if any, of analysing the food or a sample thereof) shall be recoverable from the person from whom the food was seized, as it it were a tax due from him to the local authority or any of the local authorities concerned.

(c) If the authority or person aforesaid is of opinion that such food is wholesome and fit for human consumption, the food shall be returned to the person from whom it was seized; and the cost, if any, of analysing the food or a sample thereof shall be borne by the local authority or local authorities concerned.

123. (1) The local authority may, in cases of emergency, with the sanction of the District Collector, depute any person to enter upon, occupy and use, without having recourse to the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, any land or any building not being a dwelling-house in the notified fair or festival centre which in the opinion of the Health Officer, is required and is suitable for any purposes connected with the fair or festival, such as the construction of pilgrim-sheds, water-sheds, hospitals, segregation-sheds, latrines, and the like:

Provided that if the land or building is occupied, notice shall be given in writing to the occupant or be conspicuously affixed on such land or building, not less than twenty-four hours before it is entered upon.

(2) The owner or lessee of such land or building shall be entitled to compensation for any damage or expenses incurred, and to a reasonable rent for the period during which it had been occupied or used for any of the purposes referred to in sub-section (1). Such compensation and rent shall be fixed by the District Collector.

(3) The local authority shall, when any such land or building ceases to be occupied or used for any of the purposes aforesaid, cause it to be thoroughly disinfected and cleansed.

124. (1) The Health Officer may, by notice in writing, require the owner of, or other person having control over, any source of water-supply situated on the fair or festival site, or within such distance therefrom as the Government may by general or special order determine, to close or disinfect such source within a specified time if, in the opinion of the Health Officer, it is likely to engender or cause the spread of disease amongst persons resorting to the fair or festival.

(2) If the owner or person aforesaid fails or neglects to comply with any notice issued under sub-section (1) within the time specified therein, the Health Officer may himself take the necessary action; and the whole of the expenses incurred in doing so or such part thereof as the Health Officer may determine to be reasonable, shall be recovered from such owner or person as if it were a tax due from him to the local authority or any of the local authorities concerned.

125. (1) The owner or occupier of a house, not being a lodging house registered under Chapter XI, situated in any notified fair or festival site shall not, for purposes of gain, accommodate in the house visitors to the fair or festival, without obtaining a licence in that behalf from the executive authority or the Health Officer of the local authority or any of the local authorities concerned.

This provision shall not apply to tenancies from month to month or for a period exceeding one month.

(2) Every application for a licence under sub-section (1) shall be in writing, shall contain such information as may be required by the authority to whom it is addressed, and shall be accompanied by such fee as may be prescribed for the grant of the licence.

(3) (a) If it appears to the executive authority or the Health Officer, as the case may be, that the house is suitable for accommodating visitors to the fair or festival, he may issue a licence, in the prescribed form and subject to the prescribed conditions, for the accommodation in the house of such number of visitors as may, in his opinion, be conveniently received therein, having regard to the number of persons resident in the house, whether as members of the family or as servants of the owner or occupier.

(b) The licence shall also specify—

(i) the maximum number of persons (residents and visitors) who may be accommodated in the house at any one time; and

(ii) the date until which it shall remain in force.

(4) If the authority granting the licence is satisfied that the licensed house has, subsequent to the grant of the licence, become unfit for the accommodation of visitors, or if the licensee is convicted of any offence punishable under this Chapter, such authority may revoke the licence or, at his discretion, may suspend the licence for such period or until the fulfilment of such condition, as he may specify.

CHAPTER XIV.

FINANCE.

126. If in respect of any fair or festival, any tax or toll is levied under section 117 or section 118 of this Act, or under section 116 of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, or section 110 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, the local authority shall have power to spend the proceeds thereof in connexion with the fair or festival or for the benefit generally of the local area concerned, in such manner as the Government may, by general or special order, authorize.

127. (1) Every municipality shall earmark not less than 30 per cent. of its income from all sources other than Government grants, for expenditure on the advancement of public health in its local area, including expenditure on medicinal relief, and every district board or panchayat shall similarly earmark not less than 12½ per cent. of its income from such sources:

Provided that the Government may, for financial or other reasons, vary the provisions of this sub-section to such extent as they may think fit in the case of any municipality or district board or any panchayat or class of panchayats.

(2) (a) The Government may, by notification, authorize any local authority or class of local authorities to incur expenditure on any public health purpose specified in the notification, notwithstanding anything contained in the Act under which such local authority or authorities have been constituted.

(b) Any expenditure incurred by a local authority, which is authorized by clause (a) shall be taken into account for the purposes of sub-section (1).

CHAPTER XV.

RULES, BY-LAWS, PENALTIES, ETC.

128. (1) The Government shall, in addition to the rule-making powers conferred on them by any other provision contained in this Act, have power to make rules generally to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the power conferred by sub-section (1), the Government may make rules—

(a) with reference to all matters expressly required, or allowed, by this Act to be prescribed; and

(b) regulating the situations in which sanitary conveniences for the use of the public shall be constructed by a local authority, and the number of such sanitary conveniences.

129. (1) In making a rule under section 81, the Government may provide that a breach of such rule shall be punishable with imprisonment which may extend to three months or with fine or with both.

Penalty for breach of rules.

(2) In making a rule under any other provision contained in this Act, the Government may provide that a breach of such rule shall be punishable—

(i) with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees, and in case of a continuing breach, with fine which may extend to thirty rupees for every day during which the breach continues after conviction for the first breach; or

(ii) with fine which may extend to twenty rupees for every day during which the breach continues after receipt of notice from the executive authority or the Health Officer to discontinue such breach.

130. (1) The power to make rules under this Act shall be subject to the following conditions:—

Procedure for making this Act and the effect of rules.

(a) A draft of the rules shall be published in the Official Gazette.

(b) Such draft shall not be further proceeded with until six weeks after such publication or until such later date as the Government may appoint.

(2) All rules made under this Act shall be published in the Official Gazette and upon such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Act.

131. Any local authority may make by-laws, not inconsistent with this Act or the rules made thereunder or with any other law, for carrying out all or any of the purposes of this Act.

By-laws by local authorities.

Breach of by-laws.

132. In making a by-law, the local authority may provide that a breach thereof shall be punishable—

(a) with fine which may extend to fifty rupees, and in case of a continuing breach with fine which may extend to fifteen rupees for every day during which the breach continues after conviction for the first breach, or

(b) with fine which may extend to ten rupees for every day during which the breach continues after receipt of notice from the executive authority or the Health Officer to discontinue such breach.

133. In regard to by-laws made by a local authority under sections 131 and 132, the following provisions shall apply, namely:—

(a) in case the local authority is the Corporation of Madras, sections 352, 353, 354 and 356 of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919;

(b) in case the local authority is a municipality constituted under the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, sections 309, 310 and 311 of that Act; and

(c) in case the local authority is a local board constituted under the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, sections 204, 205 and 205-A of that Act.

Penalties for offences against Act, etc.

134. (1) Whoever—

(a) contravenes any of the provisions of this Act specified in the first and second columns of Schedule I; or

(b) contravenes any rule or order made under any of the provisions so specified; or

(c) fails to comply with any direction lawfully given to him, or any requisition lawfully made upon him, under or in pursuance of any of the said provisions shall be punished with fine which may extend to the amount mentioned in that behalf in the fourth column of the said Schedule.

(2) Whoever after having been convicted of—

(a) contravening any of the provisions of this Act specified in the first and second columns of Schedule II; or

(b) contravening any rule or order made under any of the provisions so specified; or

(c) failing to comply with any direction lawfully given to him, or any requisition lawfully made upon him, under or in pursuance of any of the said provisions continues to contravene the said provision or the said rule or order, or continues to fail to comply with the said direction or requisition, shall be punished for each day after the previous date of conviction during which he continues so to offend, with fine which may extend to the amount mentioned in that behalf in the fourth column of the said Schedule.

Explanation.—The entries in the third column of Schedules I and II headed 'Subject' are not intended as definitions of the offences described in the provisions specified in the first and second columns thereof, or even as abstracts of those provisions, but are inserted merely as references to the subject dealt with therein.

135. Every person who prevents the executive authority or the Health Officer or any person to whom the executive authority or the Health Officer has lawfully delegated his powers of entry of executive authority or Health Officer. entering on or into any land or building, from exercising his lawful power of entering thereon or thereinto, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

Miscellaneous.

136. Any decision of the Health Officer against which an appeal is not otherwise provided for in this Act shall be subject to such appeal as may be prescribed.

137. (1) When any notice is required to be given by this Act, or by any rule, by-law, regulation or order made under it, such notice shall be given—

(a) by giving or tendering the notice to such person; or

(b) if such person is not found, by leaving such notice at his last known place of abode or business or by giving or tendering the same to some adult member or servant of his family; or

(c) if such person does not reside in the local area and his address elsewhere is known to the executive authority, by sending the same to him by post, registered; or

(d) if none of the means aforesaid be available, by affixing the same in some conspicuous part of such place of abode or business.

(2) When the person is an owner or occupier of any building or land, it shall not be necessary to name the owner or occupier in the notice, and in the case of joint owners and occupiers it shall be sufficient to serve it on, or send it to, one of such owners or occupiers.

138. No person shall be tried for any offence against the provisions of this Act, or of any rule, or by-law made under it, unless Cognizance of offences against the Act. complaint is made within three months of the commission of the offence by the police, or the executive authority or the Health Officer, or by a person expressly authorized in this behalf by the local authority, the executive authority or the Health Officer:

Provided that nothing contained in this section shall affect the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, in regard to the power of certain Magistrates to take cognizance of offences upon information received or upon their own knowledge or suspicion.

139. Any police officer who sees a person committing an offence against any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule or by-law made thereunder, may arrest such person, if his name and address are unknown to the officer and such person on demand declines to give his name and address or gives a name and address which the officer has reason to believe to be false.

140. (1) The executive officer of a local authority or any member of the public health establishment of a local authority not below the rank of Health or Sanitary Inspector, who sees a person committing any of the offences specified in sub-section (2) in the area over which the local authority has jurisdiction, may arrest such person, if his name and address are unknown to the executive officer or member aforesaid and such person on demand declines to give his name and address or gives a name and address which such officer or member has reason to believe to be false. Any person so arrested shall be handed over to the officer in charge of the nearest police station as expeditiously as possible.

(2) The offences referred to in sub-section (1) are—

(a) offences against any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule or by-law made thereunder; and

(b) offences falling under any of the provisions of the Acts mentioned below, if such provisions are in force in the area over which the local authority has jurisdiction—

(i) Chapters VII to XIII, both inclusive, of the Madras City Municipal Act, 1919, read with section 357 of that Act and Schedules VII and VIII thereto;

(ii) Chapters VII to XIII, both inclusive, of the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, read with section 313 of that Act and Schedules VII and VIII thereto;

(iii) Chapters VIII to XI, both inclusive, of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, read with section 207 of that Act and Schedules VIII and IX thereto;

(iv) sections 53 and 73 of the Madras City Police Act, 1888;

(v) clauses (9) and (11) of section 3 and sections 4 and 10 of the Town's Nuisances Act, 1889; and

(vi) section 5 of the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918.

Persons arrested not to be detained unnecessarily. 141. No person arrested under section 139 or section 140 shall be detained in custody—

(a) after his true name and address have been ascertained, or

(b) for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable; and such period shall not, in the absence of the special order of a Magistrate, whether having jurisdiction to try the case or not, exceed twenty-four hours, exclusive of the time necessary for the journey of such person to the Court having jurisdiction to try the case.

142. (1) No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall lie, against any local authority or any executive authority of a local authority, or against the Government or any officer or servant of a local authority or of the Government, or against any person appointed under section 12 of this Act, for any act done or purporting to be done under this Act without the previous sanction of the Government.

(2) No local authority or executive authority of a local authority, no officer or servant of any local authority or of the Government and no person appointed under section 12 of this Act, shall be liable in respect of any such act in any civil or criminal proceeding if the act was done in good faith in the course of the execution of duties or the discharge of functions imposed by or under this Act.

143. Any executive authority of a local authority or any officer or servant of a local authority or of the Government, or any person appointed under section 12 of this Act, who maliciously abuses any powers conferred on him by or under this Act, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to one year or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both.

Explanation.—No prosecution shall be instituted under this section without the previous sanction of the Government.

144. If any provision relating to public health contained in any other enactment in force in the Province of Madras is repugnant to any provision contained in this Act, the latter provision shall prevail and the former provision shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void.

145. If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Government, as occasion may require, may, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.

THE MADRAS PREVENTION OF ADULTERATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. IV of 1939.

[13th March, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918, for the purpose hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE MADRAS PREVENTION OF ADULTERATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of section 19, Madras Act III of 1918.

2. For the proviso to section 19 of the Madras Prevention of Adulteration Act, 1918, the following proviso shall be substituted, namely:—

“Provided that a prosecution in respect of an offence under section 6-A may be commenced at any time after the vendor gives notice of his intention to plead the warranty by way of defence under the first proviso to sub-section (2) of section 6 and before the expiry of three months from the date on which the prosecution against the vendor is finally disposed of.”

THE MADRAS ELECTRICITY DUTY ACT, 1939.

ACT No. V OF 1939.

[20th March, 1939.

An Act for the levy of a duty on certain sales of electrical energy effected by licensees in the Province of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to levy a duty on certain sales of electrical energy effected by licensees in the Province of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent, and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE MADRAS ELECTRICITY DUTY ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Province of Madras.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(a) 'energy' means electrical energy;

(b) 'licensee' means any person including a company or a local authority licensed under Part II of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, to supply energy, or any person including a company or a local authority who has obtained the sanction of the Provincial Government under section 28 of that Act to supply energy; and

(c) 'prescribed' means prescribed by rules made under this Act.

3. (1) Save as otherwise provided in sub-section (2), every licensee in the Province of Madras shall pay every month to the Provincial Government in the prescribed manner, a duty calculated at the rate of six pies per unit of energy, on and in respect of all sales of energy effected by the licensee during the previous month, at a price of more than two annas per unit.

(2) A licensee shall be exempt from duty under sub-section (1) in any month if the total sales of energy effected by him in the previous month, at whatever price, did not exceed 16,666 units:

Provided that if at the end of any financial year, it is found that the total sales of energy effected by the licensee in such year, at whatever price, were not less than 200,000 units, the licensee shall pay the duty in respect of any month or months comprised in such year in which the sales of energy effected by him did not exceed 16,666 units.

(3) Where a licensee holds more than one licence, duty shall be calculated and levied under this section separately in respect of each licence.

Obligation of licensees to keep books of account and to submit returns.

4. Every licensee shall—

(a) keep books of account in the prescribed form; and

(b) submit returns showing the units of energy supplied and the amount of the duty payable in respect thereof, to such officer, in such form, and at such times as may be prescribed.

5. (1) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint Inspecting Officers to inspect the books of account required to be kept by licensees under clause (a) of section 4.

(2) Officers so appointed shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as may be prescribed, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act and the rules made thereunder.

(3) Every such officer shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

6. Any duty due under this Act which remains unpaid, shall be recoverable as an arrear of land revenue, or by deduction from amounts payable by the Provincial Government to the licensee.

7. (1) Any licensee may, with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government and subject to such conditions as they may impose, recover from any person or class of persons to whom energy is sold at a price of more than two annas per unit, the duty which falls to be paid by the licensee in respect of the energy so sold or any part of it, as may be determined by the Provincial Government.

Explanation.—The duty recoverable from any person under this sub-section shall not be deemed to be part of the price charged for the energy by the licensee.

(2) The licensee may, for the purpose of sub-section (1), exercise the power conferred on a licensee by sub-section (1) of section 24 of the Indian Electricity Act, 1910, for the recovery of any charge or sum due in respect of energy supplied by him.

Penalties.

8. If any licensee—

(a) fails to keep books of account or to submit returns as required by section 4, or

(b) intentionally obstructs an Inspecting Officer appointed under section 5 in the performance of his duties or the exercise of his powers under this Act and the rules made thereunder, he shall be punished with fine which may extend to fifty rupees.

Power to make rules.

9. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) the time and manner of payment of duty under section 3;

(b) the form of the books of account required to be kept under clause (a) of section 4;

(c) the times at which, the forms in which, and the officers to whom, the returns required by clause (b) of section 4 should be submitted;

(d) the duties and powers of Inspecting Officers appointed under section 5; and

(e) any other matter for which there is no provision or insufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.

(3) In making a rule under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), the Provincial Government may provide that a breach thereof shall be punishable with fine not exceeding fifty rupees.

(4) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall, except on the first occasion of the exercise thereof, be subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication for a period of not less than one month.

THE MADRAS SALES OF MOTOR SPIRIT TAXATION ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VI OF 1939.

[20th March 1939.

An Act to provide for the levy of a tax on retail sales of motor spirit in the Province of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the levy of a tax on retail sales of motor spirit in the Province of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE MADRAS SALES OF MOTOR SPIRIT TAXATION ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Province of Madras.

(3) This section shall come into force at once, and the rest of this Act shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(a) "Government treasury" means a treasury or sub-treasury of the Provincial Government and includes any office, branch or agency of the Reserve Bank of India, transacting treasury business for the Provincial Government;

(b) "importer" means any person who imports motor spirit into British India;

(c) "motor spirit" means any substance which by itself or in admixture with other substances is ordinarily used directly or indirectly to provide reasonably efficient fuel for automotive or stationary internal combustion engines, and includes petrol, diesel oil and other internal combustion oils, but does not include kerosene, furnace oil, coal or charcoal;

(d) "petrol" means dangerous petroleum as defined in the Petroleum Act, 1934;

(e) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(f) "retail dealer" means any person who sells or keeps for sale motor spirit for the purpose of consumption by the person by whom or on whose behalf it is or may be purchased;

(g) "retail sale" means a sale of motor spirit by a retail dealer for the purpose of consumption by the person by whom or on whose behalf it is or may be purchased, and the expression "sell in retail" shall be construed accordingly; and

(h) "wholesale dealer" means any person who sells motor spirit, or keeps motor spirit for sale, to dealers in such spirit, for the purpose of trade.

Explanation.—A sale of motor spirit by a co-operative society, or a club, a firm or any association to one of its members for consumption is a retail sale within the meaning of clause (g).

3. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, there shall be levied on all retail sales of motor spirit effected after the commencement of this Act, a tax in the case of petrol,—at the rate of one anna and six pies per gallon, and in the case of any motor spirit other than petrol,—at the rate of six pies per gallon; and such tax shall be payable by the person effecting the sale:

Provided that the Provincial Government may from time to time by notification fix any other rate at which the tax shall be payable:

Provided further that no such notification shall come into force until approved by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

(2) Where any retail dealers obtain their supplies of motor spirit from an importer or a wholesale dealer, it shall be open to the Provincial Government, by agreement with the importer or wholesale dealer, to levy from him in advance the tax which may be payable by the retail dealers under sub-section (1) on the sale by them of the motor spirit and the provisions of this Act relating to the assessment and recovery of tax shall, subject to such conditions as may be agreed upon, apply to the importer or wholesale dealer accordingly.

(3) No tax shall be levied under this Act on the sale of any motor spirit in respect of which such tax has already been paid.

4. (1) No person shall, after the commencement of this Act, carry on business in motor spirit as an importer or as a wholesale or retail dealer at any place in the Province unless he has been registered as such under this Act:

Registration of importers and dealers.

Provided that persons carrying on business at the commencement of this Act shall be allowed two months from such commencement to get themselves registered under this Act.

Explanation.—Where a person has more than one place of business, whether in the same town or village or in different towns and villages, he shall get himself registered separately in respect of each such place of business.

(2) (a) No importer or wholesale dealer shall, unless also registered as a retail dealer under this Act, sell motor spirit for consumption or sale in the Province to any person other than an importer or a wholesale dealer or a retail dealer, registered as such under this Act.

(b) No retail dealer shall use or transfer for consumption any motor spirit stocked by him without its being included in his accounts and in the next return of retail sales submitted by him under section 5 (b).

(3) Application for registration as an importer or a wholesale dealer or a retail dealer under this Act shall be made in such form and to such authority as may be prescribed.

(4) Registration may be made subject to such conditions, if any, as may be prescribed, including, in the case of an applicant for registration as a retail dealer, the making of such deposit or the furnishing of such security as the registering authority may consider necessary to ensure the due payment of the tax which may from time to time be payable by him.

(5) No person including a company or firm registered as an importer, a wholesale dealer or a retail dealer, shall carry on the business of public transport requiring the use of motor spirit.

(6) Any registration under sub-section (1) may be suspended or cancelled by such authority, for such reasons, and in such manner, as may be prescribed.

Obligation of retail dealers to keep books of account and submit returns.

5. Every retail dealer in motor spirit shall in respect of each place where he carries on business—

(a) keep books of account in the prescribed form; and

(b) submit every month to the District Collector and to such other officers as may be prescribed, a return in the prescribed form and before the prescribed date, showing—

(i) the quantity of motor spirit received by him during the preceding month;

(ii) the quantity sold by him during such month; and

(iii) such other particulars as may be prescribed.

6. Along with the return referred to in clause (b) of section 5, the retail Receipt for payment of dealer shall furnish a receipt from a Government treasury for the amount of the tax due in respect of the motor spirit sold by him in retail during the preceding month, according to the return.

7. (1) If no return is submitted by a retail dealer under clause (b) of section 5 in respect of any month before the date prescribed in that behalf, or if the return is submitted without receipt for the full amount of the tax due as required by section 6, or if the return submitted appears to the District Collector to be incorrect or incomplete, the District Collector shall, after making such inquiry as he considers necessary, determine the amount of the tax due from such retail dealer in respect of such month and the amount so determined less the sum, if any, already paid by him shall be paid by the retail dealer into a Government treasury within fourteen days after demand is made therefor:

Provided that before taking action under this sub-section, the retail dealer shall be given a reasonable opportunity of proving the correctness and completeness of his return.

(2) In default of payment within the period aforesaid, the amount of tax due shall be recovered from the person from whom the tax is due as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

Obligation of importers and wholesale dealers to keep books of account and submit returns.

8. Every importer or wholesale dealer, shall—

(a) keep books of accounts in the prescribed form; and
(b) submit every month to the District Collector and to such other officers as may be prescribed, a return in the prescribed form and before the prescribed date, showing—

(i) the quantity of motor spirit received by him in the preceding month,
(ii) the quantities of motor spirit supplied by him during such month to other importers, wholesale dealers or retail dealers, specifying the name and address of each importer, wholesale dealer or retail dealer, the quantities supplied to him, and the dates on which the supplies were made, and
(iii) such other particulars as may be prescribed.

9. (1) All accounts and vouchers relating to stocks, purchases, sales and deliveries of motor spirit kept by importers, wholesale dealers and retail dealers and the stocks of motor spirit with them shall be open to inspection by such officers as the Provincial Government may authorize in that behalf.

(2) Any such officer shall have power to enter and search any building, vessel, vehicle or place where any importer, wholesale dealer or retail dealer carries on business or keeps any stock of motor spirit.

Penalties.

10. Any person who—

(a) carries on business in motor spirit as an importer, a wholesale dealer or a retail dealer at any place without getting himself registered as required by sub-section (1) of section 4 or when his registration in respect of such place is not in force, or

(b) fails to keep books of account as required by clause (a) of section 5 or of section 8, or

(c) fails to submit any return as required by clause (b) of section 5 or of section 8 on or before the prescribed date, or submits an incorrect or incomplete return, or fails to submit a receipt for the full amount of the tax due as required by section 6, or

(d) fails to pay the tax due from him within the time allowed, or
 (e) fraudulently evades the payment of any tax due under this Act, or
 (f) acts in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act, shall on conviction by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, be liable to a fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and where the breach is a continuing one, to a further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues.

11. The motor spirit in respect of which an Motor spirit liable to con- offence against this Act is committed and any recep-fiscation in certain cases. tacle in which such spirit is contained shall be liable to confiscation.

12. (1) When in any case tried by a Magistrate, the Magistrate decides Confiscation how order- that anything is liable to confiscation under section 11.
 ed. he may, after hearing the person, if any, claiming any right thereto and the evidence, if any, which he produces in support of his claim, order confiscation or may give the owner an option to pay such fine as the Magistrate deems fit in lieu of confiscation.

(2) When an offence against this Act has been committed but the offender is not known, or cannot be found, or when anything liable to confiscation under this Act and not in the possession of any person cannot be satisfactorily accounted for, the case shall be inquired into and determined by the prescribed officer who may order such confiscation:

Provided that no such order shall be made until the expiration of one month from the date of seizure of the things intended to be confiscated or without hearing the persons, if any, claiming any right thereto, and the evidence, if any, which they produce in support of their claims.

13. (1) Any officer of the Provincial Government specially empowered by Issue of warrants for them in this behalf may issue a warrant for the arrest arrest. of any person whom he has reason to believe to have committed an offence against this Act.

(2) All warrants issued under this section shall be executed in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, by a police officer, or if the officer issuing the warrant deems fit, by any other person.

Power of entry and search 14. Any officer of the Provincial Government without warrant. specially empowered by them in this behalf may—

17. (1) Every officer of the Excise, Police or Land Revenue Departments not below such rank as may be prescribed, shall, with-Power of investigation. in the area for which he is appointed, have power to investigate all offences against this Act.

(2) Every such officer shall, in the conduct of such investigation, exercise the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, upon an officer in charge of a police station for the investigation of a cognizable offence:

Provided that if such officer is of opinion that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of an accused to a Magistrate, or that the person arrested may be discharged with a warning, such officer shall release him on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, to appear if and when so required before a Magistrate and shall make a full report of the case to the District Collector.

Offences to be bailable. 18. (1) All offences against this Act shall be bailable.

(2) Any officer empowered under section 17 shall have power to grant bail in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 to any person arrested without warrant for an offence against this Act.

19. When anything has been seized by an officer exercising powers under section 17, such officer, after such inquiry as he con-
Procedure on seizure. siders necessary—

(a) if it appears that such thing is required as evidence in the case of any person arrested, shall forward the thing to the Magistrate to whom such person is forwarded or for his appearance before whom bail has been taken;

(b) if it appears that such thing is liable to confiscation but is not required as evidence as aforesaid, shall send the thing with a report of the particulars of the seizure to the prescribed authority; and

(c) if no offence appears to have been committed, shall return the thing to the person from whose possession it was taken and shall report to the prescribed authority accordingly.

Power to compound offences. 20. (1) The prescribed authority may accept from any person who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed an offence against this Act, by way of composition of such offence—

(a) where the offence consists of a sale of motor spirit in contravention of this Act or of the evasion of any tax payable under this Act, in addition to the tax payable by him under section 3, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees or double the amount of the tax payable, whichever is greater and

(b) in other cases, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(2) On the payment of such sum of money and the tax, if any, payable under section 3, to the prescribed authority, the accused person shall be discharged, the property seized, if any, shall be released and no further proceedings shall be taken against such person or property in respect of such offence.

Cognizance of offences. 21. (1) No Magistrate shall take cognizance of any offence against this Act—

(i) except upon the complaint or report of the District Collector or other prescribed authority, or

(ii) except upon his own knowledge or suspicion.

(2) Except with the sanction of the Provincial Government, no Magistrate shall take cognizance of any offence against this Act, unless the prosecution is instituted within six months from the date on which the offence is alleged to have been committed:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall apply to any case governed by section 23.

22. (1) No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall lie against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government, for any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, without the previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

(2) No officer or servant of the Provincial Government shall be liable in respect of any such act in any civil or criminal proceeding, if the act was done in good faith in the course of the execution of duties or the discharge of functions imposed by or under this Act.

23. No suit shall be instituted against the Crown and no suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall be instituted against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government in respect of any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, unless the suit, prosecution or other proceeding is instituted within six months from the date of the act complained of.

24. (1) Any person aggrieved by any order passed under this Act, not being an order passed by any Court or Magistrate, may appeal—

(a) in case such order is passed by a District Collector, to the Board of Revenue, and

(b) in any other case, to the District Collector.

(2) The appellate authority may, after giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders on the appeal as such authority thinks fit.

(3) Every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the powers of revision conferred by section 25, be final.

25. The Board of Revenue may, at any time, call for and examine the record of any order passed by, or any proceedings recorded by, any officer or person under this Act, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of such order, or as to the regularity of such proceedings, and may pass such order in reference thereto as it thinks fit.

Nothing contained in this section shall apply to the orders or proceedings of any Court or Magistrate.

26. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) all matters expressly required or allowed by this Act to be prescribed;

(b) the regulation of the sale of motor spirit for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act;

(c) the duties and powers of inspecting and other officers appointed or authorized to exercise any powers under this Act, and the procedure to be followed by such officers;

(d) the form in which, and the time within which, appeals under section 24 may be preferred; and

(e) any other matter for which there is no provision or no sufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.

(3) In making a rule under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), the Provincial Government may provide that a breach thereof shall be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and, where the breach is a continuing one, with further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues.

(4) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall, except on the first occasion of the exercise thereof, be subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication for a period of not less than four weeks.

27. All rules made and notifications issued under this Act shall be published in the Official Gazette and upon such publication, shall have effect as if enacted in this Act.

28. If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act or the rules made thereunder, the Provincial Government may, as occasion may arise, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.

THE CANALS AND PUBLIC FERRIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VII OF 1939.

[20th March, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Canals and Public Ferries Act, 1890, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Canals and Public Ferries Act, 1890, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE CANALS AND PUBLIC FERRIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on the 1st day of April, 1939.

Substitution of new section for section 10, Madras Act II of 1890. 2. For section 10 of the Canals and Public Ferries Act, 1890 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

Power to provide for management of ferries and fix fees and rates of tolls

“10. (1) The Provincial Government may—

(a) provide for the management of any public ferry, or
(b) authorize any person to convey passengers, animals, vehicles or goods across a channel by means of vessels at any public ferry, or
(c) assign the management of any public ferry to a local board or municipal council.

(2) All vessels used by a person authorized under clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall be licensed, and the Provincial Government may fix the fees payable for such licence.

(3) In the cases referred to in clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1), the Provincial Government may levy tolls at such rates as they may fix upon passengers, animals, vehicles and goods conveyed across the ferry.

(4) Where under clause (c) of sub-section (1), the management of a public ferry is assigned to a local board or municipal council, the local board or municipal council may levy tolls upon passengers, animals, vehicles and goods conveyed across the ferry at such rates as it may, subject to the control of the Provincial Government, fix. All moneys received by the local board or municipal council from the tolls levied by it under this sub-section shall form part of its funds.

(5) A notice in English and in the language of the district specifying the tolls leviable at a ferry under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), as the case may be, shall be exhibited to public view on each side of the ferry."

Amendment of section 11,
Madras Act II of 1890.

3. In section 11 of the said Act, the words "or public ferry" shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 14,
Madras Act II of 1890.

4. To section 14 of the said Act, the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that any ferry rent due to a local board or municipal council shall be recovered as if the same were a tax due to the local board or municipal council."

5. All tolls levied immediately before the commencement of this Act at any public ferry the management of which has been assigned to a local board or municipal council, shall be deemed to have been levied, with effect from such commencement, by the local board or municipal council concerned under sub-section (4) of section 10 of the said Act as amended by this Act.

THE MADRAS TOBACCO (TAXATION OF SALES AND LICENSING) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VIII OF 1939.

[4th June, 1939.]

An Act for the levy of a tax on the sale of tobacco and the licensing of trade therein in the Province of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the levy of a tax on the sale of tobacco and the licensing of trade therein in the Province of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE MADRAS TOBACCO (TAXATION OF SALES AND LICENSING) ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Province of Madras.

(3) This section shall come into force at once, and the Provincial Government may from time to time by notification in the Official Gazette apply all or any of the remaining provisions of this Act to the whole or any portion of the Province of Madras from such date as may be specified in the notification, and may cancel or modify any such notification.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(1) "broker" or "commission agent" means a person who in the ordinary course of his business negotiates and makes contracts for the sale or purchase of tobacco for others;

(2) "Collector" means the Collector of the district and includes any person appointed by the Provincial Government under section 15 to exercise all or any of the powers or to perform all or any of the duties of a Collector under this Act;

(3) "Commissioner" means a member of the Board of Revenue or other officer appointed by the Provincial Government to exercise the powers and perform the duties of the Commissioner under this Act;

(4) "grower" means a person who grows tobacco in the Province of Madras, by his own labour or by that of the members of his household or of his servants, or by tenants, but does not include a firm or association registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which grows tobacco, or an association of growers registered or deemed to be registered under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act, 1932;

- (5) "leaf" includes the stalks and stem of the tobacco plant;
 - (6) "licensee" means any person to whom a licence is granted under this Act;
 - (7) "Magistrate" means a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first or second class, or a Magistrate of the third class specially authorized in this behalf by the District Magistrate;
 - (8) "manufactured tobacco" means cigars, cheroots, cigarettes, cigarette tobacco, pipe tobacco, bidis and snuff, but does not include any preparation or mixture of tobacco intended for a further process of manufacture;
 - (9) "manufacturer" means a person who manufactures by machinery or manual labour "manufactured tobacco" or any preparation or mixture of tobacco intended for a further process of manufacture;
 - (10) "place" includes a house, building, shed, bunk, shop, tent, vehicle, and vessel;
 - (11) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;
 - (12) "retail dealer" means a person licensed to sell tobacco in retail under the provisions of this Act;
 - (13) "retail sale" means a sale of tobacco for the purpose of consumption by the person by whom or on whose behalf it is or may be purchased and the expression "sell in retail" shall be construed accordingly:
- Provided that any sale of tobacco by a retail dealer shall be presumed to be a retail sale unless the retail dealer concerned proves that the sale was not a retail sale.
- (14) "sale" or "selling" includes any transfer otherwise than by way of gift;
- Explanation.*—A sale by a co-operative society or a club, a firm or any association to its members is a sale within the meaning of this clause.
- (15) "tobacco" includes manufactured tobacco, cured and uncured tobacco, any preparation or mixture of tobacco, and the leaf of the tobacco plant;
 - (16) "Tobacco Officer" means any person appointed under section 16;
 - (17) "tobacco revenue" means revenue derived or derivable from any tax, fee, fine or confiscation levied, imposed or ordered, and all sums accruing to the Provincial Government, under the provisions of this Act;
 - (18) "turnover" means the aggregate amount for which tobacco is sold, whether for cash or for deferred payment or other valuable consideration;
 - (19) "wholesale dealer" means a person who buys or sells tobacco for the purpose of trade or manufacture;
 - (20) "wholesale sale" means a sale of tobacco to traders in, or manufacturers of, that commodity for the purpose of trade or manufacture, and the expression "sell wholesale" shall be construed accordingly; and
 - (21) "year" means the financial year.

3. (1) Save as provided in this Act, no person shall sell or expose for sale any manufactured tobacco in retail or sell tobacco in any form wholesale or otherwise carry on business as a wholesale dealer, manufacturer, broker or commission agent except under the authority, and in accordance with the terms and conditions, of a licence granted by the Collector under this Act:

Prohibition of sale of tobacco without licence.

Provided that a grower may, without licence or restriction, sell as leaf any tobacco grown by him, or grown and cured by him for the purpose of marketing it as leaf.

Explanation I.—The supply of tobacco by a club to its members or by a hotel to its guests or customers on payment of any price, fee or subscription, is a sale of tobacco within the meaning of this sub-section.

Explanation II.—The sale by a manufacturer of tobacco manufactured by him, whether by wholesale sale or by retail sale, is a sale of tobacco within the meaning of this sub-section.

(2) A licensed wholesale dealer, manufacturer, broker or commission agent shall not sell manufactured tobacco in retail, unless he has been granted a separate licence as a retail dealer.

4. (1) Every retail dealer shall pay a tax in each year on his retail sales of manufactured tobacco at the rates specified below in respect of his turnover as determined in accordance with the rules made under sub-section (3):

(a) If such turnover does not exceed two hundred rupees ..	Six rupees.
(b) If such turnover exceeds two hundred rupees but does not exceed four hundred rupees ..	Twelve rupees.
(c) If such turnover exceeds four hundred rupees	Three per cent. on the first four hundred rupees of the turnover and ten per cent. on the remainder of the turnover.

(2) Every wholesale dealer shall pay a tax in each year on his wholesale sales of manufactured tobacco at the rate of two per cent. calculated on his turnover as determined in accordance with the rules made under sub-section (3):

Provided that the tax under this sub-section shall not be levied on any person who prepares manufactured tobacco of value not exceeding one thousand rupees in a year for the purpose of supplying to wholesale dealers.

(3) The turnover and tax mentioned in sub-section (1) and sub-section (2) shall be determined, assessed and collected in accordance with such rules as may be made in that behalf.

5. (1) No fee shall be levied for the grant of a retail dealer's licence. In respect of every licence granted to a wholesale dealer, manufacturer, broker or commission agent, there shall be levied on the licensee an annual fee as specified in the table below:—

	Fee.
(i) Any wholesale dealer who sells or buys tobacco leaf cured or uncured or any preparation or mixture of tobacco (not being manufactured tobacco) for trade therein or for conversion into manufactured tobacco	One hundred rupees.
Provided that the Collector may issue a licence to any person who deals on a small scale—
(a) if his turnover is estimated at less than one thousand rupees per annum	on a fee of five rupees per annum.
(b) if his turnover is estimated at one thousand rupees or above, but at less than three thousand rupees	on a fee of ten rupees per annum.
(ii) Any other wholesale dealer, not being a manufacturer governed by item (iii) below	Fifty rupees.
(iii) (a) Any manufacturer to whose premises the Factories Act, 1934, applies or has been extended and in whose premises 200 or more workers are working or were working on any day of the preceding twelve months.	One hundred rupees.

(b) Any other manufacturer to whose premises the Factories Act, 1934, applies or has been extended ..	Fee. Fifty rupees.
(c) Any manufacturer to whose premises the Factories Act, 1934, does not apply, and has not been extended ..	Two rupees. Fifty rupees.
(iv) A broker or commission agent ..	..

Provided that any wholesale dealer or manufacturer being a wholesale dealer, who pays a turnover tax under sub-section (2) of section 4 shall for each licence granted to him under item (i), (ii), (iii) (a) or (iii) (b) above be charged an annual fee of ten rupees instead of the fee specified in that item.

(2) The Provincial Government may, from time to time, by notification, alter all or any of the fees specified in sub-section (1), but no such notification shall come into force unless the same is approved by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

6. No person other than a grower or a licensee under this Act, shall have in his possession any quantity of tobacco in excess of such quantity as the Provincial Government may from time to time prescribe in respect of all or any of the varieties thereof.

7. Every licence under this Act shall be granted—
 (a) for such area, if any,
 (b) for such period,
 (c) subject to such restrictions and on such conditions, and
 (d) in such form and containing such particulars, as the Provincial Government may, by general or special order, direct.

8. Where a licensee has more than one shop or place of business, whether in the same town or village or in different towns and villages, he shall obtain a separate licence in respect of each such shop or place of business.

9. Every licensee shall, if so required, execute a counterpart agreement in conformity with the tenor of his licence, and give such security for the performance of his agreement as the Collector may require.

10. (1) The Collector may cancel or suspend any licence granted under this Act—

(a) if any tax, fee or other due payable in respect of such licence be not duly paid; or

(b) if the holder of such licence fails to keep the prescribed accounts or to submit the prescribed returns or if the returns submitted by him are incorrect or incomplete; or

(c) in the event of any breach by the holder of such licence or by his agents or servants or by any one acting with his express or implied permission on his behalf, of any of the terms or conditions of such licence; or

(d) if the holder of such licence is convicted of any offence against this Act or any other Revenue Law, or of any cognizable and non-bailable offence under the Indian Penal Code; or

(e) if the conditions of such licence provide for the cancellation or suspension thereof for any other reason.

(2) Where a licence is cancelled or suspended under sub-section (1), the holder of the licence shall not be entitled to claim from the Provincial Government any compensation for such cancellation or suspension, nor shall such holder be entitled to claim the refund of any sum paid to, or deposit made with, the Provincial Government, in respect of the licence.

11. All taxes, fees, fines and other sums payable to the Provincial Government under any of the provisions of this Act or of any licence granted under it, may be recovered from the person primarily liable to pay the same, or from his surety (if any), as if they were arrears of land revenue.

Recovery of fees, etc.
Obligation of licensee to keep books of account and submit returns.

12. (1) Every licensee under this Act shall, in respect of each licence held by him—

(a) keep such books of account and in such form as may be prescribed; and

(b) submit to the Collector and to such other officers as may be prescribed, a return in such form, containing such particulars and at such intervals, as may be prescribed.

(2) The accounts kept by a licensee under sub-section (1) and the stocks of tobacco with him shall be open to inspection by such officers as the Provincial Government may authorize in that behalf.

(3) Any such officer shall have power to enter and search any place where any licensee carries on business or keeps any stock of tobacco.

(4) Any officer empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf, may for the purposes of this Act, require any dealer carrying on business in tobacco to produce before him the accounts and other documents and to furnish any other information relating to such business.

13. Subject to the control and direction of the Provincial Government, the Commissioner shall superintend the working of this Act and the collection of tobacco revenue in all areas in the Province of Madras to which this Act is applied.

Duties of commissioner.

14. Subject to the control and direction of the Provincial Government and of the Commissioner, Collectors of districts shall be responsible for the collection of tobacco revenue and the carrying out of the provisions of this Act in all areas in their respective districts to which this Act is applied.

Collectors charged with the carrying out of the provisions of the Act.

15. The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint in any district or portion of a district any person other than the Collector of the district, to exercise all or any of the powers or to perform all or any of the duties conferred or imposed by this Act on a Collector, subject to such control and direction, if any, in addition to the control and direction of the Provincial Government and of the Commissioner, as the Provincial Government may from time to time direct.

Appointment of Special Collectors.

16. The Provincial Government, or subject to their general or special orders, the Commissioner, may appoint any person, by name or by virtue of his office, to be a Tobacco Officer and assign to him such powers and duties under this Act as the Provincial Government or the Commissioner may think fit.

Appointment of Tobacco Officers.

17. (1) A Collector, a Tobacco Officer specially empowered in this behalf, or a Magistrate, may issue a warrant for the arrest of any person whom he has reason to believe to have committed an offence against this Act.

Issue of warrants for arrest.

(2) All warrants issued under sub-section (1) shall be executed in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, by a Police officer, or by a Tobacco Officer specially empowered in this behalf, or if the officer issuing the warrant deems fit, by any other person.

Power of entry and search without warrant.

18. A Collector or a Tobacco Officer, specially empowered in this behalf, may—

(a) enter and search any place in which he has reason to believe that any tobacco liable to confiscation under this Act is kept or concealed;

(b) seize any tobacco or any other article which he has reason to believe is liable to confiscation under this Act; and

(c) detain, search and arrest any person whom he has reason to believe to be guilty of any offence against this Act.

Procedure for arrest without warrant.

19. The provisions of section 61 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, shall apply to all arrests without warrant made under section 18.

Duty of officers to report offences, etc.

20. Every officer employed by the Provincial Government or by any local body shall be bound—

(a) to give immediate information at the nearest police station, or if so required by any general or special order issued by the Provincial Government to the nearest Tobacco Officer empowered in this behalf, of any breach of any of the provisions of this Act, or of the intention or preparation to commit any such breach, which may come to his knowledge;

(b) to take all reasonable measures in his power to prevent the commission of any such breach which he may know or have reason to believe is about or likely to be committed; and

(c) to assist any Tobacco Officer in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

Tobacco Officers to have powers of investigation.

21. (1) Every Tobacco Officer empowered in this behalf shall, within the area for which he is appointed, have power to investigate all offences against this Act.

(2) Every such officer shall in the conduct of such investigation exercise the powers conferred by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, upon an officer in charge of a police station for the investigation of cognizable offence:

Provided that—

(a) if such officer is of opinion that there is not sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of an accused to a Magistrate, or that the person arrested may be discharged with a warning, such officer shall release him on his executing a bond, with or without sureties, to appear if and when so required before a Magistrate and shall make a full report of the case to the Collector; and

(b) the powers of such officer shall be subject to such further modifications and restrictions as the Provincial Government may determine.

Offences to be bailable.

22. (1) All offences against this Act shall be bailable.

(2) Any Tobacco Officer empowered under section 21 shall have power to grant bail in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, to any person arrested without warrant for an offence against this Act.

23. When anything has been seized by a Tobacco Officer exercising powers under section 21, such officer, after such inquiry as he considers necessary—

(a) if it appears that such thing is required as evidence in the case of any person arrested, shall forward the thing to the Magistrate to whom such person is forwarded or for his appearance before whom bail has been taken;

(b) if it appears that such thing is liable to confiscation but is not required as evidence as aforesaid, shall send the thing with a report of the particulars of the seizure to the Collector; and

(c) if no offence appears to have been committed, shall return the thing to the person from whose possession it was taken and make a report to the Collector.

Penalties.

24. Any person who—

(a) in contravention of this Act or of any rule or order made thereunder or of any terms or conditions of a licence, sells, exposes for sale, or keeps, any tobacco or carries on business as a wholesale dealer, manufacturer, broker or commission agent, or

(b) fails to keep books of account as required by clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 12, or

(c) fails to submit any return as required by clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 12, or submits an incorrect or incomplete return, or

(d) fails to pay within the time allowed, or fraudulently evades the payment of, any tax, fee or other sum due from him to the Provincial Government, or

(e) acts in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule, notification or order or of any terms or conditions of a licence made, issued or granted thereunder, shall, on conviction by a Magistrate, be liable to a fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and where the breach is a continuing one, to a further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues. Such person shall also be liable to pay any tax or fee which he would have had to pay if he had conformed to the provisions of this Act. The amount of such tax or fee or both, as the case may be, shall be determined by the Magistrate and shall be recoverable as if it were a fine.

25. Whoever intentionally obstructs a Tobacco Officer in the exercise of any Punishment for obstructing officers in the performance of duties.

powers conferred or the performance of any duties imposed on him by this Act shall, on conviction by a Magistrate, be liable to imprisonment which may extend to three months, or to fine which may extend to five hundred rupees or to both.

26. Whenever an offence against this Act has been committed, all tobacco in respect of which such offence has been committed and every box, receptacle, package, or covering in which such tobacco is contained and all other contents of such box, receptacle, package or covering, shall be liable to confiscation.

27. (1) When in any case tried by a Magistrate, the Magistrate decides that anything is liable to confiscation under section 26, he may, after hearing the person, if any, claiming right thereto and the evidence, if any, which he produces in support of his claim, order confiscation or may give the owner an option to pay such fine as the Magistrate deems fit in lieu of confiscation.

(2) When an offence against this Act has been committed but the offender is not known or cannot be found, or when anything liable to confiscation under this Act and not in the possession of any person cannot be satisfactorily accounted for, the case shall be inquired into and determined by a Tobacco Officer who may order confiscation:

Provided that no such order shall be made until the expiration of one month from the date of seizure of the things intended to be confiscated or without hearing the persons, if any, claiming any right thereto and the evidence, if any, which they produce in support of their claims.

28. (1) (a) A Collector, or a Tobacco Officer specially empowered in this behalf, may accept from any person who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed an offence against this Act, by way of composition of such offence—

(i) where the offence consists of a sale of tobacco in contravention of this Act or of the failure to pay or the evasion of any tax, fee or sum payable under this Act, in addition to the tax, fee or sum recoverable from him, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees or double the amount of the tax, fee or sum recoverable from him whichever is greater, and

(ii) in other cases, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees.

(b) On the payment of such sum of money and the tax, fee or sum, if any, recoverable under this Act, to the officer mentioned in clause (a), the accused person shall be discharged, the property seized, if any, shall be released and no further proceedings shall be taken against such person or property in respect of such offence.

(2) A Collector, or a Tobacco Officer specially empowered in this behalf, may accept by way of composition, from any person whose licence is liable to be cancelled or suspended under this Act, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees in lieu of such cancellation or suspension.

29. (1) No Magistrate shall take cognizance of any offence against this Act—

(i) except upon the complaint or report of a Collector, or a Tobacco Officer or of an Excise, Prohibition, or Police Officer, or

(ii) except upon his own knowledge or suspicion.

(2) Except with the sanction of the Provincial Government, no Magistrate shall take cognizance of any offence against this Act, unless the prosecution is instituted within six months from the date on which the offence is alleged to have been committed:

Provided that nothing contained in this sub-section shall apply to any case governed by section 31.

30. (1) No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall lie against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government, for any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, without the previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

(2) No officer or servant of the Provincial Government shall be liable in respect of any such act in any civil or criminal proceeding, if the act was done in good faith in the course of the execution of duties or the discharge of functions imposed by or under this Act.

31. No suit shall be instituted against the Crown and no suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall be instituted against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government in respect of any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, unless the suit, prosecution or other proceeding is instituted within six months from the date of the act complained of.

32. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) all matters expressly required or allowed by this Act to be prescribed;

(b) the regulation of the sale, custody and transport of tobacco, or of any form of tobacco, for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act;

(c) the cases or classes of cases in which and the authorities to whom appeals shall lie from orders (not being orders passed by any Court or Magistrate) whether original or appellate, passed under this Act or under any rule made thereunder, the authorities by whom such orders may be revised, the time within which and the manner in which appeals may be presented and the procedure for dealing with such appeals;

(d) the disposal of articles confiscated and of the proceeds thereof;

(e) the powers and duties which may be exercised and performed by Tobacco Officers and the procedure to be followed by them;

(f) the delegation of powers conferred by this Act; and

(g) any other matter for which there is no provision or no sufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.

(3) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall, except on the first occasion of the exercise thereof, be subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication for a period of not less than one month.

33. If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act or the rules made thereunder, the Provincial Government may, as occasion may arise, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.

THE MADRAS GENERAL SALES TAX ACT, 1939.

ACT No. IX OF 1939.

[4th June, 1939.]

An Act to provide for the levy of a general tax on the sale of goods in the Province of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the levy of a general tax on the sale of goods in the Province of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE MADRAS GENERAL SALES TAX ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Province of Madras.

(3) This section shall come into force at once, and the rest of this Act shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette, appoint.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(a) "assessing authority" means any person authorized by the Provincial Government to make any assessment under this Act;

(b) "dealer" means any person who carries on the business of buying or selling goods;

Explanation (1).—A co-operative society, a club, a firm, or any association which sells goods to its members is a dealer within the meaning of this clause.

Explanation (2).—The agent of a person resident outside the Province who carries on the business of buying or selling goods in the Province shall be deemed to be the dealer in respect of such business for the purposes of this Act.

(c) "goods" means all kinds of movable property other than actionable claims, stocks and shares and securities and includes all materials, commodities, and articles;

(d) "licence" means a licence granted or renewed under this Act;
 (e) "notification" means a notification published in the Fort St. George Gazette;

(f) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(g) "Province" means the Province of Madras;

(h) "sale" with all its grammatical variations and cognate expressions means every transfer of the property in goods by one person to another in the course of trade or business for cash or for deferred payment or other valuable consideration, but does not include a mortgage, hypothecation, charge or pledge;

Explanation.—A transfer of goods on the hire-purchase or other instalment system of payment shall, notwithstanding the fact that the seller retains the title in the goods as security for payment of the price, be deemed to be a sale.

(i) "turnover" means the aggregate amount for which goods are either bought by or sold by a dealer, whether for cash or for deferred payment or other valuable consideration provided that the proceeds of the sale by a person of agricultural or horticultural produce grown by himself or grown on any land in which he has an interest whether as owner, usufructuary mortgagee, tenant or otherwise, shall be excluded from his turnover;

Explanation.—Subject to such conditions and restrictions, if any, as may be prescribed in this behalf—

(i) the amount for which goods are sold shall include any sums charged for anything done by the dealer in respect of the goods sold at the time of or before the delivery thereof;

(ii) any cash or other discount on the price allowed in respect of any sale and any amount refunded in respect of articles returned by customers shall not be included in the turnover; and

(iii) where for accommodating a particular customer, a dealer obtains goods from another dealer and immediately disposes of the same to the said customer, the sale in respect of such goods shall be included in the turnover of the latter dealer but not in that of the former; and

(j) "year" means the financial year.

3. (1) Subject to the provisions of this Act, Liability to tax under the every dealer shall pay in each year a tax in accordance with the scale specified below:—

- | | |
|---|---|
| (a) If his turnover does not exceed twenty thousand rupees. | Five rupees per month. |
| (b) If his turnover exceeds twenty thousand rupees. | One-half of one per cent. of such turnover. |

Provided that any dealer whose turnover in any year is less than ten thousand rupees shall not be liable to pay the tax under this sub-section for that year:

Provided further (1) that in respect of the same transaction of sale, the buyer and the seller shall not both be taxed, but only one of them, as shall be determined by the rules made in this behalf under sub-section (2), shall be taxed thereon, and (2) that, when the amount for which any goods were bought by a dealer has been included in his turnover, the amount for which the same goods were sold by him shall not be included in his turnover, for the purposes of this Act.

(2) The turnover for all the purposes of this Act shall be determined in accordance with, and the tax shall be assessed, levied and collected in such manner and in such instalment as may be prescribed by, the rules made by the Provincial Government in this behalf:

Provided that no rule for the determination of the turnover shall come into force unless approved by a resolution of the Legislative Assembly.

(3) Subject to any rules made under sub-section (2), the assessing authority may fix the turnover of any dealer in any year at the amount of his turnover in the previous year.

4. The provisions of section 3 of this Act shall not apply to the sale of electrical energy, motor spirit as defined in the Madras Sales of Motor Spirit Taxation Act, 1939, manufactured tobacco as defined in the Madras Tobacco (Taxation of Sales and Licensing) Act, 1939, and any goods on which duty is or may be levied under the Madras Abkari Act, 1886, or the Opium Act, 1878.

5. Subject to such restrictions and conditions as may be prescribed, including conditions as to licences and licence fees, the sale of bullion and specie, of cotton, of cotton yarn, and of any cloth woven on handlooms and sold by persons dealing exclusively in such cloth shall be exempt from taxation under section 3.

6. Subject to such restrictions and conditions as may be prescribed, including conditions as to licences and licence fees, the sale of hides and skins, hides and skins whether tanned or untanned, shall be taxed under section 3 only at such single point in the series of sales by successive dealers, as may be prescribed.

7. In respect of such finished articles of industrial manufacture as may be notified by the Provincial Government and subject to such restrictions and conditions as may be prescribed, a rebate shall be allowed of one-half of the tax levied on sales of such articles for delivery outside the Province if such articles are actually so delivered.

8. The Provincial Government may, on application and on payment of such fee as may be prescribed in that behalf, license any person under this section who for an agreed commission or brokerage buys or sells on behalf of known principals specified in his accounts in respect of each transaction and may exempt from the tax under section 3 such of his transactions as are carried out in accordance with the terms and conditions of his licence:

Provided always that, save where the transaction consists of a sale by a grower of produce grown by him or on his land, no such exemption shall be given unless the amounts for which the goods concerned in such transactions are sold, are included in the turnover of the principals or of the dealers from whom purchases were made, or would have been so included but for an exemption provided under this Act.

9. (1) Every dealer whose turnover is ten thousand rupees or more in a year shall submit such return or returns of his turnover, in such manner, and within such periods as may be specified in the rules made under sub-section (2) of section 3.

(2) (a) If the assessing authority is satisfied that any return submitted under sub-section (1) is correct and complete, he shall assess the dealer on the basis thereof.

(b) If no return is submitted by the dealer under sub-section (1) before the date prescribed or specified in that behalf or if the return submitted by him appears to the assessing authority to be incorrect or incomplete, the assessing authority shall proceed to determine the turnover in accordance with the rules made under sub-section (2) of section 3:

Provided that before taking action under this clause, the dealer shall be given a reasonable opportunity of proving the correctness and completeness of any return submitted by him.

10. The tax assessed under this Act shall be paid in such manner and in such instalments, if any, and within such time, as may be specified in the notice of assessment, not being less than fifteen days from the date of service of the notice. In default of such payment, the whole of the amount then remaining due may be recovered as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

11. (1) Any assessee objecting to an assessment made on him may, within thirty days from the date on which he was served with notice of the assessment, appeal to such authority as Appeals.
may be prescribed:

Provided that no appeal shall be entertained under this sub-section unless it is accompanied by satisfactory proof of the payment of the tax admitted by the appellant to be due or of such instalments thereof as might have become payable, as the case may be.

(2) The appeal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner.

(3) The appellate authority may, after giving the appellant an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders on the appeal as such authority may think fit.

(4) Every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the powers of revision conferred by section 12, be final.

12. The Board of Revenue may in its discretion at any time either suo motu or on application, call for and examine the record of any order passed by, or any proceedings recorded by, any officer or person under this Act for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of such order, or as to the regularity of such proceedings, and may pass such order in reference thereto as it thinks fit. Revision.

Nothing contained in this section shall apply to the orders or proceedings of any Court or Magistrate.

13. Every dealer and every person licensed under section 8 shall keep and maintain a true and correct account showing the value of the goods sold and bought by him; and in case the Accounts to be maintained by dealers. accounts maintained in the ordinary course, do not show the same in an intelligible form, he shall maintain a true and correct account in such form as may be prescribed in this behalf:

Provided that this section shall not apply to petty dealers whose business is such as is not likely to make them liable to taxation under this Act.

14. (1) Any officer empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf, may, for the purposes of this Act, require any dealer carrying on business in any kind of goods to produce before him the accounts and other documents, and to furnish any other information relating to such business. Powers to order production of accounts and powers of entry and inspection.

(2) All accounts and registers maintained by dealers in the ordinary course of their business, the goods in their possession and their offices, shops, godowns, vessels or vehicles shall be open to inspection at all reasonable times by such officers as may be authorized in this behalf.

(3) Any such officer shall have power to enter, for the purpose referred to in sub-section (2), any office, shop, godown, vessel, vehicle or any other place in which business is done.

Offences and penalties.

15. Any person who—

(a) wilfully submits an untrue return or fails to submit a return as required by the provisions of this Act or the rules made thereunder, or

(b) fails to pay the tax due from him within the time allowed, or

(c) prevents or obstructs inspection or entry by any officer authorized under section 14, in contravention of the terms thereof, or

(d) fraudulently evades the payment of any tax due under this Act, or

(e) wilfully acts in contravention of any of the provisions of this Act, shall, on conviction by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, be liable to a fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, and where the breach is a continuing breach, to a further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues.

16. The prescribed authority may accept from any person who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed an offence against this Act, by way of composition of such offence—

(a) where the offence consists of the failure to pay, or the evasion of, any tax recoverable under this Act, in addition to the tax so recoverable, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees or double the amount of the tax recoverable, whichever is greater, and

(b) in other cases, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees.

17. (1) No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall lie against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government, for any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, without the previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

Bar of certain proceedings.

(2) No officer or servant of the Provincial Government shall be liable in respect of any such act in any civil or criminal proceeding, if the act was done in good faith in the course of the execution of duties or the discharge of functions imposed by or under this Act.

18. No suit shall be instituted against the Crown and no suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall be instituted against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government in respect of any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, unless the suit, prosecution or other proceeding is instituted within six months from the date of the act complained of.

Limitation for certain suits and prosecutions.

19. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Power to make rules.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may provide for—

(a) all matters expressly required or allowed by this Act to be prescribed;
(b) the licensing of persons engaged in the sale of goods and the imposing of conditions in respect of the same for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act and fees for licences;

(c) the assessment to tax under this Act of businesses which are discontinued or the ownership of which has changed;

(d) the assessment to tax under this Act of businesses owned by minors and other incapacitated persons or by persons residing outside the Province of Madras;

(e) the assessment of a business owned by any person whose estate or any portion of whose estate is under the control of the Court of Wards, the Administrator-General, the Official Trustee, or any receiver or manager appointed by or under any order of a Court;

(f) the assessment to tax under this Act of any turnover which has escaped assessment, and the period within which such assessment may be made, not exceeding three years;

(g) the rectification of mistakes apparent from the record of any assessment, appeal or revision and the period within which such rectification may be made;

(h) compelling the submission of returns and the production of documents and enforcing the attendance of persons and examining them on oath or affirmation;

(i) securing that returns furnished or accounts or documents produced or evidence of any kind given under this Act before any assessing authority or on appeal or revision from any decision of such authority are kept confidential;

(j) the duties and powers of officers appointed for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of this Act;

(k) generally regulating the procedure to be followed and the forms to be adopted in proceedings under this Act; and

(l) any other matter for which there is no provision or no sufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.

(3) In making a rule under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), the Provincial Government may provide that a person guilty of a breach thereof shall, on conviction by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class, be punishable with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees and, where the breach is a continuing one, with further fine which may extend to fifty rupees for every day after the first during which the breach continues.

(4) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall be subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication for a period of not less than four weeks.

(5) All rules made under this section shall be published in the Fort St. George Gazette, and upon such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Act.

20. If, when this Act comes into force, the tax is leviable for the second half of any year, it shall be levied in accordance with the scale specified in section 3 and on the basis of the turnover as determined in accordance with the rules made under this Act.

Transitional provision for levy of tax.

21. If any difficulty arises in giving effect to the provisions of this Act, the Provincial Government may, as occasion may require, by order, do anything which appears to them necessary for the purpose of removing the difficulty.

Power to remove difficulties.

THE MADRAS ENTERTAINMENTS TAX ACT, 1939.

ACT No. X OF 1939.

[10th June, 1939.]

An Act to impose a tax on amusements and other entertainments in the Province of Madras.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the levy by the Provincial Government of a tax on amusements and other entertainments, to repeal the Madras Local Authorities Entertainments Tax Act, 1926, and to provide for the payment of compensation to local authorities now levying a tax under the Act aforesaid; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE MADRAS ENTERTAINMENTS TAX ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of the Province of Madras.

(3) This section shall come into force at once, and the rest of this Act shall come into force on such date as the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, appoint.

Repeal of Madras Act V of 1927.

2. The Madras Local Authorities Entertainments Tax Act, 1926, is hereby repealed.

Definitions.

3. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context—

(1) "admission" includes admission as a spectator or as one of an audience, and admission for the purpose of amusement by taking part in an entertainment;

(2) "admission to an entertainment" includes admission to any place in which an entertainment is held;

(3) "agriculture" includes horticulture and the breeding of animals of every description;

(4) "entertainment" includes any exhibition, performance, amusement, game, sport or race to which persons are admitted for payment;

(5) "institution" includes a company, society, club or other association of persons by whatever name called;

(6) "local authority" means the Corporation of Madras, or a municipal council or a local board constituted under any enactment for the time being in force;

(7) "payment for admission" includes—

(a) any payment made by a person who, having been admitted to one part of a place of entertainment, is subsequently admitted to another part thereof, for admission to which a payment involving a tax or a higher tax is required;

(b) any payment for seats or other accommodation in a place of entertainment; and

(c) any payment for any purpose whatsoever connected with an entertainment which a person is required to make as a condition of attending or continuing to attend the entertainment in addition to the payment, if any, for admission to the entertainment;

(8) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act; and

(9) "proprietor" in relation to any entertainment includes any person responsible for the management thereof.

4. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, there shall be levied, and paid to the Provincial Government, on all payments for admission to any entertainment, a tax (hereinafter referred to as the entertainments tax) at the following rates, namely:—

Where the payment, excluding the amount of the tax—		Amount of tax.
(i) is not more than two annas		Three pias.
(ii) is more than two annas but less than six annas		Six pias.
(iii) is six annas or more but is less than twelve annas		One anna.
(iv) is twelve annas or more but is less than one rupee eight annas		Two annas.
(v) is one rupee eight annas or more but is less than two rupees eight annas		Four annas.
(vi) is two rupees eight annas or more but is less than three rupees eight annas		Eight annas.
(vii) is three rupees eight annas or more but is less than four rupees eight annas		Twelve annas.
(viii) is four rupees eight annas or more but is less than six rupees eight annas		One rupee.
(ix) is six rupees eight annas or more but is less than nine rupees eight annas		One rupee eight annas.
(x) is nine rupees eight annas or more but is less than ten rupees		Two rupees.
(xi) is ten rupees or more		Two rupees in respect of the first ten rupees and two rupees for every ten rupees or portion thereof in excess of the first ten rupees.

5. The Provincial Government may, on the application of the proprietor of any entertainment in respect of which the entertainments tax is payable under section 4, allow the proprietor on such conditions as they may lay down—

(a) to compound the tax payable in respect of such entertainment for a fixed sum; or

(b) to pay the amount of the tax due by means of a consolidated payment at such percentage of the gross proceeds received by the proprietor on account of payments for admission to such entertainment and on account of the tax, as the Provincial Government may fix.

6. (1) Save in the cases referred to in section 5, no person shall be admitted for payment to any entertainment where the payment is subject to the entertainments tax except—

(a) with a ticket stamped with an impressed, embossed, engraved or adhesive stamp (not previously used) issued by the Provincial Government and indicating the proper tax for such ticket, or

(b) in special cases, with the approval of the Provincial Government, through a barrier which, or by means of a mechanical contrivance which automatically registers the number of persons admitted, unless the proprietor of the entertainment has made arrangements approved by the Provincial Government for furnishing returns of the payments for admission to the entertainment and has given security up to an amount and in a manner approved by the Provincial Government for the payment of the entertainments tax.

(2) Nothing in sub-section (1) shall be deemed to preclude the Provincial Government from requiring security from the proprietor of an entertainment for the payment of the entertainments tax in any other case.

7. (1) The entertainments tax shall be levied in respect of each person admitted for payment, and in the case of admission by stamped ticket, shall be paid by means of the stamp on the ticket, and, in the case of admission otherwise than by stamped ticket, shall be calculated and paid on the number of admissions.

(2) The entertainments tax in the case of admission otherwise than by stamped ticket, shall be recoverable from the proprietor.

(3) Where the payment for admission to an entertainment is made wholly or partly by means of a lump sum paid as a subscription or contribution to any institution, or for a season ticket or for the right of admission to a series of entertainments or to any entertainment during a certain period of time, the entertainments tax shall be paid on the amount of the lump sum, but where the Provincial Government are of opinion that the payment of a lump sum or any payment for a ticket represents payment for other privileges, rights or purposes besides the admission in an entertainment, or covers admission to an entertainment during any period during which the tax has not been in operation, the tax shall be levied on such an amount as appears to the Provincial Government to represent the right of admission to entertainments in respect of which the entertainments tax is payable.

8. (1) The entertainments tax shall not be levied on payment for admission to any entertainment where the Provincial Government are satisfied—

(a) that the entire gross proceeds of the entertainment are devoted to philanthropic, religious or charitable purposes without any charge on such proceeds for any expenses of the entertainment; or

(b) that the entertainment is of a wholly educational character; or

(c) that the entertainment is provided for purposes which are partly educational, cultural or scientific by an institution not conducted or established for profit; or

(d) that the entertainment is provided by an institution not conducted for profit and established solely for the purpose of promoting the public health or the interests of agriculture or of a manufacturing industry, and consists solely of an exhibition of articles which are of material interest in connection with questions relating to public health or agriculture, or of the products of the industry for promoting the interests of which the institution exists or of the materials, machinery, appliances or foodstuffs used in the production of those products.

(2) The Provincial Government may, by general or special order, exempt any entertainment or class of entertainments from liability to the entertainments tax.

9. Where the Provincial Government are satisfied that the whole of the net proceeds of an entertainment are devoted to philanthropic, religious or charitable purposes, and that in calculating the net proceeds, not more than twenty-five per cent. of the gross proceeds have been deducted on account of the expenses of the entertainment, they shall repay to the proprietor the amount of the entertainments tax paid in respect of the entertainment.

Manner of recovery of tax. 10. Any amount due on account of the entertainments tax may be recovered by the Provincial Government as if it were an arrear of land revenue.

11. (1) (a) Any officer authorized by the Provincial Government in this behalf may enter any place of entertainment while the entertainment is proceeding, and any place ordinarily used as a place of entertainment at any reasonable time, for the purpose of seeing whether the provisions of this Act or any rules made thereunder are being complied with.

(b) Every officer so authorized shall be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Indian Penal Code.

(2) The proprietor of every entertainment or the owner or person in charge of any place ordinarily used as a place of entertainment shall give every reasonable assistance to the inspecting officer in the performance of his duties under sub-section (1).

(3) If any person prevents or obstructs the entry of the inspecting officer, he shall, in addition to any other punishment to which he is liable under any law for the time being in force, be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

12. The officer referred to in section 11 or any other officer who has to enter any place of entertainment in pursuance of a duty imposed upon him by or under this Act or any other law shall not be required to pay for his admission to the entertainment.

13. (1) From the proceeds of the tax collected under this Act every year, there shall be paid to each of the local authorities which were in receipt of an income from the tax levied under the Madras Local Authorities Entertainments Tax Act, 1926, during any part of the three years preceding the 1st April, 1939, a sum equivalent to the average net annual income derived by such local authority during those three years from the tax so levied:

Provided that from the amount payable under this sub-section to any local authority for the first year after the commencement of this Act, the net income derived by that authority from any tax levied on and after the 1st April of that year under the Madras Local Authorities Entertainments Tax Act, 1926, shall be deducted.

Explanation.—In this sub-section, “year” shall mean the financial year.

(2) The Provincial Government shall determine the sums which should be paid to local authorities under sub-section (1) and their determination shall be final.

Penalties.

14. The proprietor of any entertainment who—

(a) admits any person for payment to any place of entertainment in contravention of the provisions of section 6, or

(b) fails to pay the tax due from him within the time prescribed, or

(c) fraudulently evades the payment of any tax due under this Act, or

(d) contravenes any of the provisions of this Act, shall, on conviction by a Magistrate, be liable in respect of each such offence to a fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, and shall in addition, be liable to pay any tax which should have been paid.

15. The prescribed authority may accept from any person who has committed or is reasonably suspected of having committed an offence against this Act, by way of composition of such offence—

(a) where the offence consists of the failure to pay, or the evasion of, any tax payable under this Act, in addition to the tax so payable, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees or double the amount of the tax payable, whichever is greater, and

(b) in other cases, a sum of money not exceeding five hundred rupees.

16. (1) The Provincial Government may make rules for securing the payment of the entertainments tax and generally for carrying into effect the purposes of this Act.

Power to make rules.

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, they may make rules—

(a) for the supply and use of stamps or stamped or embossed tickets, or for the stamping or embossing of tickets sent to be stamped or embossed, and for securing the defacement of stamps when used;

(b) for the use of tickets covering the admission of more than one person and the calculation of the tax thereon; and for the payment of the tax on the transfer from one part of a place of entertainment to another, and on payments for seats or other accommodation;

(c) for controlling the use of barriers or mechanical contrivances (including the prevention of the use of the same barrier or mechanical contrivance for payments of a different amount) and for securing proper records of admission by means of barriers or mechanical contrivances;

(d) for the checking of admissions, the keeping of accounts and the furnishing of returns by the proprietors of entertainments to which the provisions of section 5 are applied or in respect of which the arrangements approved by the Provincial Government for furnishing returns are made under section 6;

(e) for the renewal of damaged or spoiled stamps and for the procedure to be followed on applications for refund under this Act or under the rules made thereunder;

(f) for the keeping of accounts of all stamps used under this Act;

(g) for the presentation and disposal of applications for exemption from payment of the entertainments tax, or for the refund thereof, made under the provisions of this Act;

(h) for the collection of the entertainments tax under this Act and the powers to be exercised by the officers of the Provincial Government in that behalf;

(i) for authorizing any local authority to collect the entertainments tax on behalf of the Provincial Government in the area within the jurisdiction of the local authority or any part of such area, for the payment of a commission to the local authority for making the collection, and for the powers to be exercised by the officers of the local authority in connexion with such collection;

(j) for the issue of passes by proprietors of entertainments for the admission of officers who have to perform any duty in connexion therewith or any other duty imposed upon them by law; and

(k) for any other matter for which there is no provision or no sufficient provision in this Act and for which provision is, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, necessary for giving effect to the purposes of this Act.

(3) In making a rule under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), the Provincial Government may provide that a breach thereof shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

(4) The power to make rules conferred by this section shall, except on the first occasion of the exercise thereof, be subject to the condition of the rules being made after previous publication for a period of not less than one month.

(5) All rules made under this section shall be published in the Official Gazette, and on such publication shall have effect as if enacted in this Act.

17. (1) No suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall lie against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government, for any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, without the previous sanction of the Provincial Government.

(2) No officer or servant of the Provincial Government shall be liable in respect of any such act in any civil or criminal proceeding, if the act was done in good faith in the course of the execution of duties or the discharge of the functions imposed by or under this Act.

18. No suit shall be instituted against the Crown and no suit, prosecution or other proceeding shall be instituted against any officer or servant of the Provincial Government in respect of any act done or purporting to be done under this Act, unless the suit, prosecution or other proceeding is instituted within six months from the date of the act complained of.

19. If any local authority has been authorized under this Act to collect the entertainments tax on behalf of the Provincial Government, the provisions of sections 17 and 18 shall apply in regard to the officers and servants of such authority in the same manner as they apply in regard to the officers and servants of the Provincial Government.

20. (1) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, delegate all or any of their powers under this Act except those conferred upon them by sub-section (3) of section 1, section 16 and this section, to any person or authority subordinate to the Provincial Government, and may in like manner withdraw any powers so delegated.

(2) The exercise of any powers delegated under sub-section (1) shall be subject to such restrictions, limitations and conditions, if any, as may be laid down by the Provincial Government, and shall also be subject to control and revision by them.

THE MADRAS DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES AND LOCAL BOARDS AMENDMENT ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XI OF 1939.

[11th June, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, and the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920, and the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE MADRAS DISTRICT MUNICIPALITIES AND LOCAL BOARDS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of sections 40 and 83, Madras Act V of 1920.

2. In the Madras District Municipalities Act, 1920—

(i) after sub-section (2) of section 40, the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(3) Any person removed under sub-section (1) from the office of chairman or from the office of vice-chairman shall not be eligible for election to either of the said offices until the date on which notice of the next ordinary elections to the municipal council is published in the prescribed manner, or the expiry of six months from the date of the removal, whichever is earlier.”; and

(ii) in sub-section (1) of section 83, for clause (e), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

"(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing sub-sections, when the assessee is a firm and the total income of the firm has been assessed under sub-section (1), sub-section (3) or sub-section (4), as the case may be,—

(a) in the case of a registered firm, the sum payable by the firm itself shall not be determined but the total income of each partner of the firm, including therein his share of its income, profits and gains of the previous year, shall be assessed and the sum payable by him on the basis of such assessment shall be determined:

Provided that if such share of any partner is a loss it shall be set off against his other income or carried forward and set-off in accordance with the provisions of section 24:

Provided further that when any of such partner, is a person not resident in British India his share of the income, profits and gains of the firm shall be assessed on the firm at the rates which would be applicable if it were assessed on him personally, and the sum so determined as payable shall be paid by the firm; and

(b) in the case of an unregistered firm, the Income-tax Officer may instead of determining the sum payable by the firm itself proceed in the manner laid down in clause (a) as applicable to a registered firm, if, in his opinion, the aggregate amount of the tax including super-tax, if any, payable by the partners under such procedure would be greater than the aggregate amount which would be payable by the firm and the partners individually if the firm were assessed as an unregistered firm."

Amendment of section
23-A, Act XI of 1922.

26. In section 23-A of the said Act,—

(a) sub-section (1) shall be omitted;

(b) sub-section (2) shall be re-numbered sub-section (1), and—

(i) for the portion of the said sub-section preceding the proviso the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) Where the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that in respect of any previous year the profits and gains distributed as dividends by any company up to the end of the sixth month after its accounts for that previous year are laid before the company in general meeting increased by any income-tax payable thereon are less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company of that previous year, he shall, unless he is satisfied that having regard to losses incurred by the company in earlier years or to the smallness of the profit made, the payment of a dividend or a larger dividend than that declared would be unreasonable, make with the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner an order in writing that the undistributed portion of the assessable income of the company of that previous year as computed for income-tax purposes shall be deemed to have been distributed as dividends amongst the shareholders as at the date of the general meeting aforesaid, and thereupon the proportionate share thereof of each shareholder shall be included in the total income of such shareholder for the purpose of assessing his total income:

Power to assess individual members of certain companies.

Provided that when the reserves representing accumulations of past profits which have not been the subject of an order under this sub-section exceed the paid up capital of the company, together with any loan capital which is the property of the shareholders, or the actual cost of the fixed assets of the company whichever of these is greater, this section shall apply as if instead of the words 'sixty per cent. of the assessable income' the words 'one hundred per cent. of the assessable income' were substituted:

Provided further that no order under this sub-section shall be made where the company has distributed not less than fifty-five per cent. of the assessable income of the company, unless the company, on receipt of a notice from the Income-tax Officer that he proposes to make such an order, fails to make within three months of the receipt of such notice a further distribution of its profits and gains so that the total distribution made is not less than sixty per cent. of the assessable income of the company of the previous year concerned:"

(ii) for the proviso the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"Provided further that this sub-section shall not apply to any company in which the public are substantially interested or to a subsidiary company of such a company if the whole of the share capital of such subsidiary company is held by the parent company or by the nominees thereof."

(iii) in the Explanation, the whole of clause (a), the brackets and letter "(b)" and the whole of clauses (c) and (d) shall be omitted;

(c) sub-section (3) shall be re-numbered as sub-section (2) and in the sub-section, as so re-numbered, before the words "Assistant Commissioner" the word "Inspecting" shall be inserted and the words "firm, association or" shall be omitted;

(d) sub-sections (4) and (5) shall be re-numbered, respectively, sub-sections (3) and (4), and in sub-section (3), as so re-numbered,—

(i) paragraph (i) shall be omitted;

(ii) in paragraph (ii), for the word, brackets and figure "sub-section (2)" the word, brackets and figure "sub-section (1)" shall be substituted; for the words "and may be recovered from such member" the words "if it cannot be recovered from such member" shall be substituted and the words following those words shall be omitted;

(iii) in paragraph (iii), the words "firm or other association" and the words "firm or association" shall be omitted;

(e) after sub-section (4), as re-numbered by the foregoing clause, the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

"(5) When a company is a shareholder deemed under sub-section (1) to have received a dividend, the amount of the dividend thus deemed to have been paid to it shall be deemed to be part of its total income for the purpose also of the application of that sub-section to distributions of profits by that company."

Amendment of section 24,
Act XI of 1922.

27. In section 24 of the said Act,—

(a) to sub-section (1) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that where the assessee is an unregistered firm which has not been assessed under the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23 in the manner applicable to a registered firm, any such loss shall be set-off only against the income, profits and gains of the firm and not against the income, profits and gains of any of the partners of the firm; and where the assessee is a registered firm, any loss which cannot be set-off against other income, profits and gains of the firm shall be apportioned between the partners of the firm and they alone shall be entitled to have the amount of the loss set-off under this section.”;

(b) for sub-section (2) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

“(2) Where any assessee sustains a loss of profits or gains in any year, being a previous year not earlier than the previous year for the assessment for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, under the head ‘Profits and gains of business, profession or vocation’, and the loss cannot be wholly set-off under sub-section (1), the portion not so set-off shall be carried forward to the following year and set-off against the profits and gains, if any, of the assessee from the same business, profession or vocation for that year; and if it cannot be wholly so set off, the amount of loss not so set off shall be carried forward to the following year, and so on; but no loss shall be so carried forward for more than six years, and a loss arising in the previous years for the assessment for the years ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, the 31st day of March, 1941, the 31st day of March, 1942, the 31st day of March, 1943, and the 31st day of March, 1944, respectively, shall be carried forward only for one, two, three, four and five years, respectively:

Provided that nothing herein contained shall entitle any assessee, being a registered firm, to have carried forward and set off any loss which has been apportioned between the partners, under the proviso to sub-section (1), or entitle any assessee, being a partner in an unregistered firm which has not been assessed under the provisions of clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23 in the manner applicable to a registered firm, to have carried forward and set off against his own income any loss sustained by the firm:

Provided further that where an unregistered firm is assessed as a registered firm under clause (b) of sub-section (5) of section 23, during any year, its losses shall also be carried forward and set off under this section as if it were a registered firm:

Provided further that where a change has occurred in the constitution of a firm or where any person carrying on any business, profession or vocation has been succeeded in such capacity by another person, otherwise than by inheritance, nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle any person other than the person incurring the loss to have it set off against his income, profits or gains.

(3) When, in the course of the assessment of the total income of any assessee, it is established that a loss of profits or gains has taken place which he is entitled to have set off under the provisions of this section, the Income-tax Officer shall notify to the assessee by order in writing the amount of the loss as computed by him for the purposes of this section.”

Amendment of section
24-A, Act XI of 1922.

28. In section 24-A of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the words beginning “for the period from the expiry of the last previous year” and ending “for the financial year in which such assessment is made” the following words shall be substituted, namely:—

“of the period from the expiry of the last previous year of which the income has been assessed in his hands to the probable date of his departure from British India, or where he has not been previously assessed, on his total income of the period up to the probable date of his departure from British India. The assessment shall be made on the total income of each completed previous year included in such period at the rate at which such income would have been charged had it been fully assessed, and as respects the period from the expiry of the last of such completed previous years to the probable date of departure the Income-tax Officer shall estimate the total income of such person during such period and assess it at the rate in force for the financial year in which such assessment is made”;

and in the proviso, for the words "or have been assessed at too low a rate" the words "or have been under-assessed, or have been assessed at too low a rate, or have been the subject of excessive relief under this Act but" shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the words "comprised in the period first referred to in" the words "comprised in the relevant period referred to in the first sentence of" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section
24-B, Act XI of 1922.

29. In section 24-B of the said Act,—

(a) for sub-section (2) the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(2) Where a person dies before the publication of the notice referred to in sub-section (1) of section 22 or before he is served with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34, as the case may be, his executor, administrator or other legal representative shall, on the serving of the notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or under section 34, as the case may be, comply therewith, and the Income-tax Officer may proceed to assess the total income of the deceased person as if such executor, administrator or other legal representative were the assessee.";

(b) in sub-section (3), the words, brackets and figure "of sub-section (2)" shall be omitted and after the words "and for this purpose may" the following words shall be inserted, namely:—

"by the issue of the appropriate notice which would have had to be served upon the deceased person had he survived,".

Amendment of section 25,
Act XI of 1922.

30. In section 25 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (3), after the words "is discontinued" the words "then, unless there has been a succession by virtue of which the provisions of sub-section (4) have been rendered applicable," shall be inserted:

(b) after sub-section (3) the following sub-sections shall be inserted, namely:—

"(4) Where the person who was at the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, carrying on any business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1918, is succeeded in such capacity by another person, the change not being merely a change in the constitution of a partnership, no tax shall be payable by the first mentioned person in respect of the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such succession, and such person may further claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall be deemed to have been the income, profits and gains of the said period. Where any such claim is made, an assessment shall be made on the basis of the income, profits and gains of the said period, and, if an amount of tax has already been paid in respect of the income, profits and gains of the previous year exceeding the amount payable on the basis of such assessment, a refund shall be given of the difference.

(5) No claim to the relief afforded under sub-section (3) or sub-section (4) shall be entertained unless it is made before the expiry of one year from the date on which the business, profession or vocation was discontinued or the succession took place, as the case may be."; and

(c) existing sub-section (4) shall be re-numbered sub-section (6), and in that sub-section, so re-numbered, for the words, brackets and figures "sub-section (1) or sub-section (3)" the words, brackets and figures "sub-section (1) sub-section (3) or sub-section (4)" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 25-A, Act XI of 1922.

31. (a) In sub-section (1) of section 25-A of the said Act, the words "that a separation of the members of the family has taken place and" shall be omitted;

(b) in sub-section (2) of section 25-A of the said Act, after the words "Where such an order has been passed" the words "or where any person has succeeded to a business, profession or vocation formerly carried on by a Hindu undivided family whose joint family property has been partitioned on or after the last day on which it carried on such business, profession or vocation" shall be inserted, the words "separation or" shall be omitted, and, in the proviso, for the words "separated members and groups of members" the words "members and groups of members whose joint family property has been partitioned" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 26, Act XI of 1922.

32. In section 26 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1), for the words beginning "the assessments on the firm" and ending "proportionate to his interest in the firm" the words "the assessment shall be made on the firm as constituted" shall be substituted, and to the said sub-section the following provisos shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall, for the purpose of inclusion in the total incomes of the partners, be apportioned between the partners who in such previous year were entitled to receive the same:

Provided further that when the tax assessed upon a partner cannot be recovered from him it shall be recovered from the firm as constituted at the time of making the assessment.";

(b) for sub-section (2), the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(2) Where a person carrying on any business, profession or vocation has been succeeded in such capacity by another person, such person and such other person shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (4) of section 25, each be assessed in respect of his actual share, if any, of the income, profits and gains of the previous year:

Provided that, when the person succeeded in the business, profession or, vocation cannot be found, the assessment of the profits of the year in which the succession took place up to the date of succession, and for the year preceding that year shall be made on the person succeeding him in like manner and to the same amount as it would have been made on the person succeeded or when the tax in respect of the assessment made for either of such years assessed on the person succeeded cannot be recovered from him, it shall be payable by and recoverable from the person succeeding, and such person shall be entitled to recover from the person succeeded the amount of any tax so paid."

Amendment of section 27, Act XI of 1922.

33. In section 27 of the said Act, the words "or in the case of a company, the principal officer thereof" shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 28, Act XI of 1922

34. In section 28 of the said Act,—

(a) for sub section (1) the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) If the Income-tax Officer, the Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Commissioner, in the course of any proceedings under this Act, is satisfied that any person—

(a) has without reasonable cause failed to furnish the return of his total income which he was required to furnish by notice given under subsection (1) or sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34 or has without reasonable cause failed to furnish it within the time allowed and in the manner required by such notice, or

(b) has without reasonable cause failed to comply with a notice under sub-section (4) of section 22 or sub-section (2) of section 23, or

(c) has concealed the particulars of his income or deliberately furnished inaccurate particulars of such income, he may direct that such person shall pay by way of penalty, in the case referred to in clause (a), in addition to the amount of the income-tax and super-tax, if any, payable by him, a sum not exceeding one and a half times that amount, and in the cases referred to in clauses (b) and (c), in addition to any tax payable by him, a sum not exceeding one and a half times the amount of the income tax and super-tax, if any, which would have been avoided if the income as returned by such person had been accepted as the correct income:

Provided that—

(a) no penalty for failure to furnish the return of his total income shall be imposed on an assessee whose total income is less than three thousand five hundred rupees unless he has been served with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22;

(b) where a person has failed to comply with a notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or section 34 and proves that he has no income liable to tax, the penalty imposable under this sub-section shall be a penalty not exceeding twenty-five rupees;

(c) no penalty shall be imposed under this sub-section upon any person assessable under section 42 as the agent of a person not resident in British India for failure to furnish the return required under section 22 unless a notice under sub-section (2) of that section or under section 34 has been served on him.”;

(b) in sub-section (2), for the words “Assistant Commissioner” the words “Appellate Assistant Commissioner” shall be substituted; for the words “in addition to the income-tax payable by him” the words “in addition to the income-tax and super-tax, if any, payable by him” shall be substituted; and for the words “not exceeding the amount of income-tax” the words “not exceeding one and a half times the amount of income-tax and super-tax” shall be substituted;

(c) in sub-section (5), for the words “Assistant Commissioner” the words “Appellate Assistant Commissioner” shall be substituted;

(d) after sub-section (5) the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(6) The Income-tax Officer shall not impose any penalty under this section without the previous approval of the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner.”

Substitution of new section for section 29, Act XI of 1922.

35. For section 29 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“29. When any tax or penalty is due in consequence of any order passed under or in pursuance of this Act, the Income-tax Officer shall serve upon the assessee or other person liable to pay such tax or penalty a notice of demand in the prescribed form specifying the sum so payable.”

Amendment of section 30, Act XI of 1922.

48. In section 43 of the said Act,—

(a) before the proviso the following proviso shall be inserted, namely:—

"Provided that where transactions are carried on in the ordinary course of business through a broker in British India in such circumstances that the broker does not in respect of such transactions deal directly with or on behalf of a non-resident principal but deals with or through a non-resident broker who is carrying on such transactions in the ordinary course of his business and not as a principal such first mentioned broker shall not be deemed to be an agent under this section in respect of such transactions:"

(b) in the existing proviso after the word "Provided" the word "further" shall be inserted.

Substitution of new section
for section 44, Act XI
of 1922.

49. For section 44 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

44. Where any business, profession or vocation carried on by a firm or association of persons has been discontinued, or where an association of persons is dissolved, every person who was at the time of such discontinuance or dissolution a partner of such firm or a member of such association shall, in respect of the income, profits and gains of the firm or association, be jointly and severally liable to assessment under Chapter IV and for the amount of tax payable and all the provisions of Chapter IV shall, so far as may be, apply to any such assessment."

Amendment of section 44-C, Act XI of 1922.

50. In section 44-C of the said Act, for the words "in any year" the words "in the year" shall be substituted.

Insertion of new Chapter VB in Act XI of 1922.

51. After Chapter VA of the said Act the following Chapter shall be inserted, namely:—

"CHAPTER VB.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO AVOIDANCE OF LIABILITY TO INCOME-TAX AND SUPER-TAX.

44-D. (1) Where any person has, by means of a transfer of assets, by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, any income which if it were the income of such person would be chargeable to income-tax becomes payable to a person not resident or to a person resident but not ordinarily resident in British India, acquired any rights by virtue or in consequence of which he has within the meaning of this section power to enjoy such income, whether forthwith or in the future, that income shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income-tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be income of such first mentioned person for all the purposes of this Act.

(2) Where any person receives or is entitled to receive, whether before or after any transfer of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof either alone or in conjunction with associated operations any income becomes payable to a person not resident or resident but not ordinarily resident in British India, any sum paid or payable by way of a loan or repayment of a loan or any other sum, being a sum which is not paid or payable for full consideration in money or money's worth, paid or payable otherwise than as income, such income shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to income-tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed to be the income of the first-mentioned person for all the purposes of this Act.

(3) Sub-sections (1) and (2) shall not apply if such first-mentioned person shows to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer either—

(a) that neither the transfer nor any associated operation had for its purpose or for one of its purposes the avoidance of liability to taxation; or

(b) that the transfer and all associated operations were bona fide commercial transactions and were not designed for the purpose of avoiding liability to taxation.

(4) For the purposes of this section, an 'associated operation' means, in relation to any transfer, an operation of any kind effected by any person in relation to any of the assets transferred or any assets representing whether directly or indirectly any of the assets transferred, or to the income arising from any such assets, or to any assets representing whether directly or indirectly the accumulations of income arising from any such assets.

(5) A person shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to have power to enjoy income of a person not resident, or resident but not ordinarily resident, in British India, if—

(a) the income is in fact so dealt with by any person as to be calculated at some point of time and, whether in the form of income or not, to enure for the benefit of the first mentioned person, or

(b) the receipt or accrual of the income operates to increase the value to such first mentioned person of any assets held by him or for his benefit, or

(c) such first mentioned person receives or is entitled to receive at any time any benefit provided or to be provided out of that income or out of moneys which are or will be available for the purpose by reason of the effect or successive effects of the associated operations on that income and on any assets which represent that income, or

(d) such first mentioned person has power by means of the exercise of any power of appointment or power of revocation or otherwise to obtain for himself, whether with or without the consent of any other person, the beneficial enjoyment of the income, or

(e) such first mentioned person is able, in any manner whatsoever and whether directly or indirectly, to control the application of the income.

(6) In determining whether a person has power to enjoy income within the meaning of this section, regard shall be had to the substantial result and effect of the transfer and any associated operations, and all benefits which may at any time accrue to such person as a result of the transfer and any associated operations shall be taken into account irrespective of the nature or form of the benefits.

(7) For the purposes of this section—

(a) the expression 'assets' includes property or rights of any kind, and the expression 'transfer' in relation to rights includes the creation of those rights;

(b) the expression 'benefit' includes a payment of any kind;

(c) references to income of a person not resident or of a person not ordinarily resident in British India shall, where the amount of the income of a company for any year or period has been deemed to have been distributed under sub-section (1) of section 23-A, include references to so much of the income of the company for that year or period as is equal to the amount deemed to have been distributed to that person;

(d) references to assets representing any assets, income or accumulations of income include references to shares in or obligations of any company to which, or obligation of any other person to whom, those assets, that income or those accumulations are or have been transferred;

(e) any body corporate incorporated outside British India shall be treated as if it were resident out of British India whether it is so resident or not.

(8) The provisions of this section shall apply for the purposes of assessment to income-tax and super-tax for the year ending on the 31st day of March, 1940, and subsequent years, and shall apply, in relation to transfers of assets and associated operations whether carried out before or after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939.

(9) Where any person has been charged to tax on any income deemed to be his under the provisions of this section, and that income is subsequently received by him, whether as income or in any other form, it shall not again be deemed to form part of his income for the purposes of this Act.

44-E. (1) Where the owner of any securities (in this sub-section and in sub-section (2) referred to as 'the owner') agrees to sell or transfer those securities, and by the same or any collateral agreement—

Avoidance of tax by certain transactions in securities.

(a) agrees to buy back or re-acquire the securities, or

(b) acquires an option, which he subsequently exercises, to buy back or re-acquire the securities, then, if the result of the transaction is that any interest becoming payable in respect of the securities is receivable otherwise than by the owner, the interest payable as aforesaid shall, whether it would or would not have been chargeable to tax apart from the provisions of this section, be deemed for all the purposes of this Act to be the income of the owner and not to be the income of any other person.

(2) The references in sub-section (1) to buying back or re-acquiring the securities shall be deemed to include references to buying or acquiring similar securities, so, however, that where similar securities are brought or acquired, the owner shall be under no greater liability to tax than he would have been under if the original securities had been bought back or re-acquired.

(3) Where any person carrying on a business which consists wholly or partly in dealing in securities agrees to buy or acquire any securities, and by the same or any collateral agreement—

(a) agrees to sell back or re-transfer the securities, or

(b) acquires an option, which he subsequently exercises, to sell back or re-transfer the securities,

then, if the result of the transaction is that any interest becoming payable in respect of the securities is receivable by him, no account shall be taken of the transaction in computing for any of the purposes of this Act the profits arising from or loss sustained in the business.

(4) Sub-section (3) shall have effect, subject to any necessary modifications, as if references to selling back or re-transferring the securities included references to selling or transferring similar securities.

(5) For the purpose of this section—

(a) the expression 'interest' includes a dividend;

(b) the expression 'securities' includes stocks and shares;

(c) securities shall be deemed to be similar if they entitle their holders to the same rights against the same persons as to capital and interest and the same remedies for the enforcement of those rights, notwithstanding any difference in the total nominal amounts of the respective securities or in the form in which they are held or the manner in which they can be transferred.

(6) The Income-tax Officer may by notice in writing require any person to furnish him within such time as he may direct (not being less than twenty-eight days), in respect of all securities of which such person was the owner at any time during the period specified in the notice, such particulars as he considers necessary for the purposes of this section and for the purpose of discovering whether tax has been borne in respect of the interest on all those securities; and, if that person without reasonable excuse fails to comply with the notice, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees and to a further penalty of the like amount for every day after the infliction of such penalty during which the failure continues.

44-F. (1) Any person upon whom notice is served by the Income-tax Officer requiring him to furnish a statement of particulars relating to any securities in which, at any time during the period specified in the notice he has had any beneficial interest, and in respect of which, within such period, either no income was received by him, or the income received by him was less than the sum to which the income would have amounted if the income from such securities had accrued from day to day and been apportioned accordingly, shall, whether an assessment to income-tax or super-tax in respect of his total income has or has not been made for the relevant year or years of assessment, furnish such a statement and such particulars in the form and within the time (not being less than twenty-eight days) required by the notice.

(2) If it appears to the Income-tax Officer by reference to all the circumstances in relation to the securities of any such person (including circumstances with respect to sales, purchases, dealings, contracts, arrangements, transfers, or any other transactions relating to such securities) that such person has thereby avoided or would avoid more than ten per cent. of the amount of the income tax or super-tax for any year which would have been payable in his case in respect of the income from those securities if the income had been deemed to accrue from day to day and had been apportioned accordingly, and the income so deemed to have been apportioned to him had been treated as part of his total income from all sources for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax then those securities shall be deemed to be securities to which sub-section (3) applies.

(3) For the purposes of assessment to income-tax or super-tax in the case of any such person, the income from any securities to which this sub-section applies shall be deemed to accrue from day to day, and in the case of the sale or transfer of any such securities by or to him shall be deemed to have been received as and when it is deemed to have accrued:

Provided that this section shall not apply if such person proves to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer that the avoidance of income-tax or super-tax was exceptional and not systematic and that there was not in his case in any of the three preceding years any such avoidance of income-tax or super-tax, or that the provisions of section 44-E have been applied in his case in respect of such income.

(4) If any person fails to furnish any statement or particulars required under this section, or if the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied with any statement or particulars furnished under this section, the Income-tax Officer may make an estimate of the amount of the income which, under the foregoing provisions of this section, is to be deemed to form part of the person's total income for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax.

(5) If any person without reasonable excuse fails to furnish any statement or particulars required under this section, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred rupees, and to a further penalty of the like amount for every day after the infliction of such penalty during which the failure continues.

(6) For the purpose of this section the expression 'securities' includes stocks and shares."

52. In section 45 of the said Act, for the words, brackets and figure

Substitution of new section for section 48, Act XI of 1922. 55. For section 48 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"48. (1) If any individual, Hindu undivided family, company, local authority, firm or other association of persons, or any partner of a firm or member of an association individually satisfies the Income-tax Officer or other authority appointed by the Central Government in this behalf that the amount of tax paid by him or on his behalf or treated as paid on his behalf for any year exceeds the amount with which he is properly chargeable under this Act for that year, he shall be entitled to a refund of any such excess.

(2) The Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate powers, or the Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate powers or powers of revision if satisfied to the like effect shall cause a refund to be made by the Income-tax Officer of any amount found to have been wrongly paid or paid in excess.

(3) Where income of one person is included under any provision of this Act, in the total income of any other person such other person only shall be entitled to a refund under this section in respect of such income.

(4) Nothing in this section shall operate to validate any objection or appeal which is otherwise invalid or to authorise the revision of any assessment or other matter which has become final and conclusive, or the review by any officer of a decision of his own which is subject to appeal or revision, or, where any relief is specifically provided elsewhere in this Act, to entitle any person to any relief other or greater than that relief or to entitle any person to claim a refund of tax payable before the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, which he would not be entitled to claim but for the passing of that Act."

Omission of section 48-A, Act XI of 1922. 56. Section 48-A of the said Act shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 49, Act XI of 1922. 57. In section 49 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) after the word "paid" where it occurs for the first time, the words and figures "by deduction under section 18 or otherwise," shall be inserted; after the word "paid", where it occurs for the second time, the words "by deduction or otherwise" shall be inserted, and for the words "for that year" the words "for the corresponding year" shall be substituted;

(ii) the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that in no case shall the rate at which such refund is calculated exceed half the Indian rate of tax appropriate to the income of the person entitled to relief."

(b) in sub-section (2), for clause (b) the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

"(b) the expression 'Indian rate of tax' means the amount of Indian income-tax exclusive of super-tax after deduction of any relief due to a claimant under the other provisions of this Act but before deduction of any relief due to him under this section, divided by his total income after deducting therefrom any income (including income from a share in an unregistered firm) exempted from tax by or under the provisions of this Act, added to the amount of Indian super-tax before deduction of any relief due to the claimant under this section divided by his total income?"

Insertion of new sections
49-A, 49-B and 49C in Act
XI of 1922.

58. After section 49 of the said Act the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

“49-A. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make provision for the granting of relief in respect of income on which has been paid both income-tax (including super-tax) under this Act and Dominion income-tax.

Relief in respect of Indian State and Dominion Income-tax.

(2) For the purposes of this section ‘Dominion income-tax’ means any income-tax or super-tax charged under any law in force in any Indian State or in any part of His Majesty’s Dominions (other than the United Kingdom) where the laws of that State or part provide for relief in respect of tax charged on income both in that State or part and in British India which appears to the Central Board of Revenue to correspond to the relief which may be granted by this section.

49-B. Where a share-holder has received a dividend from a company which has paid income-tax imposed in British India or elsewhere, he shall be deemed, in respect of such dividend himself to have paid the income tax (exclusive of super-tax) paid by the company on so much of the dividend as bears to the whole the same proportion as the amount of income on which the company has paid such income-tax bears to the whole income of the company.

Payment of income-tax by company to be deemed payment by shareholder.

49-C. (1) Where a share-holder has received a dividend from a company which has obtained the relief referred to in section 49 or granted under section 49-A or under the India and Burma (Income-tax Relief) Order, 1936, he shall be deemed in respect of such dividend himself to have obtained such relief at the rate at which such relief has been granted, in respect of income-tax only, to the company for the financial year preceding the year in which the dividend was paid.

Relief granted to a company to be deemed relief granted to shareholder.

(2) If the rate at which a shareholder is deemed under sub-section (1) to have obtained relief exceeds the rate at which he would have been entitled to relief had such relief been given direct to him by or under the said sections or Order, any excess shall be recovered from him either as an addition to the tax payable by him on any assessment made on him under section 23 or section 34 or by setting it off against any relief due to him under section 48.

49-D. If any person who has paid by deduction or otherwise Indian income-tax for any year in respect of any income arising without British India in a country the laws of which do not provide for any relief in respect of income-tax charged in British India proves that he has paid income-tax by deduction or otherwise under the laws of the said country in respect of the same income, he shall be entitled to the deduction from the Indian income-tax payable of, a sum equal to one-half of such Indian income-tax or to one-half of such tax payable in the said country, whichever is the less.”

Relief in respect of tax charged in country not providing for relief in respect of British Indian incometax.

Insertion of new Chapter in Act XI of 1922.

76. After Chapter IXA of the said Act the following Chapter shall be inserted, namely:—

"CHAPTER IXB.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CERTAIN CLASSES OF SUPERANNUATION FUNDS.

Definitions.

58-N. In this Chapter, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) 'approved superannuation fund' means a superannuation fund or any part of a superannuation fund which has been and continues to be approved by the Central Board of Revenue in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter;

(b) 'employer', 'employee' and 'contribution' have, in relation to superannuation funds, the meanings assigned to those expressions in section 58-A in relation to provident funds;

(c) 'ordinary annual contribution' means an annual contribution of a fixed amount or an annual contribution computed on some definite basis by reference to the earnings, the contributions or the number of members of the fund.

58-O. (1) The Central Board of Revenue may accord approval to any superannuation fund or any part of a superannuation fund which in its opinion complies with the requirements of section 58-P, and may at any time withdraw such approval, if in its opinion the circumstances of the fund or part cease to warrant the continuance of the approval.

(2) The Central Board of Revenue shall communicate in writing to the trustees of the fund the grant of approval with the date on which the approval is to take effect, and, where the approval is granted subject to conditions, those conditions.

(3) The Central Board of Revenue shall communicate in writing to the trustees of the fund any withdrawal of approval with the reasons for such withdrawal and the date on which the withdrawal is to take effect.

(4) The Central Board of Revenue shall neither refuse nor withdraw approval to any superannuation fund or any part of a superannuation fund unless it has given the trustees of that fund a reasonable opportunity of being heard in the matter.

58-P. In order that a superannuation fund may receive and retain approval the following conditions shall be satisfied, namely:—

(a) the fund shall be a fund established under an irrevocable trust in connection with a trade or undertaking carried on in British India;

(b) the fund shall have for its sole purpose the provision of annuities for employees in the trade or undertaking on their retirement at or after a specified age or on their becoming incapacitated prior to such retirement, or for the widows, children or dependants of persons who are or have been such employees on the death of those persons; and

(c) the employer in the trade or undertaking shall be a contributor to the fund:

Provided that the Central Board of Revenue may, if it thinks fit and subject to such conditions, if any, as it thinks proper to attach to the approval, approve a fund or any part of a fund—

(i) notwithstanding that the rules of the fund provide for the return in certain contingencies of contributions paid to the fund, or

(ii) if the main purpose of the fund is the provision of such annuities as aforesaid, notwithstanding that such provision is not its sole purpose, or

(iii) notwithstanding that the trade or undertaking in connection with which the fund is established is carried on only partly in British India.

58-Q. (1) An application for approval of a superannuation fund or part of a superannuation fund for any year of assessment

Application for approval shall be made in writing before the end of that year by the trustees of the fund to the Income-tax Officer, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the instrument under which the fund is established and by two copies of the rules and of the accounts of the fund for the last year for which such accounts have been made up. The Central Board of Revenue may require such further information to be supplied as it thinks proper,

(2) If any alteration in the rules, constitution, objects or conditions of the fund is made at any time after the date of the application for approval, the trustees of the fund shall forthwith communicate such alteration to the Income-tax Officer, and in default of such communication any approval given shall, unless the Central Board of Revenue otherwise orders, be deemed to have been withdrawn from the date on which the alteration took effect.

58-R. Income derived from investments or deposits of an approved Exemption of superannuation fund from income-tax.

superannuation fund shall be exempt from payment of income-tax, and any sum paid by an employer or an employee by way of contribution towards an approved superannuation fund shall, in the case of an employer, be deducted in computing his income, profits or gains for the purpose of assessment, and, in the case of an employee, be treated for all the purposes of this Act as if it were a sum to which the provisions of section 15 apply:

Provided that no such exemption shall be allowable to an employee in respect of any sum which is not an ordinary annual contribution:

Provided further that where a contribution by an employer is not an ordinary annual contribution it shall, for the purposes of this section, be treated, as the Central Board of Revenue may direct, either as an expense incurred in the year in which the sum is paid, or as an expense to be spread over such period of years as the Central Board of Revenue thinks proper.

58-S. (1) Where any contributions (including interest on contributions, if any) are repaid to an employee, the amount so repaid shall be deemed for the purposes of income-tax and super-tax to be income of the employee for that year.

Treatment of repaid contributions.

(2) Where any contributions (including interest on contributions, if any) are repaid to an employee during his lifetime but not at or in connection with the termination of his employment, income-tax on the amount so repaid or paid shall, except in the case of an employee whose employment was carried on abroad, be deducted by the trustees of the fund at the average rate of tax at which the employee was liable to income-tax and super-tax during the preceding three years or during such period, if less than three years, as he was a member of the fund, and shall be paid by the trustees to the credit of the Central Government within the prescribed time and in such manner as the Central Board of Revenue may direct.

58-T. Where an employer deducts from the emoluments paid to an employee or pays on his behalf any contributions of that employee to an approved superannuation fund, he shall include all such deductions or payments in the return which he is required to furnish under section 21.

Deduction from pay of, and contributions on behalf of, employee to be included in return under section 21.

58-U. If a fund or a part of a fund for any reason ceases to be an approved superannuation fund, the trustees of the fund shall nevertheless remain liable to account for tax on any sum paid—

(a) on account of returned contributions (including interest on contributions, if any), and

(b) in commutation or in lieu of annuities, in so far as the sum so paid is in respect of contributions made before the fund or part of the fund ceased to be an approved fund under the provisions of this Chapter.

58-V. The trustees of an approved superannuation fund and any employer who contributes to an approved superannuation fund shall, when required by notice from the Income-tax Officer, within twenty-one days of the date of such notice—

Particulars to be furnished in respect of superannuation funds.

(a) furnish to the Income-tax Officer a return containing such particulars of contributions made to the fund as the notice may require;

(b) prepare and deliver to the Income-tax Officer a return containing—

(i) the name and place of residence of every person in receipt of an annuity from the fund,

(ii) the amount of the annuity payable to each annuitant,

(iii) particulars of every contribution (including interest on contributions, if any) returned to the employer or to employees; and

(iv) particulars of sums paid in commutation or in lieu of annuities;

(c) furnish to the Income-tax Officer a copy of the accounts of the fund to the last date prior to such notice to which such accounts have been made up, together with such other information and particulars as the Central Board of Revenue may reasonably require."

Amendment of section 59, Act XI of 1922.

77. In sub-section (2) of section 59 of the said Act, sub-clause (ii) of clause (a) shall be omitted, and sub-clause (iii) shall be re-numbered (ii).

(iii) ‘accountant’ means a registered accountant enrolled in the Register of Accountants maintained by the Central Government under the Auditors Certificate Rules, 1932, or a holder of a restricted certificate under the Restricted Certificate Rules, 1932, or a member of an association of accountants recognised in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue;

(iv) ‘Income-tax practitioners’ means—

(a) any person who, before the 1st day of April, 1938, attended before an Income-tax authority on behalf of any assessee otherwise than in the capacity of an employee or relative of that assessee;

(b) any person who has passed any accountancy examination recognised in this behalf by the Central Board of Revenue; or

(c) any person who has acquired such educational qualifications as the Central Board of Revenue may prescribe for this purpose.

(3) No person who has been dismissed from Government service after the 1st day of April, 1938, shall be qualified to represent an assessee under sub-section (1); and if any lawyer or registered accountant is found guilty of misconduct in connection with any income-tax proceedings by the authority empowered to take disciplinary action against members of the profession to which he belongs, or if any other person is found guilty of such misconduct by the Commissioner of Income-tax, the Commissioner of Income-tax may direct that he shall be thenceforward disqualified to represent an assessee under sub-section (1):

Provided that—

(a) no such direction shall be made in respect of any person unless he is given a reasonable opportunity of being heard,

(b) any person against whom such direction is made may, within one month of the making of the direction, appeal to the Central Board of Revenue to have the direction cancelled, and

(c) no such direction shall take effect until one month from the making thereof or, when an appeal is preferred, until the disposal of the appeal.”

Amendment of section 63, Act XI of 1922. 80. In sub-section (2) of section 63 of the said Act, for the words "association of individuals" the words "association of persons" shall be substituted.

(b) to sub-section (3) the following provisos shall be added, namely:—

"Provided further that the place of assessment shall not be called in question by an assessee if he has made a return in response to the notice under sub-section (1) of section 22 and has stated therein the principal place wherein he carries on his business, profession or vocation, or if he has not made such a return shall not be called in question after the expiry of the time allowed by the notice under sub-section (2) of section 22 or under section 34 for the making of a return:

Provided further that if the place of assessment is called in question by an assessee the Income-tax Officer shall, if not satisfied with the correctness of the claim, refer the matter for determination under this sub-section before assessment is made."

Amendment of section 66, Act XI of 1922.

82. In section 66 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (2), the words, figures and letter "or of a decision by a Board of Referees under section 33-A" and the words "or decision", in both places where they occur, shall be omitted;

(b) in the first proviso to sub-section (2), the words and figures "or section 32" shall be omitted;

(c) in the proviso to sub-section (7), the following words shall be added, namely:—

"unless the High Court, on intimation given by the Commissioner within thirty days of the receipt of the result of such reference that he intends to ask for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, makes an order authorising the Commissioner to postpone payment of such refund until the disposal of the appeal to His Majesty in Council";

(d) in clause (a) of sub-section (8), the words "the North-West Frontier Province and" shall be omitted.

Amendment of section 66A, Act XI of 1922.

83. To sub-section (1) of section 66-A of the said Act the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that where in any reference heard by the Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the North-West Frontier Province, a difference of opinion arises between the Judicial Commissioner and the Judge of the said Court, the opinion of the Judicial Commissioner shall prevail."

Addition of Schedule to Act XI of 1922.

84. The following shall be added as a Schedule to the said Act, namely:—

"THE SCHEDULE.

[See section 10 (7).]

RULES FOR THE COMPUTATION OF THE PROFITS AND GAINS OF INSURANCE BUSINESS.

1. In the case of any person who carries on, or at any time in the preceding year carried on, life insurance business, the profits and gains of such person from that business shall be computed separately from his income, profits or gains from any other business.

2. The profits and gains of life insurance business shall be taken to be either—

(a) the gross external incomings of the preceding year from that business less the management expenses of that year, or

(b) the annual average of the surplus disclosed by the actuarial valuation made for the last inter-valuation period ending before the year for which the assessment is to be made, after adjusting such surplus so as to exclude from it any surplus or deficit included therein which was made in any earlier inter-valuation period and any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business, whichever is the greater:

Provided that the amount to be allowed as management expenses shall not exceed—

(a) $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the premiums received during the preceding year in respect of single premium life insurance policies, plus

(b) in respect of the first year's premiums received in respect of other life insurance policies for which the number of annual premiums received is less than twelve, or for which the number of years during which premiums are payable is less than twelve, for each such premium or each such year $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of such first year's premiums received during the preceding year, plus

(c) 85 per cent. of the first year's premiums received during the preceding year in respect of other life insurance policies and $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of other premiums received during that year in respect of all life insurance policies other than single premium life insurance policies.

3. In computing the surplus for the purpose of rule 2,—

(a) one-half of the amounts paid to or reserved for or expended on behalf of policy-holders shall be allowed as a deduction:

Provided that in the first such computation made under this rule of any such surplus no account shall be taken of any such amounts to the extent to which they are paid out of or in respect of any surplus brought forward from a previous inter-valuation period:

Provided further that if any amount so reserved for policyholders ceases to be so reserved, and is not paid to or expended on behalf of policyholders, one-half of such amount, if it has been previously allowed as a deduction, shall be treated as part of the surplus for the period in which the said amount ceased to be so reserved;

(b) any amount either written off or reserved in the accounts or through the actuarial valuation balance sheet to meet depreciation of or loss on the realisation of securities or other assets, shall be allowed as a deduction, and any sums taken credit for in the accounts or actuarial valuation balance sheet on account of appreciation of or gains on the realisation of the securities or other assets shall be included in the surplus:

Provided that if upon investigation it appears to the Income-tax Officer after consultation with the Superintendent of Insurance that having due regard to the necessity for making reasonable provision for bonuses to participating policy holders and for contingencies, the rate of interest or other factor employed in determining the liability in respect of outstanding policies is materially inconsistent with the valuation of the securities and other assets so as artificially to reduce the surplus, such adjustment shall be made to the allowance for depreciation of, or to the amount to be included in the surplus in respect of appreciation of, such securities and other assets, as shall increase the surplus for the purposes of these rules to a figure which is fair and just:

(c) the whole amount of interest received in respect of any securities of the Central Government which have been issued or declared to be income-tax free shall be deducted.

4. Where for any year an assessment is made in accordance with the annual average of a surplus disclosed by a valuation for an inter-valuation period exceeding twelve months, then, in computing the tax payable for that year, credit shall not be given in accordance with sub-section (5) of section 18 for the tax paid in the preceding year, but credit shall be given for the annual average of the income-tax paid by deduction at source from interest on securities or otherwise during such period.

5. For the purposes of these rules—

(i) 'preceding year' means that year for which annual accounts are required to be prepared under the Insurance Act, 1938, immediately preceding the year for which the assessment is to be made or until the commencement of the Insurance Act, 1938, the previous year as defined in section 2 of this Act;

(ii) 'gross external incomings' means the full amount of incomings from interest, dividends, fines and fees and all other incomings from whatever source derived (except premiums received from policyholders and interest and dividends on any annuity fund) and includes also profits from reversions and on the sale or the granting of annuities, but excludes profits on the realisation of securities;

Provided that incomings, including the annual value of the property occupied by the assessee, which but for the provisions of sub-section (7) of section 10 would have been assessable under section 9 shall be computed upon the basis laid down in the last-named section, and that there shall be allowed from such gross incomings such deductions as are permissible under that section.

(iii) 'management expenses' means the full amount of expenses (including commissions) incurred exclusively in the management of the business of life insurance, and in the case of a company carrying on other classes of business as well as the business of life insurance in addition thereto a fair proportion of the expenses incurred in the general management of the whole business. Bonuses or other sums paid to or reserved on behalf of policyholders, depreciation of, and losses on the realisation of, securities and any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business are not management expenses for the purposes of these rules;

(iv) 'life insurance business' means life insurance business as defined in clause (11) of section 2 of the Insurance Act, 1938;

(v) 'securities' includes stocks and shares.

6. The profits and gains of any business of insurance other than life insurance shall be taken to be the balance of the profits disclosed by the annual accounts, copies of which are required under the Insurance Act, 1938, to be furnished to the Superintendent of Insurance after adjusting such balance so as to exclude from it any expenditure other than expenditure which may under the provisions of section 10 of this Act be allowed for in computing the profits and gains of a business. Profits and losses on the realisation of investments, and depreciation and appreciation of the value of investments shall be dealt with as provided in rule 3 for the business of life insurance.

7. The profits and gains of companies carrying on dividing society or assessment business shall be taken to be 15 per cent. of the premium income of the previous year, or in the case of non-resident companies 15 per cent. of the British Indian premium income of the previous year.

8. The profits and gains of the British Indian branches of an insurance company not resident in British India, in the absence of more reliable data, may be deemed to be the proportion of the total world income of the company corresponding to the proportion which its British Indian premium income bears to its total premium income. For the purpose of this rule, the total world income of life insurance companies not resident in British India whose profits are periodically ascertained by actuarial valuation shall be computed in the manner laid down in these rules for the computation of the profits and gains of life insurance business carried on in British India.

9. These rules apply to the assessment of the profits of any business of insurance carried on by a mutual insurance company".

PART II.

Insertion of new section
5-A in Act XI of 1922.

85. After section 5 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"5-A. (1) The Central Government shall appoint an Appellate Tribunal consisting of not more than ten persons to exercise the functions conferred on the Appellate Tribunal by this Act.

The Appellate Tribunal.

(2) The Appellate Tribunal shall consist of an equal number of judicial members and accountant members as hereinafter defined.

(3) A judicial member shall be a person who has exercised the powers of a District Judge or who possesses such qualifications as are normally required for appointment to the post of District Judge; and an accountant member shall be a person who has, for a period of not less than six years, practised professionally as a Registered Accountant enrolled on the Register of Accountants maintained by the Central Government under the Auditors Certificate Rules, 1932:

Provided that the Central Government may appoint as an accountant member of the Tribunal any person not possessing the qualifications required by this sub-section, if it is satisfied that he has qualifications and has had adequate experience of a character which render him suitable for appointment to the Tribunal.

(4) The Central Government shall appoint a judicial member of the Tribunal to be president thereof.

(5) The powers and functions of the Appellate Tribunal may be exercised and discharged by Benches constituted from members of the Tribunal by the president of the Tribunal.

(6) A Bench shall consist of not less than two members of the Tribunal, and shall be constituted so as to contain an equal number of judicial members and accountant members, or so that the number of members of one class does not exceed the number of members of the other class by more than one.

(7) If the members of a Bench differ in opinion on any point the point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority, if there is a majority; but if the members are equally divided, they shall state the point or points on which they differ, and the case shall be referred by the president of the Tribunal for hearing on such point or points by one or more of the other members of the Tribunal, and such point or points shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority of the members of the Tribunal who have heard the case, including those who first heard it.

(8) Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Appellate Tribunal shall have power to regulate its own procedure, and the procedure of Benches of the Tribunal in all matters arising out of the discharge of its functions, including the place at which the Benches shall hold their sittings".

Amendment of section 28,
Act XI of 1922.

(a) in sub-section (1) and sub-section (2), for the words "or the Commissioner" the words "or the Appellate Tribunal", and for the words "he may direct" the words "he or it may direct" shall be substituted;

(b) in sub-section (5) for the words "or a Commissioner who has made" the words "or the Appellate Tribunal on making" shall be substituted.

Omission of section 32,
Act XI of 1922.

87. Section 32 of the said Act shall be omitted.

Substitution of new section for section 33, Act XI of 1922.

88. For section 33 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

33. (1) Any assessee objecting to an order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 28 or section 31 may appeal to the Appellate Tribunal within sixty days of the date on which he is served with notice of such order.

(2) The Commissioner may, if he objects to any order passed by an Appellate Assistant Commissioner under section 31, direct the Income-tax Officer to appeal to the Appellate Tribunal against such order, and such appeal may be made at any time before the expiry of sixty days from the date of the order.

(3) An appeal to the Appellate Tribunal shall be in the prescribed form and shall be verified in the prescribed manner, and shall, except in the case of an appeal referred to in sub-section (2), be accompanied by a fee of one hundred rupees.

(4) The Appellate Tribunal may, after giving both parties to the appeal an opportunity of being heard, pass such orders thereon as it thinks fit, and shall communicate any such orders to the assessee and to the Commissioner.

(5) Save as provided in section 66 orders passed by the Appellate Tribunal on appeal shall be final".

89. In section 35 of the said Act, sub-sections (2) and (3) shall be renumbered sub-sections (3) and (4), respectively, and the following shall be inserted as sub-section (2), namely:—

"(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) apply also in like manner to the rectification of mistakes by the Appellate Tribunal."

90. In section 37 of the said Act, for the words "and Commissioner" the words "Commissioner and Appellate Tribunal" and for the words "or Commissioner" in clause (c) the words "Commissioner or Appellate Tribunal" shall be substituted.

91. In sub-section (2) of section 48 of the said Act, for the words "The Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate powers, or the Commissioner in the exercise of his appellate powers or powers of revision" the words "The Appellate Assistant Commissioner or the Appellate Tribunal in the exercise of their appellate powers" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 66,
Act XI of 1922.

92. In section 66 of the said Act,—

(a) for sub-sections (1), (2), (3), (3A), (4) and (5), the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) Within sixty days of the date upon which he is served with notice of an order under sub-section (4) of section 33 the assessee or the Commissioner may, by application in the prescribed form, accompanied where application is made by the assessee by a fee of one hundred rupees, require the Appellate Tribunal to refer to the High Court any question of law arising out of such order, and the Appellate Tribunal shall within ninety days of the receipt of such application draw up a statement of the case and refer it to the High Court:

Provided that, if, in the exercise of its powers under sub-section (2), the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state a case which it has been required by the assessee to state, the assessee may, within thirty days from the date on which he receives notice of the refusal to state the case, withdraw his application and, if he does so, the fee paid shall be refunded.

(2) If on any application being made under sub-section (1) the Appellate Tribunal refuses to state the case on the ground that no question of law arises, the assessee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, within six months from the date on which he is served with notice of the refusal, apply to the High Court, and the High Court may, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the decision of the Appellate Tribunal, require the Appellate Tribunal to state the case and to refer it, and on receipt of any such requisition the Appellate Tribunal shall state the case and refer it accordingly.

(3) If on any application being made under sub-section (1) the Appellate Tribunal rejects it on the ground that it is time-barred, the assessee or the Commissioner, as the case may be, may, within two months from the date on which he is served with notice of the rejection, apply to the High Court, and the High Court, if it is not satisfied of the correctness of the Appellate Tribunal's decision, may require the Appellate Tribunal to treat the application as made within the time allowed under sub-section (1).

(4) If the High Court is not satisfied that the statements in a case referred under this section are sufficient to enable it to determine the question raised thereby, the Court may refer the case back to the Appellate Tribunal to make such additions thereto or alterations therein as the Court may direct in that behalf.

(5) The High Court upon the hearing of any such case shall decide the questions of law raised thereby and shall deliver its judgment thereon containing the grounds on which such decision is founded and shall send a copy of such judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar to the Appellate Tribunal which shall pass such orders as are necessary to dispose of the case conformably to such judgment."

(b) in sub-section (6), the words "on the application of an assessee" shall be omitted;

(c) in sub-section (7-A), for the words, brackets, figures and letter "under sub-section (3) or sub-section (3-A)", the words, brackets and figures "under sub-section (2) or sub-section (3)" shall be substituted.

THE DISSOLUTION OF MUSLIM MARRIAGES ACT, 1939.

ACT No. VIII OF 1939.

[17th March, 1939.]

An Act to consolidate and clarify the provisions of Muslim law relating to suits for dissolution of marriage by women married under Muslim law and to remove doubts as to the effect of the renunciation of Islam by a married Muslim woman on her marriage tie.

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and clarify the provisions of Muslim law relating to suits for dissolution of marriage by women married under Muslim law and to remove doubts as to the effect of the renunciation of Islam by a married Muslim women on her marriage tie; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE DISSOLUTION OF MUSLIM MARRIAGES ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

Grounds for decree for dissolution of marriage. 2. A woman married under Muslim law shall be entitled to obtain a decree for the dissolution of her marriage on any one or more of the following grounds, namely:

(i) that the whereabouts of the husband have not been known for a period of four years;

(ii) that the husband has neglected or has failed to provide for her maintenance for a period of two years;

(iii) that the husband has been sentenced to imprisonment for a period of seven years or upwards;

(iv) that the husband has failed to perform, without reasonable cause, his marital obligations for a period of three years;

(v) that the husband was impotent at the time of the marriage and continues to be so;

(vi) that the husband has been insane for a period of two years or is suffering from leprosy or a virulent venereal disease;

(vii) that she, having been given in marriage by her father or other guardian before she attained the age of fifteen years, repudiated the marriage before attaining the age of eighteen years:

Provided that the marriage has not been consummated;

(viii) that the husband treats her with cruelty, that is to say,—

(a) habitually assaults her or makes her life miserable by cruelty of conduct even if such conduct does not amount to physical ill-treatment, or

(b) associates with women of evil repute or leads an infamous life, or

(c) attempts to force her to lead an immoral life, or

(d) disposes of her property or prevents her exercising her legal rights over it, or

(e) obstructs her in the observance of her religious profession or practice, or

(f) if he has more wives than one, does not treat her equitably in accordance with the injunctions of the Qoran;

(ix) on any other ground which is recognised as valid for the dissolution of marriages under Muslim law:

Provided that—

(a) no decree shall be passed on ground (iii) until the sentence has become final;

(b) a decree passed on ground (i) shall not take effect for a period of six months from the date of such decree, and if the husband appears either in person or through an authorized agent within that period and satisfies the Court that he is prepared to perform his conjugal duties, the Court shall set aside the said decree; and

(c) before passing a decree on ground (v) the Court shall, on application by the husband, make an order requiring the husband to satisfy the Court within a period of one year from the date of such order that he has ceased to be impotent, and if the husband so satisfies the Court within such period, no decree shall be passed on the said ground.

Notice to be served on heirs of the husband when the husband's whereabouts not known

3. In a suit to which clause (i) of section 2 applies—

(a) the names and addresses of the persons who would have been the heirs of the husband under Muslim law if he had died on the date of the filing of the plaint shall be stated in the plaint,

(b) notice of the suit shall be served on such persons; and

(c) such persons shall have the right to be heard in the suit:

Provided that paternal uncle and brother of the husband, if any, shall be cited as party even if he or they are not heirs.

Effect of conversion to another faith. 4. The renunciation of Islam by a married Muslim woman or her conversion to a faith other than Islam shall not by itself operate to dissolve her marriage:

Provided that after such renunciation, or conversion, the woman shall be entitled to obtain a decree for the dissolution of her marriage on any of the grounds mentioned in section 2:

Provided further that the provisions of this section shall not apply to a woman converted to Islam from some other faith who re-embraces her former faith.

Rights to dower to be affected. 5. Nothing contained in this Act shall affect any right which a married woman may have under Muslim law to her dower or any part thereof on the dissolution of her marriage.

Repeal of section 5 of Act XXVI of 1937. 6. Section 5 of the Muslim Personal Law (Shariat) Application Act, 1937, is hereby repealed.

THE STANDARDS OF WEIGHT ACT, 1939.

ACT No. IX OF 1939.

[28th March, 1939.]

An Act to establish standards of weight throughout British India.

WHEREAS it is expedient to establish standards of weight throughout British India;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE STANDARDS OF WEIGHT ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint.

Unit for weight. 2. (1) The unit for weight shall be the standard grain, that is to say, that weight which when multiplied by 1799·84585 is the weight in vacuo of the iridio-platinum cylinder in the custody of the Mint Master, Bombay, certified by the Standards Department of the British Board of Trade as having a weight of 1799·84585 grains in vacuo.

(2) The standard grain shall be the only unit from which all other standard weights shall be ascertained.

Standard weights. 3. (1) There shall be the following standard weights, namely:—

(a) the standard tola, being a weight of 180 standard grains;

(b) the standard seer, being a weight of 80 standard tolas or 14,400 standard grains;

(f) the standard hundred weight, being a weight of 112 standard pounds;

(g) the standard ton, being a weight of 2,240 standard pounds.

(2) No weight other than the weights set forth in sub-section (1) and integral multiples or sub-multiples of any such weight shall be used as a standard weight.

4. (1) The Central Government shall cause to be prepared one set of such of the standard weights specified in sub-section (1) of Sets of standard weights. section 3 or multiples or sub-multiples thereof as the Central Government may consider expedient, and shall cause each weight of such set to be authenticated as having been ascertained from the standard grain, and shall deposit the set in such custody as the Central Government may think fit.

(2) The Central Government shall cause similar sets of weights, similarly authenticated, to be prepared, and shall supply one set to each Provincial Government.

(3) The Central Government shall cause similar sets of weights, similarly authenticated, to be prepared and shall supply one set to the Government of any Indian State or foreign settlement situated in India which applies for it and pays the price fixed by the Central Government.

5. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make rules for carrying into effect the provisions of this Act.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, rules made under this section may regulate—

(a) the preparation of the sets of standard weights referred to in section 4;

(b) the custody of the set of such weights which is to be maintained by the Central Government and the periodical verification and adjustment thereof;

(c) the periodical verification and adjustment of the sets of standard weights supplied to Provincial and other Governments.

6. The Indian Weights and Measures of Capacity Act, 1871, in so far as it relates to the establishment of standards of weight, is hereby repealed.

THE INDIAN PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XII of 1939.

[28th March, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the law relating to the protection of Inventions and Designs.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the law relating to the protection of Inventions and Designs; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title. 1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN PATENTS AND DESIGNS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of section 2, Act II of 1911. 2. For clause (7) of section 2 of the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), the following clause shall be substituted, namely:—

“(7) “High Court” means a High Court as defined in sub-section (1) of section 219 of the Government of India Act, 1935.”

Amendment of section 5, Act II of 1911. 3. In section 5 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1),—

(i) for the words “examine every application, and if he considers” the words “refer every application to an Examiner and if satisfied on the report of the Examiner” shall be substituted;

(i-a) in clause (c), after the words “the title” the words “of the specification” shall be inserted;

(ii) in clause (e), after the words “not a” the words “manner of” shall be inserted;

(iii) for clause (f) the following clauses shall be substituted, namely:—

“(f) the specification relates to more than one invention, or

(g) in the case of an application claiming priority under section 78-A, the specification describes and claims an invention substantially larger than or substantially different from the invention disclosed in the specification filed with the application made outside British India by virtue of which priority is claimed, or

(h) in the case of an application for a patent of addition under section 15-A, the invention described and claimed in the specification is not an improvement or modification of that described and claimed in the original specification”;

(b) after sub-section (1) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(1-A) If the Controller considers, at any time before the acceptance of an application, that the invention claimed therein has been wholly or in part claimed in a specification published on or after the date which the patent applied for would bear if granted, appertaining to an application for a patent which if granted will be of prior date to the patent applied for, he may require that the applicant’s specification be amended by the insertion of a reference to such other specification, by way of notice to the public.”;

(c) in sub-section (2), after the word “amendment” the words “or the insertion of a reference” shall be inserted; and

(d) in sub-section (4),—

(i) for the words “become void” the words “be deemed to have been refused” shall be substituted;

(ii) in the proviso the words “by any period not exceeding three months” shall be omitted; and for the words “or revived, as the case may be,

during, but not beyond the period of extension so requested" the words "for any period so requested not exceeding in all three months from the expiration of the said period of twelve months" shall be substituted.

4. In clause (b) of the proviso to sub-section (2) of section 10 of the said Act, after the word "patent", where it occurs for the first time, the words "or by any proceedings taken for obtaining a direction of the Controller under the provisions of sub-section (1-A)" shall be inserted.

Amendment of section 10,
Act II of 1911.

5. In section 14 of the said Act,—

(a) in sub-section (1-B), for the words "may determine" the words "may, on application made in this behalf, determine" shall be substituted;

(b) in the proviso to sub-section (2),—

(i) the words "by any period not exceeding three months" shall be omitted; and

(ii) for the words "during, but not beyond, the period of extension applied for" the words "for any period so applied for not exceeding in all three months from the expiration of the time for payment" shall be substituted.

6. In section 15 of the said Act, for sub-sections (5) and (6) the following sub-sections shall be substituted, namely:—

"(5) The Central Government or the High Court to which a petition is referred shall in considering the petition have regard to the nature and merits of the invention in relation to the public, to the profits made on the patent and to all the circumstances of the case.

(6) If it appears to the Central Government or to the High Court when the petition is referred to it, that the patent has not been sufficiently remunerative, the Central Government or the High Court, as the case may be, may by order extend the term of the patent for a further term not exceeding five or in exceptional cases ten years or may order the grant of a new patent for such term not exceeding ten years as may be specified in the order and subject to any restriction, conditions and provisions which the Central Government or the High Court, as the case may be, may think fit."

Amendment of section 26,
Act II of 1911.

7. For sub-section (1) of section 26 of the said Act, the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(1) Revocation of a patent in whole or in part may be obtained on petition to or on a counter claim in a suit for infringement before a High Court on all or any of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) that the invention has been the subject of a valid prior grant of a patent in British India;

(b) that the true and first inventor or his legal representative or assign was not the applicant or one of the applicants for the patent;

(c) that the patent was obtained in fraud of the rights of the person applying for the revocation or of any person under or through whom he claims;

(d) that the invention was not, at the date of the patent, a manner of new manufacture or improvement;

(e) that the invention does not involve any inventive step, having regard to what was known or used prior to the date of the patent;

(f) that the invention is of no utility;

(g) that the specification does not sufficiently and fairly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention and the manner in which the invention is to be performed;

(h) that the specification does not sufficiently and clearly ascertain the scope of the invention claimed;

(i) that the patent was obtained on a false suggestion or representation;

(j) that the primary or intended use or exercise of the invention is contrary to law;

(k) that the patentee has contravened, or has not complied with, the conditions contained in the patent;

(l) that the specification does not disclose the best method of performance of the invention known to the applicant for the patent at the time when the specification was left at the Patent Office;

(m) that prior to the date of the patent, the patentee or other persons (not being authorities administering any department of the service of His Majesty, or the agents or contractors of, or any other persons authorised in that behalf by, the Central Government) secretly worked the invention on a commercial scale (and not merely by way of reasonable trial or experiment) in British India, and thereby made direct or indirect profits in excess of such amount as the Court may in consideration of all the circumstances of the case deem reasonable:

Provided that this sub-section shall have effect in relation to the ground of revocation specified—

(i) in clause (b), subject to the provisions of section 78-A, or

(ii) in clause (d), subject to the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 13, sub-section (2) of section 21, section 38 and section 40."

8. (a) To sub-section (1) of section 29 of the said Act, the following proviso shall be added, namely:—

"Provided that where a counter claim for revocation of the patent is made by the defendant, the suit, along with the counter claim, shall be transferred to the High Court for decision".

(b) In sub-section (2) of section 29 of the said Act, for the words "this Act" the word and figure "section 26" shall be substituted.

Substitution of new section for section 38, Act II of 1911.

9. For section 38 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"38. The public use or knowledge of an invention in British India before the date of the application for a patent thereon shall not invalidate the patent granted thereon if the knowledge has been obtained surreptitiously or in fraud of the true and first inventor or his legal representative or assign or has been communicated to the public in fraud of such inventor or his legal representative or assign or in breach of confidence:

Provided that such inventor or his legal representative or assign has not acquiesced in the public use of his invention, and that he applies for a patent within six months after the commencement of such use."

Substitution of new section for section 40, Act II of 1911.

10. For section 40 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"40. The exhibition of an invention at an industrial or other exhibition to which the provisions of this section have been extended by the Central Government by notification in the official Gazette, or the publication of any description of the invention during the period of the holding of the exhibition, or the use of the invention for the purpose of the exhibition in the place where the exhibition is held, or the use of the invention or the publication of any description thereof, during or after the period of the holding of the exhibition, by any person elsewhere without the privity or consent of the inventor or the reading of a paper by an inventor before a learned society, or the publication of that paper in the society's transactions shall not prejudice the right of the inventor to apply for and obtain a patent in respect of the invention, or the validity of any patent granted on the application:

Provisions as to exhibitions and readings before learned societies.

Provided that—

(a) the exhibitor exhibiting the invention or the inventor reading the paper or authorising the publication thereof, as the case may be, gives to the Controller previous notice in the prescribed form; and

(b) the application for a patent is made before or within six months from the date of first exhibiting the invention or of the reading of the paper, as the case may be, or when it has not been so read, of the said publication."

Amendment of section 47, Act II of 1911. 11. In sub-sections (2) and (3) of section 47 of the said Act, the words "within the prescribed time" shall be omitted.

Substitution of new section for section 52, Act II of 1911. 12. For section 52 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"52. The exhibition of a design, or of any article to which a design is applied, at an industrial or other exhibition to which the provisions of this section have been extended by the Central Government by notification in the official Gazette, or the publication of a description of the design, during the period of the holding of the exhibition, or the exhibition of the design or the article or the publication of a description of the design by any person elsewhere during or after the period of the holding of the exhibition, without the privity or consent of the proprietor, shall not prevent the design from being registered or invalidate the registration thereof:

Provided that—

(a) the exhibitor exhibiting the design or article, or publishing a description of the design, gives to the Controller previous notice in the prescribed form; and

(b) the application for registration is made within six months from the date of first exhibiting the design or article or publishing a description of the design."

Amendment of section 53, Act II of 1911. 13. In sub-section (1) of section 53 of the said Act,—

(a) after clause (a) the following clause shall be inserted, namely:—

"(aa) to import for the purposes of sale, without the consent of the registered proprietor, any article belonging to the class in which the design has been registered, and having applied to it the design or any fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof; or";

(b) in sub-clause (b), after the words "applied to any article" the words "in any class of goods in which the design is registered" shall be inserted:

Insertion of new section 59-A in Act II of 1911. 14. After section 59 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"59-A. A person making a request to the Controller in the prescribed manner as respects any patent specified in the request or as respects any application for a patent so specified, for information to be furnished to him by the Controller of any such matters as may be prescribed affecting that patent or application, shall be entitled, subject to the payment of the prescribed fee, to have information supplied to him accordingly."

Information relating to patents.

15. In section 65 of the said Act, the word "and," in the first three places where it occurs, shall be omitted, and for the words "compelling the production of documents and awarding costs" the words "compelling the discovery and production of documents, issuing commissions for the examining of witnesses and awarding costs and such award shall be executable in any court having jurisdiction as if it were a decree of that court" shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 65, Act II of 1911

16. After the heading "Evidence, etc." and before section 71 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"70-A. Subject to any rules made under section 77, in any proceeding under this Act before the Controller, the evidence shall be given by affidavit, in the absence of directions by the Controller to the contrary; but in any case in which the Controller thinks it right so to do he may take evidence viva voce in lieu of or in addition to evidence by affidavit or may allow any party to be cross-examined on the contents of his affidavit."

Evidence before the Controller

Insertion of new section 70-A in Act II of 1911.

17. After section 71 of the said Act the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

"71-A. Printed or written copies or extracts, purporting to be certified by the Controller and sealed with the seal of the Patent Office, of or from patents, specifications and other documents in the Patent Office, and of or from registers and other books kept there, shall be admitted in evidence in all Courts in British India, and in all proceedings, without further proof or production of the originals:

Provided that a Court may, if it has reason to doubt the accuracy or authenticity of the copies tendered in evidence, require the production of the originals or such further proof as it considers necessary."

Evidence of documents in Patent Office.

Substitution of new section for section 72, Act I of 1911

18. For section 72 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

"72. Copies of all such specifications, drawings and amendments left at the Patent Office, as become open to public inspection under the provisions of this Act, shall be transmitted, as soon as may be, after the printed copies thereof are available, to such authorities as the Central Government may appoint in this behalf, and shall be open to the inspection of any person at all reasonable times at places to be appointed by those authorities and approved by the Central Government."

Transmission of copies of specifications, etc., and inspection thereof.

Amendment of section 78-A, Act II of 1911.

19. In sub-section (1) of section 78-A of the said Act,—

(a) for the words and figures "apply such of the provisions of section 91 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, as relate to inventions or designs, to British India," the words, letter and figures "declare British India to be a convention country within the meaning of section 91-A of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907", shall be substituted;

(b) for the words "shall be entitled to a patent for his invention or to registration of his design under this Act, in priority to other applicants; and the patent or registration shall have" the words "shall, either alone or jointly with any other person, be entitled to claim that the patent that may be granted to him under this Act, for the said invention or the registration of the said design under this Act, shall be in priority to other applicants and shall have" shall be substituted.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XIII OF 1939.

[28th March, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS doubts have been entertained whether a workman employed on wages payable otherwise than by the month or on a monthly basis may be a workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

AND WHEREAS it is expedient to remove those doubts, and for that purpose further to amend section 5 of that Act in the manner hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on the 1st day of May, 1939:

Provided that section 2 shall be deemed to have taken effect from the 30th day of June, 1934.

Amendment of section 5,
Act VIII of 1923.

2. In section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923—

(a) for the words "For the purposes of this Act the monthly wages of a workman shall be calculated" the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"In this Act and for the purposes thereof the expression 'monthly wages' means the amount of wages deemed to be payable for a month's service (whether the wages are payable by the month or by whatever other period or at piece rates), and calculated";

(b) in clause (b), the words "deemed to be" shall be omitted.

3. Where in any proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Restoration of proceedings.

1923, concluded after the 1st of July, 1934, any person has been found by a Court not to be a workman within the meaning of that Act only by reason of the fact that his wages were payable otherwise than by the month or on a monthly basis, such finding shall be void and of no effect; and the Court shall, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, or any other law for the time being in force, on application made within six months from the commencement of this Act by any person prejudicially affected by such finding, restore the proceedings at, and continue the proceedings from, the stage reached immediately before the order embodying or based on such finding was made.

THE COTTON GINNING AND PRESSING FACTORIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XIV OF 1939.

[28th March, 1939.]

An Act to amend the Cotton Ginning and Pressing Factories Act, 1925 for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Cotton Ginning and Pressing Factories Act, 1925, for the purposes hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE COTTON GINNING AND PRESSING FACTORIES (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Amendment of section 9 of Act XII of 1925.

2. In section 9 of the Cotton Ginning and Pressing Factories Act, 1925 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act)—

(a) after sub-section (1) the following sub-section shall be inserted, namely:—

“(1-A) In any cotton ginning factory, whether erected before or after the commencement of this Act—

(a) no structural alterations or additions, the construction of which commenced after the 27th day of February, 1939, shall be made so as to minimise the degree of compliance of the factory as a whole with the requirements set forth in clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section (1), and

(b) every structural addition (whether actually attached to any existing structure in the factory or not), the construction of which commenced after the last-mentioned date, shall be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications approved by the prescribed authority:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to any factory in which, after any alteration or addition has been made, only roller gins are used where the number of such gins is not more than four;”;

(b) in clause (a) of sub-section (4), after the word, figure and brackets “sub-section (1)” the word, letter, figure and brackets “sub-section (1-A)” shall be inserted.

3. (1) Section 14 of the said Act shall be renumbered as sub-section (1) of section 14, and in the said section as so renumbered—

(a) for the words and figure “in accordance with section 4” the words and figure “with the mark prescribed under section 4 for the factory in which they were pressed,” shall be substituted;

(b) the proviso shall be omitted.

(2) To the said section as so renumbered the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—

“(2) Any bale marked in accordance with the provisions of section 4 shall, within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, be presumed for all purposes as between the parties to a contract for the purchase of baled cotton, to have been so marked before leaving the factory in which it was pressed.”

THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1939:

An Act to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the incidence and rate of excise duty on khandsari sugar leviable under the Sugar (Excise Duty) Act, 1934, to vary certain duties leviable under the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, and to fix rates of income-tax and super-tax.

WHEREAS it is expedient to fix the duty on salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, certain parts of British India, to vary the incidence and rate of excise duty on khandsari sugar leviable under the Sugar (Excise Duty) Act, 1934, to vary the duty on raw cotton leviable under the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, to fix maximum rates of postage under the Indian Post Office Act, 1898; and to fix rates of income-tax and super-tax;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN FINANCE ACT, 1939.

Short title and extent.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

2. The provisions of section 7 of the Indian Salt Act, 1882, shall, in so far as they enable the Central Government to impose by rule made under that section a duty on salt manufactured in, or imported into, any part of British India, be construed as if, for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, they imposed such duty at the rate of one rupee and four annas per maund of eighty-two and two-sevenths pounds avoirdupois of salt manufactured in, or imported by land into, any such part, and such duty shall, for all the purposes of the said Act, be deemed to have been imposed by rule under that section.

Excise duty on khandsari sugar.

3. In the Sugar (Excise Duty) Act, 1934,—

(a) in clause (a) of section 2, the words “wherein, or within the precincts of which, twenty or more workers are working or were working on any day of the preceding twelve months, and” shall be omitted.

(b) in clause (i) of sub-section (2) of section 3, for the words “one rupee and five annas” the words “eight annas” shall be substituted.

4. In the First Schedule to the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, in Item No. 46

Import duty on raw cotton. (3), for the words “six pies per lb.” in the fourth column, the words “one anna per lb.” shall be substituted.

5. For the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, the Schedule contained in Schedule I to this Act shall be inserted in Inland postage rates. the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, as the First Schedule to that Act.

Income-tax and super-tax.

6. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2)—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, shall be charged at the rates specified in Part I of Schedule II, and

(b) rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, be those specified in Part II of Schedule II.

(2) In cases to which section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, applies, the tax chargeable shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of that section with reference to the rates specified in Schedule II.

(3) For the purpose of this section and of Schedule II, the expression "total income" means total income as determined for the purposes of income-tax or super-tax, as the case may be, in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2), where more than half of the total income of any individual or Hindu undivided family consists of income from salaries, interest on securities or dividends in respect of which the individual or Hindu undivided family is deemed, under the provisions of section 49-B of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to have paid income-tax imposed in British India, or consists of income falling under more than one of those heads—

(a) income-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, shall be charged in respect of such total incomes at the rates of income-tax which were imposed for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1938, in respect of incomes of individuals or Hindu undivided families, and

(b) in cases in which super-tax has been deducted under the provisions of section 18 of the said Act or would have been so deductible had the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, come into force on the 1st day of April, 1938; the rates of super-tax for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, shall, for the purposes of section 55 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, be the rates of super-tax which were imposed for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1938, in respect of incomes of individuals or Hindu undivided families, as the case may be.

(5) In respect of income to which sub-section (4) applies, the provisions of section 17 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, shall apply to the assessment to be made for the year beginning on the 1st day of April, 1939, as though the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, had not been passed.

THE EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XV OF 1939.

[8th April, 1939.]

An Act to amend the Employment of Children Act, 1938.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the Employment of Children Act, 1938, for the purposes hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on the 1st day of October, 1939.

Amendment of section 2 of Act XXVI of 1938

2. In section 2 of the Employment of Children Act, 1938 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), after the words "in this Act" the letter and brackets "a" shall be inserted, and to the said section as so amended the following shall be added, namely:—

"(b) "occupier" of a workshop means the person who has ultimate control over the affairs of the workshop;

"(c) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

"(d) "workshop" means any premises (including the precincts thereof) wherein any industrial process is carried on, but does not include any premises to which the provisions of section 50 of the Factories Act, 1934, for the time being apply.

Amendment of section 3.

3. To section 3 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be added, namely:—
 "(8) No child who has not completed his twelfth year shall be employed, or permitted to work, in any workshop wherein any of the processes set forth in the Schedule is carried on:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply to any workshop wherein any process is carried on by the occupier with the aid of his family only and without employing hired labour or to any school established by, or receiving assistance or recognition from, a Provincial Government."

Insertion of new sections 3-A, 3-B and 3-C.

4. After section 3 of the said Act the following sections shall be inserted, namely:—

3-A. The Provincial Government, after giving, by notification in the official Gazette, not less than three months' notice of its intention so to do, may, by like notification, add any description of process to the Schedule, and thereupon the Schedule shall have force in the Province as if it has been enacted accordingly.

3-B. Before work in any of the processes set forth in the Schedule is carried on in any workshop after the 1st day of October, 1939, the occupier shall send to the inspector, within whose local limits the workshop is situated, a written notice containing—

(a) the name and situation of the workshop,
 (b) the name of the person in actual management of the workshop,
 (c) the address to which communications relating to the workshop should be sent, and

(d) the nature of the processes to be carried on in the workshop.

3-C. If any question arises between an inspector and an employer as to whether any child has or has not completed his twelfth or fifteenth year, as the case may be, the question shall, in the absence of a certificate as to the age of such child, granted by a prescribed medical authority, be referred by the inspector for decision to the prescribed medical authority."

Disputes as to age.

5. In section 4 of the said Act, after the word and figure "section 3" the words, letter and figure "or fails to give notice as required by section 3-B" shall be inserted.

6. For sub-section (2) of section 5 of the said Act the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely:—

"(2) Every certificate as to the age of a child which has been granted by a prescribed medical authority shall, for the purposes of this Act, be conclusive evidence as to the age of the child to whom it relates."

7. In clause (b) of sub-section (2) of section 7 of the said Act, for the words "the authorities" the words "the medical authorities" shall be substituted.

8. To the said Act the following Schedule shall be added, namely:—

"THE SCHEDULE.

THE REGISTRATION OF FOREIGNERS ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XVI OF 1939.

[8th April, 1939.]

An Act to provide for the registration of foreigners in British India.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the registration of foreigners entering, being present in, and departing from, British India;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. (1) This Act may be called THE REGISTRATION OF FOREIGNERS ACT, 1939.

Short title and extent.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

Definitions.

2. In this Act—

(a) the word "foreigner" shall denote a person who is not—

(i) a British subject domiciled in the United Kingdom; or

(ii) a British Indian subject; or

(iii) a ruler or subject of an Indian State; or

(iv) a person duly appointed by a foreign Government to exercise diplomatic functions; or

(v) "a consul or a vice-consul;

(b) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act.

3. The Central Government may after previous publication, by notification Power to make rules. in the official Gazette, make rules with respect to foreigners for any or all of the following purposes, that is to say—

(a) for requiring any foreigner entering, or being present in, British India to report his presence to a prescribed authority within such time and in such manner and with such particulars as may be prescribed;

(b) for requiring any foreigner moving from one place to another place in British India to report, on arrival at such other place, his presence to a prescribed authority within such time and in such manner and with such particulars as may be prescribed;

(c) for requiring any foreigner who is about to leave British India to report the date of his intended departure and such other particulars as may be prescribed to such authority and within such period before departure as may be prescribed;

(d) for requiring any foreigner entering, being present in, or departing from, British India to produce, on demand by a prescribed authority, such proof of his identity as may be prescribed;

(e) for requiring any person having the management of any hotel, boarding-house, sarai or any other premises of like nature to report the name of any foreigner residing therein for whatever duration, to a prescribed authority within such time and in such manner and with such particulars as may be prescribed;

(f) for requiring any person having the management or control of any vessel or aircraft to furnish to a prescribed authority such information as may be prescribed regarding any foreigner entering, or intending to depart from, British India in such vessel or aircraft, and to furnish to such authority such assistance as may be necessary or prescribed for giving effect to this Act;

(g) for providing for such other incidental or supplementary matters as may appear to the Central Government necessary or expedient for giving effect to this Act.

4. If any question arises with reference to this Act or any rule made there under, whether any person is or is not a foreigner, or is or is not a foreigner of a particular class or description, the onus of proving that such person is not a foreigner or is not a foreigner of such particular class or description, as the case may be, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, lie upon such person.

5. Any person who contravenes, or attempts to contravene, or fails to comply with, any provision of any rule made under this Act shall be punished, if a foreigner, with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees or with both, or if not a foreigner, with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees.

6. The Central Government may, by order, declare that any or all of the provisions of the rules made under this Act shall not apply, or shall apply only with such modifications or subject to such conditions as may be specified in the said order, to or in relation to any individual foreigner or any class or description of foreigner:

Provided that a copy of every such order shall be placed on the table of both Houses of Central Legislature as soon as may be after its promulgation.

7. No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act.

8. The provisions of this Act shall be in addition to, and not in derogation of, the provisions of the Foreigners Act, 1864 and any other law for the time being in force.

THE INDIAN SUCCESSION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XVII OF 1939.

[21st April, 1939.]

An Act, to amend the Indian Succession Act, 1925, as respects intestate succession among Parsis.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to intestate succession among Parsis;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN SUCCESSION (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint.

Substitution of new sections for sections 50 to 56 of Act XXXIX of 1925.

2. For sections 50 to 56 (both inclusive) of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the following sections shall be substituted, namely:—

General principles relating to intestate succession.

“50. For the purpose of intestate succession among Parsis—

(a) there is no distinction between those who were actually born in the lifetime of a person deceased and those who at the date of his death were only conceived in the womb, but who have been subsequently born alive;

(b) a lineal descendant of an intestate who has died in the lifetime of the intestate without leaving a widow or widower or any lineal descendant or a widow of any lineal descendant shall not be taken into account in determining the manner in which the property of which the intestate has died intestate shall be divided; and

(c) where a widow of any relative of an intestate has married again in the lifetime of the intestate, she shall not be entitled to receive any share of the property of which the intestate has died intestate, and she shall be deemed not to be existing at the intestate's death.

Division of a male intestate's property among his widow, children and parents.

51. (1) Subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), the property of which a male Parsi dies intestate shall be divided—

(a) where he dies leaving a widow and children, among the widow and children, so that the share of each son and of the widow shall be double the share of each daughter, or

(b) where he dies leaving children but no widow, among the children, so that the share of each son shall be double the share of each daughter.

(2) Where a male Parsi dies leaving one or both parents in addition to children or a widow and children, the property of which he dies intestate shall be divided so that the father shall receive a share equal to half the share of a son and the mother shall receive a share equal to half the share of a daughter.

Division of a female intestate's property among her widower and children.

52. The property of which a female Parsi dies intestate shall be divided—

(a) where she dies leaving a widower and children, among the widower and children so that the widower and each child receive equal shares, or

(b) where she dies leaving children but no widower, among the children in equal shares.

53. In all cases where a Parsi dies leaving any lineal descendant, if any child of such intestate has died in the lifetime of the intestate, the division of the share of the property of which the intestate has died intestate which such child would have taken if living at the intestate's death shall be in accordance with the following rules, namely:—

(a) If such deceased child was a son, his widow and children shall take shares in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter as if he had died immediately after the intestate's death:

Provided that where such deceased son has left a widow or a widow of a lineal descendant but no lineal descendant, the residue of his share after such distribution has been made shall be divided in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter as property of which the intestate has died intestate, and in making the division of such residue the said deceased son of the intestate shall not be taken into account.

(b) If such deceased child was a daughter, her share shall be divided equally among her children.

(c) If any child of such deceased child has also died during the lifetime of the intestate, the share which he or she would have taken if living at the intestate's death shall be divided in like manner in accordance with clause (a) or clause (b) as the case may be.

(d) Where a remoter lineal descendant of the intestate has died during the lifetime of the intestate, the provisions of clause (c) shall apply mutatis mutandis to the division of any share to which he or she would have been entitled if living at the intestate's death by reason of the predecease of all the intestate's lineal descendants directly between him or her and the intestate.

Division of property where intestate leaves no lineal descendant but leaves a widow or widower or a widow of any lineal descendant.

54. Where a Parsi dies without leaving any lineal descendant but leaving a widow or widower or a widow of a lineal descendant, the property of which the intestate dies intestate shall be divided in accordance with the following rules, namely:—

(a) If the intestate leaves a widow or widower but no widow of a lineal descendant, the widow or widower shall take half the said property.

(b) If the intestate leaves a widow or widower and also a widow of any lineal descendant, his widow or her widower shall receive one-third of the said property, and the widow of any lineal descendant shall receive another one-third; or if there is more than one such widow, the last mentioned one-third shall be divided equally among them.

(c) If the intestate leaves no widow or widower but one widow of a lineal descendant, she shall receive one-third of the said property or, if the intestate leaves no widow or widower but more than one widow of a lineal descendant, two-thirds of the said property shall be divided among such widows in equal shares.

(d) The residue after the division specified in clause (a), (b) or (c) has been made shall be distributed among the relatives of the intestate in the order specified in Part I of Schedule II. The next-of-kin standing first in Part I of that Schedule shall be preferred to those standing second, the second to the third, and so on in succession, provided that the property shall be so distributed that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity.

(e) If there are no relatives entitled to the residue under clause (d), the whole of the residue shall be distributed in proportion to the shares specified among the persons entitled to receive shares under this section.

55. When a Parsi dies leaving neither lineal descendants nor a widow or widower nor a widow of any lineal descendant, his or her next-of-kin, in the order set forth in Part II of Schedule II, shall be entitled to succeed to the whole of the property of which he or she dies intestate. The next-of-kin standing first in Part II of that Schedule shall be preferred to those standing second, the second to the third, and so on in succession, provided that the property shall be so distributed that each male shall take double the share of each female standing in the same degree of propinquity.

Division of property where intestate leaves neither lineal descendants nor a widow or widower nor a widow of any lineal descendant.

Division of property where there is no relative entitled to succeed under the other provisions of this Chapter.

56. Where there is no relative entitled to succeed under the other provisions of this Chapter to the property of which a Parsi has died intestate, the said property shall be divided equally among those of the intestate's relatives who are in the nearest degree of kindred to him."

Substitution of Schedule II to Act XXXIX of 1925.

3. For Schedule II to the Indian Succession Act, 1925, the following Schedule shall be substituted, namely:—

"SCHEDULE II.

Short title, extent and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE COAL MINES SAFETY (STOWING) ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India except Assam and the Punjab.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint.

Definitions.

2. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "agent", "mine" and "owner" have the meanings respectively assigned to them in section 3 of the Indian Mines Act, 1923;

(b) "Board" means the Coal Mines Stowing Board constituted under section 3;

(c) "Chief Inspector" and "Inspector" mean the persons respectively appointed to be Chief Inspector of Mines and Inspector of Mines under sub-section (1) of section 4 of the Indian Mines Act, 1923, and the provisions of that Act shall apply to the Chief Inspector and to all Inspectors while exercising their powers under this Act or the rules made thereunder;

(d) "fund" means the Coal Mines Stowing Fund;

(e) "prescribed" means prescribed by rules made under this Act;

(f) "soft coke" means all coke which is unsuitable for metallurgical purposes, and "hard coke" means all coke which is not soft coke;

(g) "stowing" means the operation of filling with sand or other incombustible material space left under ground in a coal mine by the extraction of coal.

3. (1) The Central Government shall, as soon as may be after the commencement of this Act, constitute a Board to be called the Coal Mines Stowing Board, to administer the fund, and such Board shall be a body corporate and have perpetual succession and a common seal, and shall by the said name sue and be sued.

(2) The Board shall consist of the following members, namely:—

(i) a person in the service of the Crown, appointed by the Central Government, as Chairman;

(ii) the Chief Inspector, or an Inspector appointed by the Central Government in this behalf;

(iii) two persons nominated by the Indian Mining Association;

(iv) one person nominated by the Indian Mining Federation;

(v) one person nominated by the Indian Colliery Owners' Association.

Provided that if, within the prescribed period, any body fails to make the nomination which it is entitled to make under this sub-section, the Central Government may itself nominate a person to fill the place on the Board.

(3) Where a nominated member dies, resigns, ceases to reside in British India or becomes incapable of acting, the Central Government shall, on the recommendation of the body which would have been entitled to make the nomination if it had been a first nomination under sub-section (2), or where such recommendation is not made within the prescribed period, may, on its own initiative, nominate a person to fill the vacancy.

(4) No act done by the Board shall be questioned on the ground merely of the existence of any vacancy in, or any defect in the constitution of, the Board.

4. (1) The Board may, at any time and for such period as it thinks fit co-opt as members of the Board any persons possessing such technical qualifications as may be prescribed.

(2) A member co-opted under sub-section (1) shall exercise all the powers and functions of a member under this Act, except that he shall not be entitled to vote on any question coming before the Board.

5. With effect from such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf, there shall be levied and collected on all coal raised and despatched, and on all soft coke manufactured and despatched, from collieries in British India a duty of excise as may, by notification in the official Gazette, be fixed from time to time by the Central Government, subject to a maximum rate of three annas per ton; similarly there shall be levied and collected on such descriptions of hard coke as may be prescribed a duty of excise as may, by notification in the official Gazette, be fixed from time to time by the Central Government, subject to a maximum rate of one and a half times the rate of excise duty for the time being in force in respect of coal and soft coke.

6. During the period in which a duty of excise is being levied under section 5, the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, impose on all coal and soft coke and on such descriptions of hard coke as may be prescribed under section 5, imported into British India from any foreign country or brought into British India from the territory of any Indian State (not being territory which has been declared under section 5 of the Indian Tariff Act, 1934, to be foreign territory for the purposes of that section), a duty of customs at rates equivalent to the rates of the duty of excise levied under section 5 of this Act.

7. The Central Government shall, as soon as may be in each financial year, pay to the Board a sum equivalent to the net proceeds [determined in like manner to that provided in sub-section (1) of section 144 of the Government of India Act, 1935] of the duty of excise realised under section 5 during the preceding year.

8. (1) The sum referred to in section 7 and any other moneys received by the Board shall be credited to a fund to be called the Coal Mines Stowing Fund, which shall be applied by the Board in such manner and subject to such conditions as may be prescribed, to—

(i) meeting the expenses in connection with the administration and the furtherance of the objects of this Act; and

(ii) the grant of stowing materials and other assistance for stowing operations to owners, agents or managers of coal mines.

(2) The Board shall keep accounts of the fund, and such accounts shall be examined and audited at the prescribed times by auditors appointed in this behalf by the Central Government.

9. (1) The Chief Inspector or any Inspector may make such examination and inquiries as he thinks fit in order to ascertain whether the provisions of this Act and of any rules and orders made thereunder are being complied with.

(2) The Chief Inspector or any Inspector may, with such assistants, if any, as he thinks fit, enter, inspect and examine at any time by day or night any coal mine in respect of which assistance is being, or has been, given under this Act, in order to ascertain the amount of sand or other incombustible material used in stowing in the mine or to ensure that stowing has been, or is being, done effectively:

Provided that the power conferred by this sub-section shall not be exercised in such a manner as unreasonably to impede or obstruct the working of the mine.

(3) Without prejudice to the provisions of section 19 of the Indian Mines Act, 1923, the Chief Inspector or any Inspector may, by order in writing addressed to the owner, agent or manager of a coal mine, require him to take such protective measures, including stowing, in the mine as the Chief Inspector or the Inspector may think necessary; if in the opinion of the Chief Inspector or Inspector—

(a) the extraction or reduction of pillars in any part of the mine is likely to cause the crushing of pillars or the premature collapse of any part of the workings or otherwise endanger human life or the mine, or

(b) adequate provision against the outbreak of fire or flooding has not been made by providing for the sealing off and isolation of any part of the mine or for restricting the area that might be affected by fire or flooding, as the case may be.

10. The provisions of sub-sections (3) to (6) (both inclusive) of section 19 of the Indian Mines Act, 1923, shall apply to an order made under sub-section (3) of section 9 of this Act as they apply to an order made under sub-section (2) of section 19 of that Act, and all the provisions of the Indian Mines Act, 1923, [except sub-section (1) of section 11 thereof], affecting committees appointed for the purposes of that Act or relating to the disposal of references made to such committees, shall apply, mutatis mutandis and so far as may be, to a committee appointed to inquire into a reference under this Act and to the disposal of such reference.

11. (1) A committee appointed to inquire into a reference arising out of an order passed under sub-section (3) of section 9 shall consist of—

(a) the Chairman of the Board as Chairman;

(b) four members selected by the Chairman of the Board as follows:—

(i) two, from a panel of eight persons nominated by the Indian Mining Association;

(ii) one, from a panel of four persons nominated by the Indian Mining Federation;

(iii) one, from a panel of four persons nominated by the Indian Colliery Owners' Association; and

(c) one member appointed by the Central Government to represent the interests of persons employed in coal mines.

(2) No person shall be nominated to the panels referred to in clause (b) of sub-section (1) unless he possesses such technical qualifications as may be prescribed.

(3) If any body fails, within the prescribed period, to make any nomination which it is entitled to make under sub-section (1) or to fill any vacancy in a panel, the Central Government shall itself nominate a sufficient number of persons to complete the panel.

12. (1) The Central Government may, after previous publication, make rules to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provisions, such rules may provide for any or all of the following purposes, namely:—

(a) the nomination, and term of office, of members of the Board appointed or nominated under section 3;

(b) the powers and functions of, and the conduct of business by, the Board;

(c) prescribing the technical qualifications to be possessed by co-opted members of the Board and by persons nominated to the panels referred to in section 11;

(d) prescribing the descriptions of hard coke on which a duty of excise may be levied under section 5;

(e) regulating the levy, collection and payment of the duty of excise; and the imposition, collection and payment of the duty of customs;

(f) prescribing the manner in which and the conditions under which sums at the credit of the fund may be applied;

(g) prescribing the form in which the accounts of the fund shall be kept and the times at which such accounts shall be audited, and regulating the publication of the abstract of such accounts and the report of the auditors thereon, and prescribing the procedure in relation to any items of expenditure from the fund disallowed by the auditors;

(h) any other matter which is to be or may be prescribed.

Application to Crown mines. 13. This Act applies to coal mines belonging to the Crown.

THE INDIAN CENSUS ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXIV of 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of the census.

WHEREAS it has been determined to take a census of British India during the year 1941, and whereas it is expedient to provide for certain matters in connection with the taking of such census;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN CENSUS ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

Appointment of census staff. 2. (1) The Central Government may appoint a Census Commissioner to supervise the taking of the census throughout British India, and Superintendents of Census Operations to supervise the taking of the census within the several Provinces.

(2) The Provincial Government may appoint persons as census-officers to take, or aid in, or supervise the taking of, the census within any specified local area.

(8) A declaration in writing, signed by any authority authorised by the Provincial Government in this behalf, that any person has been duly appointed a census-officer for any local area shall be conclusive proof of such appointment.

(4) The Provincial Government may delegate to such authority as it thinks fit the power of appointing census-officers conferred by sub-section (2).

3. The Census Commissioner, all Superintendents of Census Operations and all census-officers shall be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code.

Status of census authorities as public servants.

Discharge of duties of census-officer in certain cases.

4. (1) (a) Every officer in command of any body of men belonging to His Majesty's naval, military or air forces or of any vessel of war,

(b) every person (except a pilot or harbour-master) having charge or control of a vessel,

(c) every person in charge of a lunatic asylum, hospital, workhouse, prison, reformatory or lock-up or of any public, charitable, religious or educational institution,

(d) every keeper, secretary or manager of any sarai, hotel, boarding-house, lodging-house, emigration depot or club,

(e) every manager or officer of a railway or any commercial or industrial establishment, and

(f) every occupant of immovable property wherein at the time of the taking of the census persons are living,— shall, if so required by the District Magistrate or by such authority as the Provincial Government may appoint in this behalf, perform such of the duties of a census-officer in relation to the persons who at the time of the taking of the census are under his command or charge, or are inmates of his house, or are present on or in such immovable property, or are employed under him, as such Magistrate or authority may, by written order, direct.

(2) All the provisions of this Act relating to census-officers shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons while performing such duties under this section, and any person refusing or neglecting to perform any duty which under this section he is directed to perform shall be deemed to have committed an offence under section 187 of the Indian Penal Code.

5. The District Magistrate, or such authority as the Provincial Government may appoint in this behalf for any local area, may, by written order, which shall have effect throughout the extent of his district or of such local area, as the case may be, call upon—

Power to call upon certain persons to give assistance.

(a) all owners and occupiers of land, tenure-holders, and farmers and assignees of land-revenue, or their agents, and

(b) all members of district, municipal, panchayat and other local authorities and officers and servants of such authorities, to give such assistance as shall be specified in the order towards the taking of a census of the persons who are, at the time of the taking of the census, on the lands of such owners, occupiers, tenure-holders, farmers and assignees, or within the areas for which such local authorities are established, as the case may be, and the persons to whom an order under this section is directed shall be bound to obey it and shall, while acting in pursuance of such order, be deemed to be public servants within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code.

6. (1) A census-officer may ask all such questions of all persons within the limits of the local area for which he is appointed as, by instructions issued in this behalf by the Provincial Government and published in the official Gazette, he may be directed to ask.

(2) Every person of whom any question is asked under sub-section (1) shall be legally bound to answer such question to the best of his knowledge or belief.

Provided that no person shall be bound to state the name of any female member of his household, and no woman shall be bound to state the name of her husband or deceased husband or of any other person whose name she is forbidden by custom to mention.

7. Every person occupying any house, enclosure, vessel or other place shall allow census-officers such access thereto as they may require for the purposes of the census and as, having regard to the customs of the country, may be reasonable, and shall allow them to paint on, or affix to, the place such letters, marks, or numbers as may be necessary for the purposes of the census.

8. (1) Subject to such orders as the Provincial Government may issue in this behalf, a census-officer may, within the local area for which he is appointed, leave or cause to be left a schedule at any dwelling-house or with the manager or any officer of any commercial or industrial establishment, for the purpose of its being filled up by the occupier of such house or of any specified part thereof or by such manager or officer with such particulars as the Provincial Government may direct regarding the inmates of such house or part thereof, or the persons employed under such manager or officer, as the case may be, at the time of the taking of the census.

(2) When such schedule has been so left, the said occupier, manager or officer, as the case may be, shall fill it up or cause it to be filled up to the best of his knowledge or belief so far as regards the inmates of such house or part thereof or the persons employed under him, as the case may be, at the time aforesaid, and shall sign his name thereto and, when so required, shall deliver the schedule so filled up and signed to the census-officer or to such person as the census-officer may direct.

9. (a) Any census-officer or any person lawfully required to give assistance towards the taking of a census who refuses or neglects to use reasonable diligence in performing any duty imposed upon him or in obeying any order issued to him in accordance with this Act or any rule made thereunder, or any person who hinders or obstructs another person in performing any such duty or in obeying any such order; or

(b) any census-officer who intentionally puts any offensive or improper question or knowingly makes any false return or, without the previous sanction of the Central Government or the Provincial Government, discloses any information which he has received by means of, or for the purposes of, a census return, or

(c) any person who intentionally gives a false answer to, or refuses to answer to the best of his knowledge or belief, any question asked of him by a census-officer which he is legally bound by section 6 to answer, or

(d) any person occupying any house, enclosure, vessel or other place who refuses to allow a census-officer such reasonable access thereto as he is required by section 7 to allow, or

(e) any person who removes, obliterated, alters or damages before the 31st day of March, 1941 any letters, marks or numbers which have been painted or affixed for the purposes of the census, or

(f) any person who, having been required under section 8 to fill up a schedule, knowingly and without sufficient cause fails to comply with the provisions of that section, or makes any false return thereunder,— shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

10. No prosecution under this Act shall be instituted except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Government or of an authority authorised in this behalf by the Provincial Government.

11. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to prevent any person from being prosecuted under any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence under this Act.

Provided that no such prosecution shall be instituted except with the previous sanction referred to in section 10.

12. No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the second class shall try, whether under this Act or under any other law, anything which constitutes an offence under this Act.

13. No person shall have a right to inspect any book, register or record made by a census-officer in the discharge of his duty as such, or any schedule delivered under section 8, and notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, no entry in any such book, register, record or schedule shall be admissible as evidence in any civil proceeding whatsoever or in any criminal proceeding other than a prosecution under this Act or any other law for any act or omission which constitutes an offence under this Act.

14. Notwithstanding anything in any enactment or rule with respect to the mode in which a census is to be taken in any municipality, the municipal authority, in consultation with the Superintendent of Census Operations or with such other authority as the Provincial Government may authorise in this behalf, shall, at the time appointed for the taking of the census of British India during the year 1941, cause the census of the municipality to be taken wholly or in part by any method authorised by or under this Act.

15. Notwithstanding anything in any enactment or rule in regard to municipal, local, union or village funds, the Provincial Government may direct that the whole or any part of any expenses incurred for anything done in accordance with this Act or the rules made thereunder may be charged to any municipal, local, union or village fund constituted for, and on behalf of, the area within which such expenses were incurred.

16. The Census Commissioner for British India or any Superintendent of Census Operations or such person as the Provincial Government may authorise in this behalf may, if he so thinks fit, at the request, and cost (to be determined by him) of any local authority or person, cause abstracts to be prepared and supplied containing any such statistical information as can be derived from the census returns for British India or the Province, as the case may be, being information which is not contained in any published report and which in his opinion it is reasonable for that authority or person to require.

Power to make rules. 17. (1) The Central Government may make rules for carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, the Central Government may make rules providing—

(a) for the appointment of census-officers and of persons to perform any of the duties of census-officers or to give assistance towards the taking of a census, and for the general instructions to be issued to such officers and persons;

(b) for the enumeration of persons employed on railways and their families and of other classes of the population for which it may be necessary or expedient to make special provision.

THE INDIAN SALT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXV of 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act further to amend the Indian Salt Act, 1882 for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Salt Act, 1882 for the purposes hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN SALT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf.

2. In section 1 of the Indian Salt Act, 1882 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act), for the words and figures “sections 2, 7 and 8,” the word and figure “section 7,” shall be substituted.

Amendment of section 3. 3. In section 3 of the said Act,—

(a) in the definition of “Assistant Commissioner” the words “an Assistant Commissioner of Northern India Salt-revenue, and also includes” shall be omitted;

(b) in the definition of “Salt-revenue-officer” the words “any officer of the Northern India Salt Department and also includes” shall be omitted.

Substitution of new section for section 5. 4. For section 5 of the said Act the following section shall be substituted, namely:—

“5. The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint with such designation as may be specified therein, one or two officers to control the administration of salt-revenue under this Act, and where two officers are so appointed, may, by like notification, from time to time define the territorial limits of their respective jurisdictions.”

5. In the last paragraph of section 22 of the said Act, for the words “Commissioner of Northern India Salt-revenue” the words and figure “officer appointed under section 5” shall be substituted.

6. In section 30 of the said Act, for the words "the Commissioner of Northern India Salt-revenue" the words and figure "an officer appointed under section 5" shall be substituted.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXVI of 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 for the purpose hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

2. In sub-rule (1) of rule 48 of Order XXI of the First Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for the words "in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be," the following shall be substituted, namely:—

"in this behalf,—

(a) where such salary or allowances are to be disbursed within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse the same shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be;

(b) where such salary or allowances are to be disbursed beyond the said limits, the officer or other person within those limits whose duty it is to instruct the disbursing authority regarding the amount of the salary or allowances to be disbursed shall remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be, and shall direct the disbursing authority to reduce the aggregate of the amounts from time to time to be disbursed by the aggregate of the amounts from time to time remitted to the Court."

THE INDIAN TEA CESS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXVII of 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act further to amend the Indian Tea Cess Act, 1903 for a certain purpose.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Tea Cess Act, 1903 for the purpose hereinafter appearing;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and commencement.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN TEA CESS (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

(2) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf.

2. In clause (d) of sub-section (2) of section 4 of the Indian Tea Cess Act, 1903, for the words "two on the recommendation of the Government of Bengal of which one is to represent the Tea Planters in North Bengal and one" the words "one on the recommendation of the Terai Indian Planters' Association, one on the recommendation of the Government of Bengal" shall be substituted.

THE MEDICAL DIPLOMAS ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXVIII OF 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act to make the provision referred to in sub-section (1) of section 120 of the Government of India Act, 1935.

WHEREAS it is expedient to make the provision relating to medical diplomas granted in the United Kingdom or Burma which is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 120 of the Government of India Act, 1935;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title and extent. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE MEDICAL DIPLOMAS ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India.

Definitions.

2. In this Act—

(a) "diploma" has the meaning assigned to it in sub-section (7) of section 120 of the Government of India Act, 1935;

(b) "United Kingdom" means the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

3. So long as the condition set out in sub-section (3) of section 120 of the Government of India Act, 1935 continues to be fulfilled, a British subject domiciled in the United Kingdom or India who, by virtue of a medical diploma granted to him in the United Kingdom, is, or is entitled to be, registered in the United Kingdom as a qualified medical practitioner shall not, by or under any law for the time being in force, be excluded from practising medicine, surgery or midwifery in British India or in any part thereof, or from being registered as qualified so to do, on the ground that such diploma does not furnish a sufficient guarantee of his possession of the requisite knowledge and skill for the practice of medicine, surgery and midwifery, except in accordance with the following conditions, namely:—

(a) Notice of every proposal for excluding the holders of any such diploma from practice or registration shall be given in such form and in such manner as the Central Government may by rules made in this behalf prescribe, to the university or other body granting that diploma, and where such proposal is not made by the Central Government, to the Central Government also.

(b) No such proposal shall become operative until the expiration of twelve months after the notices referred to in clause (a) have been given.

(c) Such a proposal shall not become operative or, as the case may be, shall cease to operate, if His Majesty's Privy Council, on an application made to them under sub-section (2) of section 120 of the Government of India Act, 1935, determine that the diploma in question ought to be recognised as furnishing such a sufficient guarantee as aforesaid.

4. A British subject domiciled in Burma who, by virtue of a medical diploma granted to him in the United Kingdom or Burma, is, or is entitled to be, registered in the United Kingdom as a qualified medical practitioner shall not, by or under any law for the time being in force, be excluded from practising medicine, surgery or midwifery in British India or in any part thereof, or from being registered as qualified so to do, on the ground that such diploma does not furnish a sufficient guarantee of his possession of the requisite knowledge and skill for the practice of medicine, surgery and midwifery, except in accordance with conditions such as are set out in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 3.

THE INDIAN TARIFF (FOURTH AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

ACT No. XXIX of 1939.

[26th September, 1939]

An Act further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934 for a certain purpose, and to validate the levy and collection of certain duty under that Act.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Tariff Act, 1934 for the purpose hereinafter appearing, and to validate the levy and collection of duty on the import of wood pulp during the period commencing the 1st day, and ending the 20th day, of April, 1939;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

- Short title. 1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN TARIFF (FOURTH AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

THE DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT, 1939.

ACT NO. XXXV OF 1939.

[29th September, 1939.

An Act to provide for special measures to ensure the public safety and interest and the defence of British India and for the trial of certain offences.

WHEREAS an emergency has arisen which renders it necessary to provide for special measures to ensure the public safety and interest and the defence of British India and for the trial of certain offences;

AND WHEREAS the Governor-General in his discretion has declared by Proclamation under sub-section (1) of section 102 of the Government of India Act, 1935, that a grave emergency exists whereby the security of India is threatened by war;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

CHAPTER I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title, extent, commencement and duration.

1. (1) This Act may be called THE DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India, and it applies also—

(a) to British subjects and servants of the Crown in any part of India;

(b) to British subjects who are domiciled in any part of India wherever they may be;

(c) in respect of the regulation and discipline of any naval, military or air force raised in British India, to members of, and persons attached to, employed with, or following, that force, wherever they may be; and

(d) to, and to persons on, ships and aircraft registered in British India wherever they may be.

(3) This section shall come into force at once, and the remaining provisions of this Act shall come into force in such areas and on such date or dates as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint.

(4) It shall be in force during the continuance of the present war and for a period of six months thereafter.

CHAPTER II.

EMERGENCY POWERS.

2. (1) The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, make such rules as appear to it to be necessary or expedient for securing the defence of British India, the public safety, the maintenance of public order or the efficient prosecution of war, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), the rules may provide for, or may empower any authority to make orders providing for, all or any of the following matters, namely:—

(i) ensuring the safety and welfare of His Majesty's forces, ships and aircraft, and preventing the prosecution of any purpose likely to prejudice the operations of His Majesty's forces or the forces of His Majesty's allies;

(ii) prohibiting anything likely to prejudice the training, discipline or health of His Majesty's forces;

(iii) preventing any attempt to tamper with the loyalty of persons in, or to dissuade (otherwise than with advice given in good faith to the person dissuaded for his benefit or that of any member of his family or any of his dependents) persons from entering, the service of His Majesty;

(iv) preventing anything likely to assist the enemy or to prejudice the successful conduct of war, including—

(a) communications with the enemy or agents of the enemy,

(b) acquisition, possession without lawful authority or excuse and publication of information likely to assist the enemy,

(c) contribution to, participation in, or assistance in, the floating of loans raised by or on behalf of the enemy, and

(d) advance of money to, or contracts or commercial dealings with, the enemy, enemy subjects or persons residing, carrying on business, or being, in enemy territory;

(v) preventing the spreading without lawful authority or excuse of false reports or the prosecution of any purpose likely to cause disaffection or alarm, or to prejudice His Majesty's relations with foreign powers, or to promote feelings of enmity and hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects;

Explanation.—To point out, without malicious intention and with an honest view to their removal, matters which are producing, or have a tendency to produce, feelings of enmity or hatred between different classes of His Majesty's subjects does not amount to promoting such feelings within the meaning of this clause.

(vi) requiring the publication of news and information;

(vii) regulating the conduct of persons in respect of areas the control of which is considered necessary or expedient, and the removal of persons from such areas;

(viii) requiring any person or class of persons to comply with a scheme of defence;

(ix) ensuring the safety of ports, dockyards, light-houses, lightships, aerodromes, railways, telegraphs, post offices, signalling apparatus and all other means of communication, sources of water-supply, works for the supply of water, gas or electricity and any other place or thing the protection of which is necessary for the defence of British India;

(x) the apprehension and detention in custody of any person reasonably suspected of being of hostile origin or of having acted, acting or being about to act, in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or interest or to the defence of British India, the prohibition of such person from entering or residing or remaining in any area, and the compelling of such person to reside and remain in any area, or to do, or abstain from doing, anything;

(xi) the control of persons entering, departing from, or travelling in, British India, and of foreigners residing or being in British India;

(xii) prohibiting or regulating traffic, and the use of vessels, buoys, lights and signals, in ports and territorial, tidal and inland waters;

(xiii) restricting the charter of foreign vessels;

(xiv) regulating the structure and equipment of vessels used or likely to be used by the Central Government, for the purpose of ensuring the safety thereof and of persons therein;

(xv) regulating work in dockyards and shipyards in respect of the construction and repairs of vessels;

(xvi) prohibiting or regulating the sailings of vessels from ports, traffic at aerodromes and the movement of aircraft, and traffic on railways, tramways and roads, and reserving, and requiring to be adapted, for the use of the Central Government, all or any accommodation in vessels, aircraft, railways, tramways or road vehicles for the carriage of persons, animals or goods;

(xvii) impressment of vessels, aircraft, vehicles and animals for transport;

(xviii) prohibiting or regulating the use of postal, telegraph or telephonic services, including the taking possession of such services and the delaying, seizing, intercepting or interrupting of postal articles or telegraphic or telephonic messages;

(xix) regulating the delivery otherwise than by postal or telegraphic service of postal articles and telegrams;

(xx) the control of any trade or industry for the purpose of regulating or increasing the supply of, and the obtaining of information with regard to, articles or things of any description whatsoever which can be used in connection with the conduct of war or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community;

(xxi) ensuring the ownership and control of mines by British subjects;

(xxii) controlling the use or disposal of, or dealings in, coin, bullion, securities or foreign exchange;

(xxiii) the control of any road or pathway, waterway, ferry or bridge, river, canal or other source of water-supply;

(xxiv) the requisitioning of any property, movable or immovable, including the taking possession thereof and the issue of any orders in respect thereof;

(xxv) prohibiting or regulating the possession, use or disposal of—

(a) explosives, inflammable substances, arms and ammunitions of war,

(b) vessels,

(c) wireless telegraphic apparatus,

(d) aircraft, and

(e) photographic and signalling apparatus and any means of recording information;

(xxvi) applying the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, and in particular section 19 thereof, to the prohibition or restriction of the import or export of goods to a particular person or a particular class of persons;

(xxvii) prohibiting or regulating the bringing into, or taking out of, British India and the possession, use or transmission of ciphers and other secret means of communicating information;

(xxviii) prohibiting or regulating the publication of inventions and designs;

(xxix) preventing the disclosure of official secrets;

(xxx) prohibiting or regulating meetings, assemblies, fairs and processions;

(xxxi) preventing or controlling any use, calculated to prejudice the public safety, the maintenance of public order, the defence of British India or the prosecution of war, of uniforms, flags and insignia and of anything similar thereto;

(xxxii) ensuring the accuracy of any report or declaration legally required of any person;

(xxxiii) preventing the unauthorized change of names;

(xxxiv) preventing anything likely to cause misapprehension in respect of the identity of any official person, official document or official property or in respect of the identity of any person, document or property purporting to be, or resembling, an official person, official document or official property;

(xxxv) entry into, and search of, any place reasonably suspected of being used for any purpose prejudicial to the public safety or interest, to the defence of British India or to the efficient prosecution of war, and for the seizure and disposal of anything found there and reasonably suspected of being used for such purpose.

(8) The rules made under sub-section (1) may further—

(i) provide for the arrest and trial of persons contravening any of the rules;

(ii) provide that any contravention of, or any attempt to contravene, and any abetment of, or attempt to abet, the contravention of any of the provisions of the rules, or any order issued under any such provision, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years or with fine or with both;

(iii) provide for the seizure, detention and forfeiture of any property in respect of which such contravention, attempt or abetment as is referred to in the preceding clause has been committed;

(iv) confer power and impose duties—

(a) upon the Central Government or officers and authorities of the Central Government as respects any matter, notwithstanding that that matter is one in respect of which the Provincial Legislature also has power to make laws, and

(b) upon any Provincial Government or officers and authorities of any Provincial Government as respects any matter notwithstanding that that matter is one in respect of which the Provincial Legislature has no power to make laws;

(v) prescribe the duties and powers of public servants and other persons as regards preventing the contravention of, or securing the observance of, the rules;

(vi) provide for preventing obstruction and deception of, and disobedience to, any person acting, and interference with any notice issued, in pursuance of the rules;

(vii) prohibit attempts by any person to screen from punishment any one, other than the husband or wife of such person, contravening any of the rules;

(viii) empower or direct any authority to take such action as may be specified in the rules or as may seem necessary to such authority for the purpose of ensuring the public safety or interest or the defence of British India;

(ix) provide for charging fees in respect of the grant or issue of any licence, permit, certificate or other document for the purposes of the rules.

(4) The Central Government may by order direct that any power or duty which by rule under sub-section (1) is conferred or imposed upon the Central Government shall in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction be exercised or discharged—

(a) by any officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government, or

(b) whether or not the power or duty relates to a matter with respect to which a Provincial Legislature has power to make laws, by any Provincial Government or by any officer or authority subordinate to such Government, or

(c) by any other authority.

(5) A Provincial Government may by order direct that any power or duty which by rule made under sub-section (1) is conferred or imposed on the Provincial Government, or which, being by such rule conferred or imposed on the Central Government, has been directed under sub-section (4) to be exercised or discharged by the Provincial Government, shall, in such circumstances and under such conditions, if any, as may be specified in the direction, be exercised or discharged by any officer or authority, not being an officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government.

3. Any rule made under section 2, and any order made under any such rule, shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any enactment other than this Act or in any instrument having effect by virtue of any enactment other than this Act.

Effect of rules, etc., inconsistent with other enactments.

4. The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, direct by general or special order that any persons who, not being members of His Majesty's forces, are attached to, or employed with, or following, those forces, shall be subject to naval, military or air force law, and thereupon such persons shall be subject to discipline, and liable to punishment for offences, under the Indian Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934, the Indian Army Act, 1911, or the Indian Air Force Act, 1932, as the case may require, as if they were included in such class of persons subject to any of those Acts as may be specified in the notification.

Special powers to control civilian personnel employed in connexion with His Majesty's forces.

5. (1) If any person, with intent to wage war against His Majesty or to assist any State at war with His Majesty, contravenes any provision of the rules made under section 2 or any order issued under any such rule, he shall be punishable with death, or transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.

Enhanced penalties.

(2) If any person—

(a) contravenes any such provision of, or any such rule or order made under, the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, as may be notified in this behalf by the Central Government, or

(b) in any area notified in this behalf by a Provincial Government, contravenes any such provision of, or any such rule made under, the Indian Arms Act, 1878, the Indian Explosives Act, 1884, or the Explosive Substances Act, 1908, as may be notified in this behalf by the Provincial Government, he shall, notwithstanding anything contained in any of the aforesaid Acts or rules made thereunder, be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, or, if his intention is to assist any State at war with His Majesty or to wage war against His Majesty, with death, transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall in either case also be liable to fine.

(3) For the purposes of this section, any person who attempts to contravene, or abets or attempts to abet, or does any act preparatory to, a contravention of, a provision of any law, rule or order, shall be deemed to have contravened that provision.

Temporary amendments of Act.

6. During the continuance of this Act,—

(1) section 1 of the Geneva Convention Act, 1911, shall have effect in British India as if, in sub-section (1) thereof, for the words “shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding ten pounds”, the words “shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and shall also be liable to a fine” had been substituted;

(2) section 5 of the Indian Official Secrets Act, 1923, shall have effect as if—

(a) in sub-section (1) thereof, after the words “in his possession or control” the words “any information likely to assist the enemy, as defined in the rules made under the Defence of India Act, 1939, or” had been inserted, and after the words “in such a place” the words “or which relates to, or is used in, a protected area, as defined in the rules made under the Defence of India Act, 1939, or relates to anything in such an area,” had been inserted; and

(b) for sub-section (4) thereof, the following sub-section had been substituted, namely:—

“(4) A person guilty of an offence under this section shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to five years, or, if such offence is committed with intent to assist any State at war with His Majesty, or to wage war against His Majesty, with death, or transportation for life, or imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall in either case also be liable to fine.”;

(3) the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931, shall have effect as if in sub-section (1) of section 4 thereof, after clause (b), the following word and clause had been inserted, namely:—

“or

(bb) directly or indirectly convey any ‘confidential information’, any ‘information likely to assist the enemy’ or any ‘prejudicial report’, as defined in the rules made under the Defence of India Act, 1939, or are calculated to instigate the contravention of any of those rules,";

(4) the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, shall have effect as if—

(a) at the end of clause (r) of sub-section (2) of section 5 the following words had been inserted, namely:—

"including the taking of steps necessary to secure compliance with, or to prevent contravention of, the rules regulating such matters, or, where any such rule has been contravened, to rectify, or to enable proceedings to be taken in respect of, such contravention";

(b) in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of section 8, for the words, brackets, letters and figures "clause (h) or clause (i) of sub-section (2) of section 5", the words, brackets, letters and figures "clauses (d), (e), (h), (i), (k) or (l) of sub-section (2) of section 5, or the commission of an offence punishable under section 11," had been substituted;

(c) in section 11, after the words "in the air" the words "or in such a manner as to interfere with any of His Majesty's forces, ships or aircraft" had been inserted;

(d) in section 13, for the words, brackets, figures and letters "clause (i) or clause (l) of sub-section (2) of section 5" the words, brackets, figures and letters "clauses (c), (d), (e), (h) (i), (j), (k) or (l) of sub-section (2) of section 5, or punishable under section 11" had been substituted; and

(e) section 14 had been omitted; and

(5) the Indian Navy (Discipline) Act, 1934, shall have effect as if for section 90 of the Naval Discipline Act as set forth in the First Schedule to the first named Act the following section had been substituted, namely:—

"90. (1) If any person who would not otherwise be subject to this Act enters into an engagement with the Central Government to serve His Majesty—

(a) in a particular ship, or

(b) in such particular ship or in such ships as the Officer Commanding the Indian Navy, or any officer empowered in this behalf by the Officer Commanding the Indian Navy, may from time to time determine, and agrees to become subject to this Act upon entering into the engagement, that person shall, so long as the engagement remains in force, and notwithstanding that for the time being he may not be serving in any ship, be subject to this Act, and the provisions of this Act shall apply in relation to that person, as if while subject to this Act, he belonged to His Majesty's navy and were borne on the books of one of His Majesty's ships in commission.

(2) The Central Government may by order direct that, subject to such exceptions as may in particular cases be made by or on behalf of the Officer Commanding the Indian Navy, persons of any such class as may be specified in the order shall, while subject to this Act by virtue of this section, be deemed to be officers or petty officers, as the case may be, for the purposes of this Act or of such provisions of this Act as may be so specified; and any such order may be varied or revoked by a subsequent order."

7. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Tea Control

Saving and temporary amendment of Act VIII of 1938.

Act, 1938, the Central Government may appoint any person to be an additional member of, and to act as Chairman of, the Indian Tea Licensing Committee during the continuance of this Act, and on such appointment being made and until this Act ceases to be in force, the Chairman of the said Committee elected under section 5 of that Act shall cease to exercise the functions of Chairman.

(2) If in pursuance of any scheme for the control of import of Indian tea into the United Kingdom, the Central Government considers it necessary or expedient so to do, it may by order direct the Indian Tea Licensing Committee to apportion the requirement of the United Kingdom among the tea estates in accordance with such principles as may be laid down in the order, and the said Committee shall comply with such order.

(3) If at any time during the continuance of this Act, the agreement referred to in the preamble to the Indian Tea Control Act, 1938 is determined or otherwise ceases to be valid as between the parties thereto, the provisions of that Act shall, notwithstanding the said determination or invalidity of the agreement, continue in force:

Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall be construed as continuing the Indian Tea Control Act, 1938 in force after the 31st day of March, 1943.

CHAPTER III.

SPECIAL TRIBUNALS.

8. (1) The Provincial Government may for the whole or any part of the Province constitute Special Tribunals which shall consist of three members appointed by the Provincial Government.

(2) No person shall be appointed as a member of a Special Tribunal unless he—

(a) is qualified under sub-section (3) of section 220 of the Government of India Act, 1935, for appointment as a Judge of a High Court; or

(b) has for a total period of not less than three years exercised, whether continuously or not, the powers under the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (hereafter in this Chapter referred to as the Code) of any one or more of the following, namely:—

(i) Sessions Judge, Additional Sessions Judge, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate,

(ii) District Magistrate, Additional District Magistrate.

(3) At least one member of a Special Tribunal shall be qualified for appointment thereto under clause (a) of sub-section (2), and where only one member is so qualified under that clause, at least one other member shall be qualified for appointment under clause (b) of that sub-section by virtue of having exercised powers exclusive of those specified in sub-clause (ii) of the said clause (b).

9. The Provincial Government may, by general or special order, direct that a Special Tribunal shall try any offence—

(a) under any rule made under section 2, or

(b) punishable with death, transportation or imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years,— triable by any Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal, and may in any such order direct the transfer to the Special Tribunal of any particular case from any other Special Tribunal or any other Criminal Court not being a High Court.

10. (1) A Special Tribunal may take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to it for trial.

(2) Save in cases of trials of offences punishable with death or transportation for life, it shall not be necessary in any trial for a Special Tribunal to take down the evidence at length in writing, but the Special Tribunal shall cause a memorandum of the substance of what each witness deposes to be taken down in the English language, and such memorandum shall be signed by a member of the Special Tribunal and shall form part of the record.

(3) A Special Tribunal shall not be bound to adjourn any trial for any purpose unless such adjournment is, in its opinion, necessary in the interests of justice.

(4) A Special Tribunal shall not, merely by reason of a change in its members, be bound to recall and rehear any witness who has given evidence, and it may act on the evidence already recorded by or produced before it.

(5) After an accused person has once appeared before it, a Special Tribunal may try him in his absence if, in its opinion, his absence has been brought about by the accused himself for the purpose of impeding the course of justice, or if the behaviour of the accused in Court has been such as, in the opinion of the Special Tribunal, to impede the course of justice.

(6) In the event of any difference of opinion among the members of a Special Tribunal, the opinion of the majority shall prevail.

(7) The Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, make rules providing for—

(i) the times and places at which Special Tribunals may sit; and

(ii) the procedure to be adopted in the event of any member of a Special Tribunal being prevented from attending throughout the trial of any accused person.

(8) A Special Tribunal shall, in all matters in respect to which no procedure has been prescribed by this Act or by rules made thereunder, follow the procedure prescribed by the Code for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates.

11. In addition, and without prejudice, to any powers which a Special Exclusion of public from proceedings of Special Tribunals. Tribunal may possess by virtue of any law for the time being in force to order the exclusion of the public from any proceedings, if at any stage in the course of a trial of any person before a Special Tribunal application is made by the prosecution, on the ground that the publication of any evidence to be given or of any statement to be made in the course of the trial would be prejudicial to the safety of the State, that all or any portion of the public shall be excluded during any part of the hearing, the Special Tribunal may make an order to that effect, but the passing of sentence shall in any case take place in public.

Powers of Special Tribunals. 12. A Special Tribunal shall have all the powers conferred by the Code on a Court of Session exercising original jurisdiction.

Sentences of Special Tribunals. 13. (1) A Special Tribunal may pass any sentence authorised by law.

(2) A person sentenced by a Special Tribunal—

(a) to death or transportation for life, or

(b) to imprisonment for a term extending to ten years under section 5 of this Act or under sub-section (4) of section 5 of the Indian Official Secrets Act, 1923, as amended by section 6 of this Act—shall have a right of appeal to the High Court within whose jurisdiction the sentence has been passed, but save as aforesaid and notwithstanding the provisions of the Code, or of any other law for the time being in force, or of any thing having the force of law by whatsoever authority made or done, there shall be no appeal from any order or sentence of a Special Tribunal, and no Court shall have authority to revise such order or sentence, or to transfer any case from a Special Tribunal, or to make any order under section 491 of the Code, or have any jurisdiction of any kind in respect of any proceedings of a Special Tribunal.

(3) The powers conferred upon the Provincial Government and the Governor-General by Chapter XXIX of the Code shall apply in respect of a person sentenced by a Special Tribunal.

CHAPTER IV.

SUPPLEMENTAL.

Jurisdiction of ordinary Courts. 14. Save as otherwise expressly provided by or under this Act, the ordinary criminal and Civil Courts shall continue to exercise jurisdiction.

Ordinary avocations of life to be interfered with as little as possible. 15. Any authority or person acting in pursuance of this Act shall interfere with the ordinary avocations of life and the enjoyment of property as little as may be consonant with the purpose of ensuring the public safety and interest and the defence of British India.

Savings as to orders. 16. (1) No order made in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act shall be called in question in any Court.

(2) Where an order purports to have been made and signed by any authority in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act, a Court shall, within the meaning of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, presume that such order was so made by that authority.

Protection of action taken under the Act. 17. (1) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall lie against any person for anything which is in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rules made thereunder.

(2) Save as otherwise expressly provided under this Act, no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie against the Crown for any damage caused or likely to be caused by anything in good faith done or intended to be done in pursuance of this Act or any rules made thereunder.

Protection from prosecution, etc., of members of military and police forces of Indian States while serving His Majesty. 18. Every provision of law for the time being in force which gives protection, whether specifically or otherwise, to members of His Majesty's military forces or of the police forces in British India from any prosecution or other legal proceedings or from any other liability shall apply also to members of the military or police forces respectively of any Indian State, while attached to, operating with or assisting any of His Majesty's military forces or any police force in British India.

Compensation to be paid in accordance with certain principles for compulsory acquisition of immovable property, etc. 19. (1) Where by or under any rule made under this Act any action is taken of the nature described in sub-section (2) of section 299 of the Government of India Act, 1935, there shall be paid compensation, the amount of which shall be determined in the manner and in accordance with the principles, hereinafter set out, that is to say:—

(a) Where the amount of compensation can be fixed by agreement, it shall be paid in accordance with such agreement.

(b) Where no such agreement can be reached, the Central Government shall appoint as arbitrator a person qualified under sub-section (3) of section 220 of the above-mentioned Act for appointment as a Judge of a High Court.

(c) The Central Government may, in any particular case, nominate a person having expert knowledge as to the nature of the property acquired, to assist the arbitrator, and where such nomination is made, the person to be compensated may also nominate an assessor for the said purpose.

(d) At the commencement of the proceedings before the arbitrator, the Central Government and the person to be compensated shall state what in their respective opinions is a fair amount of compensation.

(e) The arbitrator in making his award shall have regard to—

(i) the provisions of sub-section (1) of section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, so far as the same can be made applicable; and

(ii) whether the acquisition is of a permanent or temporary character.

(f) An appeal shall lie to the High Court against an award of an arbitrator except in cases where the amount thereof does not exceed an amount prescribed in this behalf by rule made by the Central Government.

(g) Save as provided in this section and in any rules made thereunder, nothing in any law for the time being in force shall apply to arbitrations under this section.

(2) The Central Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

(3) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power, such rules may prescribe—

(a) the procedure to be followed in arbitrations under this section;

(b) the principles to be followed in apportioning the costs of proceedings before the arbitrator and on appeal;

(c) the maximum amount of an award against which no appeal shall lie.

20. In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, the expression "Provincial Government" means, in relation to a Chief Commissioner's Province, the Chief Commissioner.

21. The Defence of India Ordinance, 1939, is hereby repealed; and any rules made, anything done and any action taken in exercise of any power conferred by or under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been made, done or taken in exercise of powers conferred by or under this Act as if this Act had commenced on the 3rd day of September, 1939.

INDIAN AIR FORCE VOLUNTARY RESERVE (DISCIPLINE) ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXXVI OF 1939.

[29th September, 1939.]

An Act to provide for the discipline of members of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve raised in British India on behalf of His Majesty.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the discipline of members of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve raised in British India on behalf of His Majesty;

It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title, extent and commencement. 1. (1) This Act may be called THE INDIAN AIR FORCE VOLUNTARY RESERVE (DISCIPLINE) ACT, 1939.

(2) It extends to the whole of British India and applies to members of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve wherever they may be.

(3) It shall come into force on such date as the Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, appoint in this behalf.

Power to make rules for regulation of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

2. The Central Government may make rules for the government, discipline and regulation of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve.

3. Every member of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve, while undergoing training in any unit, or otherwise, in pursuance of rules made under section 2, or when called into actual service in the Indian Air Force, in pursuance of the said rules, shall be subject to the Indian Air Force Act, 1932, in the same manner as a person belonging to His Majesty's Indian Air Force, and shall continue to be so subject until duly released from such training or service, as the case may be.

4. (1) If any member of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve, when required, in pursuance of rules made under section 2, to join a unit or attend at any place for the purpose of undergoing training, fails without reasonable excuse to join or attend in accordance with such requirement, he shall be punishable with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees.

(2) If any member of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve, when called into actual service in the Indian Air Force, and required by such call to join any unit or attend at any place, fails without reasonable excuse to comply with such requirement at or within such time as the Central Government may, by order, direct, he shall be liable to be apprehended and punished in the same manner as a person in or belonging to the Indian Air Force deserting or improperly absenting himself from duty, except that the punishment shall not exceed imprisonment which may extend to two years.

5. When any member of the Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve is required, in pursuance of the rules made under section 2, to join any unit or attend at any place for the purpose of undergoing training, or is called into actual service in the Indian Air Force, a certificate purporting to be signed by an officer appointed in this behalf under the said rules and stating that the said member failed to join or attend in accordance with such requirement or call shall, without proof of the signature or appointment of such officer, be evidence of the matter stated therein.

6. No Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class shall try an offence punishable under sub-section (1) of section 4.

7. The Indian Air Force Volunteer Reserve (Discipline) Ordinance, 1939, is hereby repealed; and any rules made, anything done and any action taken under the said Ordinance shall be deemed to have been made, done or taken under this Act as if this Act had commenced on the 16th day of September, 1939.

THE INDIAN AIRCRAFT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

Act No. XXXVII of 1939.

[29th September, 1939.]

An Act further to amend the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, for certain purposes.

WHEREAS it is expedient further to amend the Indian Aircraft Act, 1934, for the purposes hereinafter appearing; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

1. This Act may be called THE INDIAN AIRCRAFT (AMENDMENT) ACT, 1939.

THE FEDERAL COURT OF INDIA.

[Original Jurisdiction.]

PRESENT:—SIR MAURICE GWYER, C.J., SIR SHAH SULAIMAN AND SIR S. VARADACHARIAR, JJ.

The United Provinces

Plaintiffs*

v.

The Governor-General in Council

Defendant.

Cantonments Act (II of 1924), S. 106—Constitutional validity—Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937—Effect—Government of India Act, 1919, S. 84-(2)—Competence of Indian Legislature—If can be challenged in Court of law—Original jurisdiction of Federal Court.

The then Indian Legislature had power to legislate with respect to Cantonments (Entry I—central) and there is no doubt that the Devolution Rules (1920) in making "Criminal Law" a central subject (Entry No. 30) gave the then Indian Legislature power not only to create criminal offences but also to provide for the destination of fines imposed in respect of such offences. S. 106 of the Cantonments Act was within the competence of the then Indian Legislature. Even if it related to a provincial subject, the Act, once passed could not have been successfully challenged in any Court of law. The practical effect of the Transitory Provisions Order was to postpone for two years the coming into effect of so much of the Adaptation Order as relates to S. 106 of the Act of 1924, that is, until 1st of April, 1939.

The Federal Court has by S. 204 (1) of the Act exclusive Original Jurisdiction in any dispute between the Governor-General in Council or Federation, and any province if and in so far as the dispute involves any question whether of law or fact on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends. So, where the issue is as to the validity or otherwise of S. 106 of Act II of 1924, it is clearly a dispute involving a question on which the existence of a legal right depends.

Dr. N. P. Asthana (Advocate-General, U.P.) and Sri Narain Sahai instructed by Bannerji (Agent) for United Provinces.

Sir Brojendra Mitter (Advocate-General of India) and K. K. Raisada instructed by K. Y. Bhandarkar (Agent) for Governor-General in Council.

Gwyer, C.J.:—In this suit between the United Provinces and the Governor-General in Council, the plaintiffs pray for a declaration that certain provisions of the Cantonments Act, 1924, were ultra vires the then Indian Legislature and were therefore not a law in force in British India when Part III of the new Constitution Act came into operation; that all fines imposed and realized by Criminal Courts for offences committed within the cantonment areas in the United Provinces ought to be credited to provincial revenues; and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover and adjust all such sums wrongly credited to Cantonment Funds since 1924. The declaration prayed for in the original plaint was limited to the last two matters; but by

* Suit No. 3 of 1938. 23rd March, 1939.

Gwyer, C.J.

leave of the Court the plaintiffs were allowed to amend it in order that the Court might be in a position to determine the real matter in issue in the case.

The Governor-General in Council by his defence denies that any provisions of the Cantonments Act, 1924, were invalid; and he contends further that the dispute with the plaintiffs is not one which is justiciable before this Court and that this Court has therefore no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The facts in the case are not in dispute and may be shortly summarised. A cantonment is a place in or in the vicinity of which any of His Majesty's regular forces or regular air forces are quartered and which has been declared by notification to be a cantonment for the purposes of the Acts in that behalf for the time being in force. The administration of cantonment areas, almost from their first establishment, has been for obvious military reasons subject to special regulations. The first general Cantonments Act, a consolidating and amending measure, was passed in 1889 and repealed a large number of existing Acts and Regulations. The Act of 1889 was followed by another consolidating and amending Act in 1910 (Act XV of 1910), and later by the very elaborate Code of 1924, an Act of 292 sections and six schedules (Act II of 1924), which superseded all previous legislation and is, though it has not itself escaped amendment, the principal Act relating to the subject which is now in force.

Part of the administrative machinery of every cantonment area is the Cantonment Fund, which is credited with revenue derived from various sources and is required to be applied for the purposes, express or implied, for which any statutory powers and duties are conferred or imposed upon the administrative authority of the area; see Ss. 106 and 109 of the Act of 1924. Among the above sources of revenue are all fines recovered from persons convicted of offences committed within the cantonment (i) under the Act, or any rule or by-law made thereunder, (ii) under S. 34 of the Police Act, 1864, or any corresponding enactment for the time being in force, (iii) under Chapters XIII and XIV of the Indian Penal Code, (iv) under S. 156 of the Army Act, (v) under the provisions of any enactment providing for the crediting of a fine to the Cantonment Fund, and (vi) under any other enactment for the time being in force in respect of which the Governor-General in Council has, by general or special order, directed that the fines realized thereunder shall be credited to the Cantonment Fund. These provisions have not been affected by any subsequent legislation up to 1st April, 1937, and were therefore, if otherwise valid, laws in force immediately before the commencement of Part III of the Constitution Act. Statutory provisions with regard to Cantonment Funds first appeared in the Cantonments Act, 1889. The provisions of that Act which relate to them were substantially reproduced in the consolidating and amending Act of 1910; and S. 106 of the Act of 1924 only differs in this respect from the earlier statutes by the addition of the provisions (v) and (vi) set out above.

Between the enactment of the Cantonments Act, 1910, and the Cantonments Act, 1924, respectively the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms, embodied in the Government of India Act, 1919, had introduced profound and far-reaching changes in the constitutional structure of British India and in the relations between the Central and the Provincial Governments; and it is one of those changes that has given rise to the present suit. Up to 1919 the Government of India was essentially a unitary Government, with a concentration of authority at the centre. Every Provincial Government was under a statutory obligation to obey the orders of the Governor-General in Council and was under his superintendence, direction and control in all matters relating to the Government of its Province; and the Central Legislature was supreme over all persons and matters in British India. The Government of India Act, 1919, did not by any specific enactment alter those relationships; but it added a new section (S. 45-A) to the existing Code which provided that statutory rules might be made (a) for the classification of subjects in relation to the functions of Government as central and provincial subjects for the purpose of distinguishing the functions of local Governments and local legislatures from the functions of the Governor-General in Council and the Indian Legislature, (b) for the devolution of authority in respect of provincial subjects to local Governments, and (c) for the allocation of revenues or other moneys to those Governments. These rules were to be made by the Governor-General in Council, with the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council, and by S. 129-A (1) of the Act were not to be subject to repeal or alteration by the Indian Legislature or by any local legislature.

It was thus that the Devolution Rules, 1920, came into existence; and they gave to the Provinces for the first time a quasi-independence of the Centre by allotting to them sources of revenue of their own and assigning them separate administrative and legislative spheres. Article 3 (1) of the Rules provided that,

"for the purpose of distinguishing the functions of the local Governments and local legislatures of Governors' Provinces from the functions of the Governor-General in Council and the Indian Legislature, subjects shall in those Provinces be classified in relation to the functions of Government as central and provincial subjects in accordance with the lists set out in Schedule I".

This Schedule consisted of two parts, Part I setting out the central subjects and Part II the provincial subjects.

In Part I were the following entries:—

- "1. (b) Naval and Military works and cantonments;
- "30. Criminal law, including criminal procedure;
- "41. Legislation in regard to any provincial subject, in so far as such subject is in Part II of this Schedule stated to be subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature, and any powers relating to such subject reserved by legislation to the Governor-General in Council."

In Part II the following entry is material:—

"17. Administration of justice, including constitution, powers, maintenance and organisation of Courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction within the Province; subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature as regards High Courts, Chief Courts, and Courts of Judicial Commissioners, and any courts of criminal jurisdiction."

Lastly, Art. 14 of the Rules provided that certain sources of revenue should, in the case of Governors' Provinces, be allocated to the local Government as sources of provincial revenue, and among them was included "receipts accruing in respect of provincial subjects."

Gwyer, C.J.

In 1926 the then Government of the United Provinces addressed the Government of India, claiming the proceeds of fines in cantonment areas as among the "receipts accruing in respect of provincial subjects", inasmuch as the fines in question accrued in respect of the administration of justice; and they advanced for the first time the contention that S. 106 of the Cantonments Act of 1924. was ultra vires. The Government of India appear at that time to have accepted this contention, but later they rejected it. The new Provincial Government, after the coming into force of Part III of the Constitution Act, adhered to the view of their predecessors and insisted that the fines should be credited to Provincial revenues, and since the Government of India still maintained the contrary, the present proceedings were begun.

The Advocate-General of the United Provinces contended before us on behalf of the plaintiffs that "receipts accruing in respect of the administration of justice" prima facie included all fines imposed by all Criminal Courts throughout the Province. He contended also that, if S. 106 of the Act of 1924, required them to be credited to the Cantonment Fund, it was repugnant to, and inconsistent with, the Devolution Rules and therefore by implication repealed or altered them, which, by reason of S. 129-A of the Government of India Act, 1919, no Act of the then Indian Legislature had power to do. He argued therefore that the Act of 1924 was to that extent ultra vires and a nullity. This is the substance of the plaintiff's case, and it appears, if I may use an old and familiar simile, to be as full of holes as a colander.

No doubt fines imposed by Criminal Courts in the Provinces would be properly credited to provincial revenues as receipts accruing in respect of the administration of justice, but only if not otherwise appropriated by competent authority; and Entry No. 30 in the list of central subjects, "Criminal law, including criminal procedure", clearly includes the power to legislate for the destination of fines for any criminal offences with respect to which it was competent for the Indian Legislature to legislate. The case of Toronto City Corporation v. The King,¹ is conclusive on this point. Under S. 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, the exclusive legislative authority of the Dominion Parliament is declared to extend (inter alia) to "criminal law, except the constitution of Courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters". By S. 92 the Provincial Legislatures have exclusive power to make laws (inter alia) in relation to "the administration of justice in the Province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of Provincial Courts, both of criminal and of civil jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts".

In the case cited the question arose whether the Dominion Parliament, by virtue of its exclusive legislative authority with respect to criminal law, was competent to direct the manner in which fines imposed for infractions of the criminal law should be appropriated. The Judicial Committee held that the Dominion Parliament was competent so to direct, and their judgment, with reference to the language of S. 91 above cited, contains the following passage:—

1. (1932) A.C. 98.

Gwyer, C.J.

"Plainly, and indeed admittedly, this confers on the Dominion Parliament the exclusive right by legislation to create and define crimes and to impose penalties for their commission. In their Lordships' opinion it no less empowers the Dominion Legislature to direct how penalties for the infraction of the criminal law shall be applied. It has always been regarded as within the scope of criminal legislation to make provision for the disposal of penalties inflicted, as innumerable instances show, and the power to do so is, if not essential, at least incidental, to the power to legislate on criminal matters, for it may well go to the efficacy of such legislation. If the power to direct the manner of application of penalties were to be dissociated from the power to create such penalties and were to be lodged in another authority, it is easy to see how penal legislation might be seriously affected, if not stultified". Ibid., at p. 104.

The similarity of the language in Ss. 91 and 92 of the British North America Act to that of the Devolution Rules will not escape attention; and there can be no doubt that the Devolution Rules, in making criminal law a central subject, gave the then Indian Legislature power not only to create criminal offences but also to provide for the destination of fines imposed in respect of such offences.

It will thus be seen that the Indian Legislature had power under the Devolution Rules to legislate with respect to cantonments [Entry No. 1 (b) of the list of central subjects] and with respect to criminal law (Entry No. 30), and that the latter power included a power to legislate with respect to the destination of fines imposed for breaches of the criminal law; and that if the legislature chose to legislate as regards any courts of criminal jurisdiction in a Province, including of course courts in cantonment areas, such legislation would prevail over any provincial legislation with respect to the administration of justice within the Province (see the concluding words of Entry No. 17 in the list of provincial subjects). In these circumstances there appear to be no grounds on which the legislative competence of the Indian Legislature to enact S. 106 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, could successfully be challenged.

I am also of opinion that the competence of the Indian Legislature to enact that section could not at any time have been made the subject of legal proceedings. By S. 84 (2) of the then Government of India Act the validity of any Act of the Indian Legislature, or of any local legislature, was not to be open to question in any legal proceedings on the ground that the Act affected a provincial subject or a central subject as the case might be. The plaintiffs urged that this provision could not apply where an Act of the Indian Legislature sought to repeal or alter or amend the Devolution Rules, since this was something which the Legislature was forbidden to do by S. 129-A of the Act. In my opinion S. 129-A had reference to legislation purporting in terms to repeal or alter or amend the Devolution Rules, and not to legislation which was merely inconsistent with the rules and therefore could only be said to repeal or to alter them by implication. Indeed, if any other interpretation were adopted, the whole purpose of S. 84 (2) would have been defeated, for that enactment was clearly designed to make the new distribution of powers between the Centre and the Provinces an administrative and domestic arrangement only. The Provincial Governments and Legislatures, though they obtained a much greater measure of freedom than they had enjoyed hitherto, still remained subject to central control; and the

Gwyer, C.J.

Central Legislature still retained by virtue of S. 84(2) of the Act the power to legislate for the whole of British India. The Provinces in other words were far from having acquired an autonomous status. The new administrative and legislative spheres assigned to them were not exclusive; and for protection against the invasion of the latter they had to rely on the good sense and bona fides of the Government of India and not on any Court of law. And I may point out that Art. 4 of the Devolution Rules themselves provided that,

"where any doubt arises as to whether a particular matter does or does not relate to a provincial subject, the Governor-General in Council shall decide whether the matter does or does not so relate, and his decision shall be final".

If any doubt remained, it was removed once and for all by the Governor-General's assent to the Act of 1924. For these reasons therefore I hold that, even if S. 106 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, had, contrary to the opinion which I have already expressed, related to a provincial and not a central subject, the Act once passed could not have been successfully challenged in any Court of law. Accordingly, it was a law in force in British India immediately before the commencement of Part III of the Constitution Act, and by reason of S. 292 of that Act it continued in force in British India until altered or repealed or amended by a competent legislature or other competent authority.

It remains to consider the legal position since the coming into force of Part III of the Constitution Act on 1st April, 1937. It is not in dispute that S. 106 of the Act of 1924 has not been altered or repealed or amended up to the present time. There are, however, two Orders in Council which have a bearing on the matter and on which it is necessary to say a few words: the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937. By S. 293 of the Act, His Majesty is given power to provide by Order in Council that any law in force in British India shall, until repealed or amended by a competent legislature or other competent authority, have effect subject to such adaptations and modifications as appear to His Majesty necessary or expedient for bringing the provisions of that law into accord with the provisions of the Constitution Act. Under this power the very elaborate Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, has been made, an Order running to some two hundred and seventy pages and covering the whole body of existing Indian legislation. Among the Indian Acts in which modifications and adaptations have thus been effected is the Cantonments Act, 1924, in S. 106 of which the whole of paragraph (c) is now to be omitted, that is to say, the whole of the provisions relating to the crediting of fines to the Cantonment Fund. I assume, though I do not know, that this adaptation or modification was made, because it was thought that after 1st April, 1937, all fines imposed for breaches of the criminal law must under the new Constitution necessarily be credited to provincial revenues and that S. 106 of the Act of 1924 could only be brought into accord with this state of things by the omission of the provisions to which I have referred. But whatever the reason for the adaptation or modification and whether or not it proceeded on a correct interpretation of the law, I do not think that it can now be challenged; and accordingly, but for the provisions of the other Order which I have mentioned and to which I advert below, it appears that on 1st April, 1937, the date when the adaptation Order came into operation, the provisions of S. 106 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, relating to the crediting of fines to the Cantonment Fund would have ceased to have effect.

The other Order, the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937, was made under powers conferred by S. 310 (1) of the Constitution Act, which recites (inter alia) that difficulties may arise in relation to the transition from the provisions of the previous Government of India Act to the provisions of the Constitution Act and that the nature of the difficulties and of the provision which should be made for meeting them could not at the date of the passing of the Act be fully foreseen. His Majesty is accordingly empowered to make by Order in Council such temporary provision for the purpose of removing any of these difficulties as might be specified in the Order. One of the difficulties which required to be dealt with appears to have arisen from the fact that certain sources of revenue, appropriated immediately before Part III of the Constitution Act came into force for the use of provincial revenues or of certain specified local funds, became after that date an exclusively central subject. It would clearly have been highly inconvenient if these sources of revenue were suddenly cut off, before the Provincial Governments and Legislatures had had an opportunity of taking stock of the situation; and accordingly the Order in question provided (inter alia) that in every Province, notwithstanding anything contained in the Constitution Act or in any Order in Council made thereunder, but subject to any provision to the contrary which might be made by an Act of the Indian, the Federal or the Provincial Legislature passed in the exercise of the powers respectively conferred on them by the Act, any tax, fine, penalty or other sum required by or under any law in force immediately before the commencement of Part III of the Constitution Act to be credited to any local fund or other fund should, during the two financial years next following 1st April, 1937, continue to be so credited and should not, during those years, be deemed to be part of the revenues of the Province. Thus the status quo was to be preserved for a period of at least two years, in the absence of legislation to the contrary; and no local fund found itself automatically and at once deprived of any existing source of revenue by the coming into force of Part III of the Constitution Act, merely because that particular source of revenue had now become a matter within the exclusive competence of the Central Legislature.

But "criminal law", which was a central subject under the Devolution Rupes, remained a central subject under the Constitution Act; see Entry No. 1 of Part I of List III in the Seventh Schedule to the Act. It is true that List III is the "Concurrent Legislative List" and that the Provincial Legislatures have also power to legislate with respect to the matters enumerated in it; but a provincial law which is repugnant to any provision of a law which the Central Legislature is competent to enact with respect to any matter enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List is void to the extent of the repugnancy; see S. 107 (1) of the Act. Nor is there anything in the Provincial Legislative List (List II of the Seventh Schedule) which gives a wider legislative competence to the new Provincial Legislatures than their predecessors had possessed for the present purpose under the Devolution Rules: see entry No. 2 of that List. If I am right in my view of the competence of the then Indian Legislature to enact S. 106 of the Cantonments Act, 1924, it follows that the Central Legislature would have been no less competent to enact it after Part III of the Constitution Act had come into force, and the provisions of the Transitory Provisions Order were not required for the purpose of confining the status quo in cantonment areas for the specified period of two years by anything in the new Act. The status quo was continued in this particular case by the Constitution Act itself, until the Central Legislature, and no other legislature, chose to alter it. But the provisions of the Adaptation Order, as I have already said, did affect the status quo because as soon as that Order became operative no fines could any longer be paid into Cantonment Funds; and accordingly the practical effect of the Transitory Provisions Order was to postpone for two years the coming into effect of so much of the Adaptation Order as relates to S. 106 of the Act of 1924, that is, until 1st April of the current year. On and after that date, unless the Adaptation Order is amended, the fines will no longer be credited to the Cantonment Funds, but will be credited to the revenues of the Province.

In my opinion therefore the plaintiffs are not entitled to any of the declarations for which they ask. It would not in these circumstances be necessary to go into the question of jurisdiction raised by the Advocate-General of India; but in view of its importance and its possible bearing on future cases I think it right to express an opinion upon it.

I do not think that the plaintiffs would in any event have been entitled to the declarations for which they originally asked, in proceedings against the Governor-General in Council. Their proper course would have been to take proceedings against a named Cantonment Board, though it is scarcely necessary to say that such proceedings could not have been brought in this Court. It was for that reason that the Court gave leave to amend, since the validity of S. 106 of the Act of 1924 was the real question in issue, and though it could have been raised equally well in proceedings against a Cantonment Board, that would have involved an appeal to the High Court and afterwards to this Court before the matter was finally settled. I have no doubt that it was competent for this Court to entertain a suit for a declaration that S. 106 of the Act of 1924 was ultra vires. The Federal Court has by S. 204 (1) of the Act an exclusive original jurisdiction in any dispute between the Governor-General in Council (or, after Federation, the Federation) and any Province, if and in so far as the dispute involves any question, whether of law or fact, on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends. It is admitted that the legal right of the Province to have the fines now under discussion credited to provincial revenues and not to the Cantonment Funds depends upon the validity or otherwise of S. 106 of the Act of 1924. The plaintiffs deny the validity of the section, the defendant asserts it; and it seems to me that this is clearly a dispute involving a question on which the existence of a legal right depends. The question might, as I have said, have been raised in proceedings to which a Cantonment Board was itself a party; but it is convenient to all concerned that it should be disposed of in the proceedings now before the Court. A Cantonment Board is, it is true, a corporation with statutory powers or duties of its own; but it is not an independent body and the Central Government exercises a considerable measure of control over it, more indeed at the present time than it did before the Constitution Act came into force, as a reference to the adaptations and modifications which the Adaptation Order has made in the Act of 1924 plainly shows. I think that in these circumstances the Governor-General in Council has a sufficient interest in the subject-matter of the challenged enactment to make it possible for us to entertain a suit against him at the instance of the plaintiffs for a declaration that the enactment is ultra vires. It is undesirable that any attempt should be made to define what interest would be sufficient for this purpose; but I have no doubt that it is sufficient in the present case. If it be said, as indeed the Advocate-General of India argued, that a declaration granted against the Governor-General in Council would not be binding on any Cantonment Board, I can only say that I should be very greatly surprised if a subordinate statutory body disregarded a pronouncement of this Court and I should be even more surprised if the Central Government did not take all necessary steps to see that subordinate bodies over which it is able to exercise a substantial measure of control obeyed the law as laid down by this Court. I decline indeed to contemplate the possibility of any other state of things; and I draw attention to the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Fischer v. The Secretary of State for India in Council.¹

Gwyer, C.J.

There is one other matter on which it seems desirable that something should be said. The Advocate-General of India complained of the pleading which he was called upon to answer, and there was in my opinion substance in his criticisms. The rules with regard to pleadings which are to be found in O. 21 of the Federal Court Rules are to be strictly followed; and particular attention should be given to r. 2, which provides that every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of material facts on which the party pleading relies, but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved, nor any argumentative matter; and to r. 5, which provides that wherever the contents of any document are material, it shall be sufficient to state the effect thereof as briefly as possible, without setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material. Adherence to these rules will enable the opposite party to know exactly what case he has to meet, will be of material assistance to the Court, and will tend to shorten proceedings by clarifying and defining the real issues in the case.

The action will be dismissed and judgment entered for the Governor-General in Council, with costs.

Sulaiman, J.

Sulaiman, J.—In this suit the United Provinces claim against the Governor-General in Council a declaration of their alleged legal right to have all fines imposed and realized by the Criminal Courts for offences committed within Cantonment areas credited to Provincial revenues and their right to recover and adjust all such sums so far credited since 1924. A further relief, on which the claim was really based, has been allowed to be added, that S. 106 of the Cantonments Act (Act II of 1924) was ultra vires. Under this section, a Cantonment Fund was formed to which were to be credited all fines recovered from persons convicted of certain offences committed within each Cantonment. The defendant although admitting the main facts does not admit that the United Provinces Government were entitled to fines before the new Act came into force or that they are now entitled to receive the fines disposed of by competent legislation. It is denied that S. 106 (c) was ultra vires. It is pleaded that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant because the defendant never claimed the Cantonment Fund or any fines imposed or realised by Criminal Courts in Cantonment areas. It is also urged that the Federal Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the present suit, so far as the two original reliefs are concerned.

It appears that on 29th March, 1929, the Government of India (Army Department) agreed with the Government of the United Provinces that S. 106 (c) was ultra vires and that the proceeds of magisterial fines must be credited to Provincial revenues and could go into the Cantonment Funds only in the form of a contribution from Provincial revenues. But this decision was apparently not fully put into effect. Subsequently, in March, 1935, the Government of India, accepting the view of the Punjab Government, took up the attitude that S. 106 (c) was intra vires and would continue in operation for two years. Although the official correspondence that passed were admitted on behalf of the defendant, it is unnecessary to refer to them as it cannot possibly be suggested that a previous admission on a point of law is in any way binding on him.

Jurisdiction.—Under S. 204 of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Federal Court, to the exclusion of any other Court, has original jurisdiction in any dispute between a Province and the Centre, if and in so far as the dispute involves any question (whether of law or fact) on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends. The jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a suit in which such a dispute arises cannot be seriously denied; but whether that dispute involves any question on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends is quite another matter, which cannot be determined without going into the merits.

So far as the claim of the United Provinces to recover the fines since the coming into force of the new Government of India Act is concerned, there can be no doubt that a question as to a legal right is involved, irrespective of the final decision whether that claim is well-founded or not. But, as regards the position under the Act of 1919, it has been argued that inasmuch as a Province had no right to sue in any Court of law the claim for such fines cannot be regarded as being based on a 'legal right'. The answer to this question depends on what is meant by 'legal right', that is to say, whether it means a right recognised by law or enforceable in a Court of law.

Legal Right.—The learned Advocate-General of India has relied on the definition of the term 'legal right' as given by Dr. T. E. Holland in his Jurisprudence (13th Edition, p. 82) as,

"If, irrespectively of his having, or not having, either the might, or moral right on his side, the power of the State will protect him in so carrying out his wishes, and will compel such acts or forbearances on the part of other people as may be necessary in order that his wishes may be so carried out, then he has a 'legal right' so to carry out his wishes."

But that very definition shows that the protection under 'the power of the State' would be sufficient, and remedy through a Court of law is not essential. John Austin in his Lectures on Jurisprudence (1929, Vol. I, Lect. XVI, p. 398) also remarked that,

"A person has a right, when the law authorizes him to exact from another an act or forbearance. The test of a right is that (independently of positive provision) the acts or forbearances enjoined are not incapable of being enforced civilly or in the way of civil action, i.e., at the discretion or pleasure of the party towards whom they are to be done or observed."

The capability of its being enforced by action does not at all seem to be a necessary ingredient. Indeed, Sir John Salmond in his Jurisprudence (7th Edition, 1924, pp. 239-40) has definitely expressed the opinion that,

"Although a legal right is commonly accompanied by the power of instituting legal proceedings for the enforcement of it, this is not invariably the case, and does not pertain to the essence of the conception."

According to him the term 'legal right' is,

"used in a wider and laxer sense to include any legally recognised interest, whether it corresponds to a legal duty or not, and in this generic sense a legal right may be defined as any advantage or benefit which is in any manner conferred upon a person by a rule of law" (p. 246).

That the enforceability by action cannot be a true test would become obvious from the familiar instance of a legal right not being extinguished and yet action on it being barred by prescription or lapse of time. A debt barred by time nevertheless exists and repayment of it is perfectly valid, even though it cannot be enforced by action in a Court of law. Numerous other instances of unenforceable legal rights can be mentioned like claims against Foreign States or Sovereigns, interests due on foreign bonds or claims for foreign lands, claims exceeding either the territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction of a Court. The term 'legal right' used in S. 204 obviously means right recognised by law and capable of being enforced by the power of a State, but not necessarily in a Court of law. It is a right of a party recognised and protected by a rule of law, the violation of which would be a legal wrong done to his interest and respect for which is a legal duty, even though no action may actually lie. The only ingredients seem to be a legal recognition and a legal protection. The mere fact that under the previous Act the Provincial Governments were subordinate administrations under the control of the Central Government and could only have made a representation to the Governor-General in Council or the Secretary of State, would not be sufficient in itself for holding that the former could not possibly possess any 'legal rights' at all against the Central Government, even in respect of rights conferred upon them by the provisions of the Act or the rules made thereunder.

In the "Alexander"¹ where formerly there was no remedy at Common Law in respect of necessities furnished to a foreign ship, but a new Statute gave such jurisdiction, it was held that as the Act was a remedial measure, it governed even cases where the cause of action had arisen before the Act came into force. Dr. Lushington observed:

"I am not aware of any principle or decision which establishes the doctrine, that where a statute affords a new mode of suing, the cause of action must necessarily arise subsequently to the period when the statute comes into operation. On the contrary, where a statute creates a new jurisdiction, the new jurisdiction, I apprehend, takes up all past cases, and there is not the slightest injustice in this; for although the circumstances may have occurred prior to the passing of the statute, the suit or action may have been commenced subsequently."

And so if a "legal right" really existed under the old Act, S. 204 of the new Act would not be inapplicable merely because the right related to an earlier period.

Cause of Action.—But it has not been suggested that the Governor-General in Council, who has been sued, received the fines as to which a declaration has been sought. The Cantonments Act (II of 1924), consolidating and amending the previous law relating to the administration of Cantonments, came into force on the 1st May, 1924. Under S. 11 every Cantonment Board is a body corporate having perpetual succession and with power to acquire and hold property and to sue and be sued by its name. Under S. 60 it has power to impose taxes. Under S. 106 in every Cantonment, a Cantonment Fund has to be formed to which certain specified sums have to be credited. Under S. 107 (3) a Board has authority to invest the funds and also to dispose of such investments or vary them for others of a like nature. Under S. 108 the properties acquired, provided or maintained by a Board vest in it and belong to it and are under its direction, management and control. Under S. 109 the Cantonment Fund and all properties vested in a Board are to be applied for the purposes specified.

It follows that the amounts of the fines which had been credited to the Cantonment funds were under the control of Cantonment Boards and have been disbursed by them. The Cantonment Boards have not been made defendants in this suit and no relief is claimed against them. Had Cantonment Boards been made parties, they would have been entitled to claim protection under S. 272 and also to ask for notice required by S. 273. If the United Provinces desired to get a declaration of their right to recover the fines from the Cantonment Boards and claim adjustments, they could have sued the Boards directly in the Provincial Courts, as to which S. 204 would have been inapplicable. The two reliefs originally asked for by the United Provinces should have been claimed against the Cantonment Boards which are in every sense boards of a local Self-Government in Cantonment areas, and those reliefs should not, in reality, be directed against the Governor-General in Council.

1. (1841) 1 W.Rob. 288: 166 E.R. 580.

Sulaiman, J.

But under the amended S. 79 (a), C.P.C., in the case of a suit against the Central Government, the Governor-General in Council is the authority to be named as defendant. The Central Government has certainly been disputing the claim of the plaintiff and maintaining the validity of S. 706 (c), and the Governor-General in Council may have issued directions under S. 106 (c) (vi) and has made rules under S. 111, which would have to be modified if the section were found to be ultra vires. There is thus a dispute between the parties within the meaning of S. 204. But the utmost that the United Provinces can, in the absence of the Cantonment Boards, claim against the Governor-General in Council is a declaration as to the invalidity of that section.

Legislative Power.—Under S. 45 of the Act of 1919, every Local Government had to obey the orders of the Governor-General in Council and was under his superintendence, direction and control. The powers of a local legislature were limited by S. 80-A. Under S. 65 (1) (a) the Indian Legislature had a general power to make 'laws for all persons, for all Courts, and for all places and things within British India'. This power was conferred in the widest terms and would be comprehensive, unless there was some other obstacle in the way of exercising it. S. 84 (2) also laid down that,

"nothing in the Government of India Act or in any rule made thereunder should be construed as diminishing in any respect the powers of the Indian Legislature as laid down in S. 65".

It further provided that,

"the validity of any Act of the Indian Legislature should not be open to question in any legal proceedings on the ground that the Act affected a Provincial subject."

Thus, so long as the Act remained in force the power of the Indian Legislature was almost supreme. Under S. 72-D (3) (iii) expenditure of which the amount was prescribed by or under any law did not require to be submitted to the local Council. The language of S. 84 (2) was, however, not so wide as it might have been. In the first place, the sub-section did not say that nothing should diminish the powers; it merely said that nothing should be construed as diminishing the powers. Again, it did not say that an Act of the Indian Legislature shall not be invalid on the ground that it affected a Provincial subject; it merely said that the validity of any such Act shall not be open to question in any legal proceedings. Ss. 65 and 84 read together subordinated the other provisions of the Act and the rules made thereunder to the power of the Indian Legislature. On the other hand, S. 129-A (1) laid down specially that the rules made by the Governor-General in Council, with the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council, should not be subject to repeal or alteration by the Indian Legislature. This latter provision would mean that the Indian Legislature had no power to repeal or alter any such rule, and would have apparently come into conflict with the general provisions of S. 65 (if they had stood by themselves unless they were interpreted as being mutually exclusive, one referring to the specific rules made for the purposes mentioned in sections like S. 45 and the other dealing with legislation regarding persons, Courts, places and things. While the old Act was in force Courts were undoubtedly debarred under S. 84 (2) from construing S. 129-A so as to diminish the power of the Indian Legislature, and the validity of an Indian Act could not be questioned in a Court of Law. The classification of subjects under the rules was therefore bound to be construed so as not to come into conflict with any Central legislation. But S. 84 is no longer in force and the bar imposed by it has now been removed. Still, every endeavour should be made to interpret the classification as being subject to all such legislation. If, however, a conflict be inevitable, even then, reading the three sections together the conclusion is, on the whole, irresistible that the Indian Legislature prior to April, 1937, possessed full power of making laws, including matters which by implication might even be contrary to the rules. In this view the validity of S. 106 (c) of the Cantonments Act cannot at all be disputed.

The Devolution Rules.—I am further of the opinion that on a proper interpretation of the Devolution Rules themselves they did not in any way invalidate the aforesaid section, as it did not at all effect a repeal or alteration of the rules.

Under S. 45-A (1) (b) of the Government of India Act, 1919, provision could be made by rules under the Act for the classification of subjects, the devolution of authority in respect of provincial subjects to local Governments and the allocation of revenues or other moneys to those Governments. S. 129-A provided that the rules made under the Act should not be subject to repeal or alteration by the Indian Legislature or by any local legislature. Devolution rules were framed by the Governor-General in Council with the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council under S. 45-A. Under r. 3 (1) functions were classified as Central and Provincial subjects in accordance with the lists in Schedule I. Under sub-r. (2) any matter which was included in the list of Provincial subjects, Part II of Schedule I, was, to the extent of such inclusion, excluded from any Central subject of which, but for such inclusion it would form part. Under r. 4 where any doubt arose as to whether a particular matter did or did not relate to a Provincial subject, the Governor-General in Council was to decide the matter finally. Under r. 14 (1) (b) the sources of revenue allocated to the local Government included receipts accruing in respect of Provincial subjects.

Schedule I, Part I, contained the Central subjects and No. 1 (b) included Cantonments; No. 30 was Criminal Law including Criminal Procedure, and No. 47 comprised all other matters not included among Provincial subjects. Part II contained the Provincial subjects and included serial No. 17 in the following terms:—

“Administration of Justice, including constitution, powers, maintenance and organisation of Courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction within the province; subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature as regards High Courts, Chief Courts, and Courts of Judicial Commissioners, and any Courts of criminal jurisdiction.”

Serial No. 50 was as follows:—

“Imposition by legislation of punishments by fine, penalty, or imprisonment for enforcing any law of the Province relating to any Provincial subject; subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature in the case of any subject in respect of which such a limitation is imposed under these rules:”

It is thus clear that on the one hand Cantonments were a Central subject and so were Criminal Law and Procedure as also all other matters not included among Provincial subjects. On the other hand, Administration of Justice was a Provincial subject and in express terms it included constitution, powers, maintenance and organisation of civil and criminal Courts; but this was subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature 'as regards Courts' of criminal jurisdiction and High Courts but not other matters. It is also clear that imposition of fine for enforcing any law of the Province relating to any Provincial subject was specifically assigned to the Provinces; but even this was subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature in the case of any subject in respect of which such a limitation was imposed under the rules. It is equally clear that the lists did not specifically refer to fines imposed under Central laws much less did they specifically mention fines realised under such laws within Cantonments. The question is whether they came under I (1-b), I, (30) or I, (47), or else II, (17).

Cantonments.—Cantonments were no doubt assigned to the Centre, while Administration of Justice to the Provinces. But it cannot be said that Cantonments with their entire administration were expressly excepted and the Administration of Justice did not extend to such areas. The Government of India themselves had not taken this view as they handed over the Administration of Justice in Cantonment areas to the Provinces. Had Administration of Justice not been specially assigned to the Provinces, the subject "Cantonments" would have included such administration. But under r. 3 (2) the Administration of Justice in Cantonments, which would otherwise have formed part of the subject "Cantonments" must be deemed to be excluded from it, owing to its inclusion in the Provincial list. This rule as to over-lapping gave predominance to the Provincial subjects. If Administration of Justice were to be confined to areas outside Cantonments, there would still be a curtailment of that power. The scope of the Administration of Justice must therefore extend to Cantonments also just as to other areas. It is accordingly not possible to hold that Cantonments were wholly outside the jurisdiction of the Provinces.

Administration of Justice.—The Administration of Justice refers to the constitution, powers, maintenance and organisation of Courts as also akin matters, and may not necessarily include the appropriation of all fines realised under Central legislation, even though Serial No. 17 made this Provincial power subject to Central legislation only 'as regards Courts' of criminal jurisdiction. That the expression "Administration of Justice" did not include "Imposition of fines, etc.," follows from the fact that such an imposition was mentioned separately under serial No. 50 as a distinct and independent subject. The two must therefore form separate and not over-lapping categories. The remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in P. V. Vallu v. J. Langlois,¹ may well be quoted in this connection:

"But one thing at least is clear that those words (i.e., administration of justice) do not point expressly or by any necessary implication to the particular subject of election petitions; and when we find in the same Act another clause which deals expressly with those petitions there is not the smallest difficulty in taking the two clauses together and placing upon them both a consistent construction."

1. (1879) 5 A.C. 115 at 119.

Sulaiman, J.

If Administration of Justice had been intended to include imposition of fines as well, there would have been no necessity for mentioning such imposition under a separate head and confining it to the enforcement of Provincial laws only. The imposition of fines under Criminal legislation of the Centre would more appropriately come under the category "Criminal Law and Procedure" and not "Administration of Justice". If so directed by Central legislation, the fines when realized would be receipts accruing in respect of Criminal Law and Procedure, and not receipts accruing in respect of Administration of Justice.

Criminal legislation.—When a Legislature can declare certain acts or omissions as criminal offences, and has power to prohibit them, it must necessarily possess authority to enforce the observance of its prohibitions by the imposition of criminal sanctions or penalties for disobedience, otherwise this power would be wholly abortive. With the power to prohibit an Act, there must co-exist the incidental power to impose punishment for the violation of such a prohibition.

The subject Criminal Law including Criminal Procedure is obviously used in its general and wide sense so as to occupy the entire field except what has been excepted and carved out of it in Part II. As the language used in the Devolution Rules is very similar to that employed in the Canadian Constitution (S. 92 No. 27 and S. 92 No. 14), the words, which Lord Herschell is reported to have used in *A. G. for Ontario v. A. G. for the Dominion*¹ and Lefroy; Canada's Federal System (1913), p. 320, are equally applicable:

"It is all the criminal law in the widest and fullest sense, except that part of it which is necessary for the purpose of enforcing, whether by fine, penalty or imprisonment, any of the laws validly made under the 16 clauses under which laws are to be made by the Provincial Government."

Again, it was observed in A. G. for Ontario v. Hamilton Street Railway Co.,² that,

"It is therefore the criminal law in its widest sense that is reserved. . . . The fact that from the Criminal Law generally there is one exception . . . renders it more clear, if anything were necessary to render it more clear, that with that exception the criminal law in its widest sense is reserved over the exclusive authority of the Dominion Parliament."

In *Bradlaugh v. Clarke*³, the Earl of Selborne stated that it was known to be

"the Law that every unappropriated penalty goes to the King, and that a common informer cannot have any right to, or interest in, a penalty imposed by a public statute unless it is given to him either expressly, or by a just and reasonable implication from the words which the Legislature has used."

In the *Toronto City Corporation v. The King*⁴, S. 1036 of the Criminal Code of Canada had provided that fines imposed in the Province of Ontario should be paid over to the Municipal or local authority. Their Lordships of the Privy Council upholding the validity of the provision laid down at p. 104:

"In the case of fines, it is only those which are 'unappropriated' which belong to the Crown, i.e., those the disposition of which has not been by competent authority otherwise directed. The criminal law provides many instances in which fines imposed for particular crimes or offences are directed to be paid over to named persons or institutions, for example, to a common informer. The motive may be either the encouragement of the detection and prosecution of crime or the recognition of the special claim of a particular institution or object to the benefit of this source of revenue. In so far as the legislature directs the special application of fines the prerogative right to fines is abrogated. . . . It has always been regarded as within the scope of criminal legislation to make provision for the disposal of penalties inflicted, as innumerable instances show, and the power to do so is, if not essential, at least incidental, to the power to legislate on criminal matters for it may well go to the efficacy of such legislation. If the power or direct the manner of application of penalties were to be dissociated from the power to create such penalties and were to be lodged in another authority, it is easy to see how penal legislation might seriously be affected, if not stultified."

In deciding the case their Lordships proceeded upon

"the general principle that any prerogative right to fines which as a 'royalty' passed from the Province of Canada to the Province of Ontario at the Union was a right only to such fines as might not be otherwise appropriated by the Dominion Parliament in the exercise of its exclusive right to legislate on all matters coming within the criminal law" (p. 105).

This view was expressed even assuming without deciding that the "royalties" assigned to the Provinces included fines imposed for infraction of the Criminal Law. The same remarks apply to the present case, even if fines were included in the Administration of Justice.

If Criminal Law prohibiting certain acts or omissions must necessarily include imposition of penalty and fine for enforcing such prohibitions, then Criminal Procedure must necessarily include the method of exacting such penalties and fines and realising such fines. The Code of Criminal Procedure (V of 1898) with subsequent amendments provides for the method of recovering fines. Under S. 33 imprisonment can be awarded in default of payment of fine. If the fine is not paid, the Court under S. 386 can either (a) issue a warrant for levy of the amount by attachment and sale of the offender's movable property or (b) issue a warrant to the Collector authorising him to realise the amount by execution according to civil process against his movable or immovable property. Rules can be made by the Local Government regarding the first case, while warrant in the second case is deemed to be a civil decree and is executable as such. Under S. 388 the Court has power to allow time for payment of the fine. By S. 545 a Criminal Court is authorised to order the whole or any part of the fine recovered to be applied (a) in defraying expenses properly incurred in the prosecution, (b) in payment of compensation for loss or injury, and (c) for compensating a bona fide purchaser when the property is restored to the person entitled. Thus Criminal Law and Procedure cover the entire field of creating crimes, imposing penalties and realising fines.

Imposition of fine for enforcing any law of the Province had been specifically mentioned, and assigned to the Provinces, but imposition of fine under a Criminal Law of the Centre had not been separately mentioned at all. Such imposition must therefore fall under the general category of Criminal Law and Procedure and be assigned to the Centre. Fines imposed for convictions under such law and directed to be applied in a specified way would, when realised, be receipts accruing in respect of such Criminal Law and Procedure and not in respect of Administration of Justice. Not being receipts accruing in respect of a Provincial subject, they could not be allocated to the Local Government as sources of Provincial revenues. Of course, any surplus, the expenditure of which had not been prescribed by a competent authority, would remain as part of the Provincial revenues.

Present position.—S. 292 of the present Act in express terms lays down that all the existing law in force in British India shall continue in force in British India until altered or repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority.

Under the India and Burma (Transitory Provisions) Order, 1937, para. 4 (a), any tax, fine, penalty, or other sum of whatever nature required by or under any law as in force immediately before the commencement of Part III of the India Act to be credited to any local fund or other fund shall during the two financial years next following continue to be so credited and shall not during those years be deemed to be part of the revenues of the Province. This paragraph would apply to the fines credited to the Cantonment funds as S. 106 (c) was "a law in force". The section being intra vires, the provisions of the paragraph would be applicable, and such fines credited to the Cantonment Fund must be deemed not to form part of the revenues of the United Provinces at all, and must continue to be so credited till the 31st of March, 1939.

In the new Government of India Act, the Seventh Schedule contains both Federal and Provincial Legislative lists as well as a concurrent Legislative list. In the first List, No. 2, only Local Self-Government in cantonment areas (not being cantonment areas of Indian State troops), the regulation of house accommodation in such areas, and within British India, the delimitation of such areas are now assigned to the Federation, and not the whole subject of Cantonments. In List II, No. 1, the Administration of Justice and constitution and organisation of Provincial Courts have been assigned to the Provinces. Jurisdiction and powers of Courts with respect to matters contained in List II, are assigned separately under No. 2. Again, the whole subject of Criminal Law has not been assigned exclusively to the Federation. Offences against laws with respect to all the matters in the first two lists are assigned to the Federation and the Provinces, respectively, and Criminal Law excluding such offences, along with Criminal Procedure has been put in the Concurrent List. Instead of a provision as to the allocation of receipts accruing in respect of particular subjects, we now have S. 136 under which the revenues of the Federation include all revenues and public moneys raised or received by the Federation; and the revenues of the Province include all revenues and public moneys raised or received by a Province. The transitional provisions in S. 313 (3) (b) are on the same lines. Imposition of fine, penalty or imprisonment for enforcing any law is not separately mentioned and is obviously covered by the category "Offences against laws" and by the general category in the concurrent Legislative list "Criminal Law". The clause permitting, 'expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law' which occurred in the old S. 72-D (3) (iii) has been omitted from the corresponding S. 78 in the new Act.

But as S. 106 (c) has in fact been deleted under the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and from 1st April, 1939, all such fines will be credited to the Provincial revenues, it is unnecessary to consider the propriety of the deletion. Of course, under S. 292, the provision would remain in force if not deleted.

I agree that the whole suit should be dismissed with costs.

Varadachariar, J.—I agree that the suit must be dismissed with costs. As the material facts and the relevant provisions of law have been set out in the judgments which have just been delivered, I shall state my reasons very briefly.

In view of our conclusion that the suit fails on the merits, the objections taken on behalf of the Government of India to the maintainability of the suit do not call for more than a brief notice. The maintainability of the suit was objected to on two grounds: (1) that the case did not involve a dispute of the kind contemplated by S. 204 of the Government of India Act, 1935, and (2) that the Government of India was not the party against whom the plaintiff was entitled to claim the reliefs prayed for in the plaint.

To take the second objection first, it must be conceded that there was considerable force in it so far as the reliefs originally prayed for were concerned, because the Government of India did not collect or receive any portion of the fines to which the suit relates. But after the addition of the prayer for a declaration that S. 106 (c) of the Cantonments Act, 1924, was ultra vires the Central Legislature, the learned counsel for the defendant recognised that this objection lost its force. It cannot be denied that the Government of India to whom the administration of cantonments has been entrusted has maintained and does continue to maintain that S. 106 (c) of the Cantonments Act was valid and on this footing has disputed the plaintiff's claim to credit the fines in question to Provincial revenues. This is certainly sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to ask for the declaration now prayed for, as against the Government of India. The absence of the Cantonment Boards from the array of parties is, for the reasons given by My Lord, immaterial so far as the prayer for declaratory relief is concerned.

In connection with the first objection, the learned Advocate-General of India had to draw a distinction between the position as it was prior to 1937 (when Part III of the Government of India Act of 1935 came into force) and the position of affairs subsequent to 1937; and his contention was based on the relative position of the United Provinces administration and the Government of India during the earlier period. I did not understand the learned counsel for the defendant to contend, or at any rate he did not seriously maintain, that even if there had been in existence a "legal right", the mere absence of a remedy or of a tribunal before which the person entitled to the right could have claimed relief would justify the dismissal of a suit instituted before a tribunal which has admittedly been brought into existence by the Act of 1935. The decision in *The 'Alexander'*¹, is authority for the proposition that a person to whom a right had accrued might avail himself of a remedy which was given by a statute enacted subsequent to the date of the accrual of the right. The contention of the learned counsel was that prior to 1937 the Government of the United Provinces had no "legal right" which could be said to have been infringed or which it could not seek to vindicate with the aid of the procedure provided for by S. 204 of the Act of 1935. This contention as to the absence of a "legal right" he sought to support by two arguments: (1) that the original absence of a remedy at law implied the non-existence of a legal right, and (2) that during the antecedent period, the Government of the United Provinces and the Government of India were not two independent legal entities or juristic persons with reference to whom it could be predicated that the one had a right as against the other.

As to the first of the two arguments just referred to, I agree with my learned brother that the non-existence of a remedy at law is not a conclusive test against the existence of a "legal right" and that on the true construction of S. 204 of the Government of India Act, this Court has only to see whether there was a right recognisable by law and not one enforceable in a Court of Law. The second argument seems to me, however, to be more substantial. As explained in Holland's Jurisprudence (Chapter VIII), the conception of a "legal right" involves the existence of at least two persons, that is, the person entitled and the person obliged to do or forbear—to borrow the phraseology of Holland, "the person of inherence" and "the person of incidence". It was rightly maintained by the learned Advocate-General of India that prior to the coming into force of the new Constitution, all rights and liabilities pertaining to the Government of India or to the Governments of the Provinces had to be enforced only by or against the Secretary of State for India and that the Governments of the Provinces were only subordinate administrations bound to carry out the directions of the Central Government and of the Secretary of State. On this basis, it will not be reasonable to treat the Government of the United Provinces as having legal rights against the Government of India. But the learned counsel had to concede that in this respect, the position had become different, under the new Constitution; and in the view that even after the coming into force of the new Constitution, the Government of India has been taking up an attitude which entitles the Government of the United Provinces to claim the declaratory relief now prayed for, this objection, based upon the antecedent state of things, is not fatal to the maintenance of the suit so far as it relates to the declaratory relief.

Dealing with the merits, I would like to state at the outset that though the plaint challenged the validity of all the six sub-clauses comprised in clause (c) of S. 106 of the Cantonments Act of 1924, the learned counsel for the plaintiff recognised in the course of the argument that the contention was untenable at least in respect of sub-cl. (i) and (v). As the benefit of the "Devolution Rules" could be claimed by the plaintiff only in respect of items not otherwise validly disposed of, he had to admit that there could be no basis for the contention of ultra vires in cases in which by legislation in force even prior to the Devolution Rules or by the express provisions of the very enactment which created particular offences, there was a direction to credit to the Cantonment Fund the fines realised in particular classes of cases. Even as regards items enumerated in the other sub-clauses, the contention that the provision was ultra vires fails on two grounds: (i) that the very provision on which the plaintiff's claim is based, namely, the language of item 17 in the list of Provincial subjects appended to the Devolution Rules, reserves "legislation by the Indian Legislature as regards . . . any Courts of criminal jurisdiction", and (ii) that in any view as to the inter-relation of the various items in the two parts of that Schedule (Central and Provincial) the competency of the Indian Legislature to make laws within the limits prescribed by S. 65 of the Government of India Act of 1919 is placed beyond doubt by S. 84 (2) of that Act.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff attempted to read the reservation in the concluding part of item 17 in the list of Provincial subjects as limited to "constitution, powers, maintenance and organization of Courts", the words immediately preceding the reservation, and as not qualifying the whole item opening with the words "administration of justice". Apart from the difficulty created by the punctuation in the way of so reading the words of reservation, this does not seem to me to be a natural reading of the item taken as a whole. It is only when full effect is given to the reservation of the Indian Legislature's power in this item that due effect will be given to the inclusion of "criminal law including criminal procedure", as item 30 in the list of central subjects. Item 41 in the central list is the corollary to the reservations made in various items of the Provincial list in respect of the power of the Central Legislature to deal with matters included in the provincial list.

Item 50 in the provincial list does not seem to me to throw any light on the point now under consideration. It relates only to legislation by the Provincial Legislatures including the power to prescribe penalties, and among them "fines". The insertion of an express power in this behalf cannot be held to suggest or preclude by any kind of implication any inference as to the right to collect or appropriate fines prescribed by existing enactments of the Provincial Legislature or by enactments of the Central Legislature. It has not been disputed by the learned Advocate-General of India that, in the ordinary course, the power to collect fines imposed on conviction would have passed to the Provincial Government under the head of "administration of justice" (item 17). It is the reservation of the power of the Central Legislature in that very article, so far as Courts of criminal jurisdiction are concerned, that enables the Central Legislature to deal with fines which would otherwise have passed under that article. The decision of the Judicial Committee in *Toronto City Corporation v. The King*¹, is authority for the proposition that a power to legislate in respect of criminal law and criminal procedure includes a power to prescribe the destination of the fines realised in the course of the administration of criminal justice.

As I have already observed, a second answer to the plaintiff's contention is furnished by S. 84 (2) of the Government of India Act of 1919 which in terms provided that nothing in that Act or in any rule made thereunder should be construed as diminishing in any respect the powers of the Indian Legislature as laid down in S. 65 of the Act. The apparent conflict between this provision and S. 129-A of the Act can be avoided by reading S. 129-A in the manner suggested by my Lord. As explained in his judgment, and in paragraphs 141 to 143 of the Statutory Commission's Report, the distribution of functions between the Central and Provincial Governments and Legislatures by the Devolution Rules was introduced by the Act of 1919 only as a matter of practical and administrative arrangement, the Central Legislature nevertheless remaining "theoretically entitled to legislate over the whole field." Having regard to the formalities to be gone through before any proposal could become law in this country, there was nothing illogical in Parliament assuming that notwithstanding the theoretical continuance of the full powers of the Central Legislature, it would not attempt to change the Devolution Rules in contravention of S. 129-A of the Act.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff attempted to press into his service a suggestion thrown out by my learned brother in the course of the argument to the effect that the words "nothing in this Act . . . shall be construed as limiting" in S. 84 (2) may not suffice to effectuate a real continuance of the full power of the Indian Legislature, but only prevent the Court from construing the Act in such a way as to invalidate any Act passed by the Central Legislature. On this assumption, it was suggested that on the repeal of the Act of 1919, the restraint thus imposed on the Court must be held to have disappeared and that the Court must now construe the Act according to the natural meaning of the words used. In support of this argument, reliance was placed on the latter portion of S. 84, cl. (2), which in terms precludes the question of ultra vires being raised in any legal proceeding. This does not seem to me to be a proper interpretation of the language of the clause. When an enactment states that nothing therein shall be construed as having a particular effect, it does not seem to me right to interpret that provision merely as prohibiting a Court from placing a particular construction on the enactment. It is the method usually adopted for declaring that even if on account of the imperfections of language the words found in the enactment should seem to suggest a particular meaning, such was not the true intention of the Legislature. The latter part of S. 84 (2) cannot, in my opinion, be used to limit the significance of the earlier words, because the latter part relates not only to Acts of the Central Legislature but also to Acts of the Local Legislature, whereas the earlier portion relates only to Acts of the Indian Legislature. It follows that notwithstanding the Devolution Rules framed under the Government of India Act of 1919, the Indian Legislature was competent to enact S. 106 (c) of the Cantonments Act of 1924.

Suit dismissed.

IN THE FEDERAL COURT OF INDIA.

APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

[On appeal from the High Court at Lahore.]

PRESENT:—SIR MAURICE GWYER, C.J., SIR SHAH SULAIMAN AND SIR S. VARADACHARIAR, JJ.

Dr. Hori Ram Singh *Appellant

The Government of India Act (1935), S. 205—Jurisdiction of Federal Court in Criminal cases—"Judgment, decree or final order"—If includes judgment or order in criminal cases—S. 270 (1)—Consent of the governor for prosecution of public servant for offences under Ss. 409 and 477-A, Indian Penal Code—When necessary.

The appellant, a member of the Punjab Provincial Subordinate Medical Service was charged with having (1) committed criminal breach of trust in respect of some medicines (an offence punishable under S. 409, I.P.C.); and (2) with intent to defraud, omitted to record entries in the stock book of medicines in his possession belonging to the district board (an offence punishable under S. 477-A, I.P.C.). The preliminary objection that sanction under S. 270 (i) of the Government of India Act, 1935, was necessary was allowed by the Sessions Judge who acquitted him. The High Court reversed the decision, set aside the acquittal and ordered a re-trial. On appeal to the Federal Court, Held per Gwyer, C.J.—The words "Judgment, decree or order" in S. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935, ought to receive no narrow interpretation and the Federal Court has jurisdiction in criminal as well as civil cases.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The order of the High Court directing the re-hearing of the criminal appeal is not a judgment or final order within the meaning of S. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and there can be no appeal against it.

Per Varadachariar, J.—It cannot be said that the word "judgment" is not comprehensive enough to include a judgment pronounced in a criminal case.

By the Court.—If the allegations in a suit or criminal proceeding cannot be held to relate to "any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty" by the defendant or accused "as a servant of the Crown" the consent of the authorities would prima facie not be necessary for the institution of the proceedings. Consent of the governor under S. 270 (1) of the Constitution Act is necessary for the charge under S. 477-A, I.P.C., though not for that under S. 409, I.P.C.

Dr. Hori Ram Singh in person.

M. Slem (Advocate-General, Punjab) and S. K. Ahmed instructed by Tarachand Brijmohan Lal for Respondent.

Gwyer, C.J.—I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment prepared by my brother Varadachariar and I find myself so completely in agreement with it that I think it unnecessary to deliver a separate judgment of my own. I will only add, since the question of jurisdiction has been mentioned, that I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction in criminal as well as civil cases. It would indeed be very surprising if it were otherwise, since it has been in the criminal courts that many of the great constitutional questions of the past have been determined; and in my opinion the words "judgment, decree or final order" ought to receive no narrow interpretation.

I concur with my brethren in holding that the appeal should be allowed as regards the charge under S. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code and dismissed as regards the charge under S. 409.

Sulaiman, J.—The facts of this case are fully given in the judgment to be delivered by my brother Varadachariar. Although no objection had been raised by learned counsel to the maintainability of this appeal, I had expressed a doubt regarding it in the course of the hearing. The question being one of jurisdiction, I feel that I should not ignore it.

Criminal Jurisdiction—The first question is whether a criminal appeal at all lies to the Federal Court. The mere fact that the Federal Court has framed rules for such appeals is not by itself conclusive. The doubt is created by the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the somewhat analogous case of *Chung Chuk v. The King*¹. In that case the decision turned on the interpretation of r. 2 of the Order in Council, dated the 23rd January, 1911. Under that rule an appeal lay as of right from any final judgment of the Court, and at the discretion of the Court from any other judgment. Rule 1 defined "judgment" as including "decree, order, sentence or decision". Their Lordships pointed out that although the word "sentence" is appropriate to some procedure in criminal law and is chiefly heard in criminal trials, there is a great difference between a conviction and a sentence and it would be very strange if there were an appeal against sentence and not against conviction; the word "sentence" is a well-known word in common law and it is not applied so as to give the right to appeal in criminal cases. The word "decision" if it stood alone may embrace matters of both civil and criminal laws but the word is not used alone here. One cannot take one word out of this Order and say that it may include criminal law; one must look at the whole of the Order in Council. Now r. 2 (a) certainly referred to civil matters and for purposes of an appeal fixed a value for the subject-matter of the suit, and r. 2 (b) began with the words "subject to the provisions of these rules". Their Lordships thought that the word "other" refers and relates back to the same sort of judgment as those which are referred to in r. 2 (a), that is to say, a judgment where the matter in dispute amounts to or involves some claim to property. Other provisions of the order related to subject-matters and did not appear to include criminal matters. In particular, there was provision for "stay of execution" which was entirely appropriate in a civil case and was not so appropriate in a criminal case; nor was there any provision made for a man who had been sent to prison. Their Lordships accordingly held that the words were not wide enough to include a criminal judgment.

1. (1930) A.C. 244.

Sulaiman, J.

Some of these considerations are applicable to the provisions of the Government of India Act as well. S. 205 (1) refers to an appeal from 'any judgment, decree or final order'. It does not even use the word 'decision' much less 'sentence'. Judgment, decree or final order taken together are words commonly used in the Code of Civil Procedure where judgment is followed by a decree or final order. The words 'final order' are still more appropriate in a civil case where a clear distinction exists between a final order and an interlocutory order. There is no other provision in this part of the Act which would suggest that criminal cases are included. Indeed, S. 206 specifically speaks of 'civil cases'. When providing an appeal to His Majesty in Council from the Federal Court the words 'decision' and 'judgment' are used in S. 208. Section 209 (1) again uses the words 'judgment, decree or order' which is substituted for that of the High Court. Sub-S. (3) refers to 'a stay of execution' and does not refer to granting bail or releasing accused person from custody. The criminal jurisdiction of the Federal Court is mentioned in S. 210 (2) but only as regards punishment of any contempt of Court.

On the other hand, it cannot be doubted that the words 'judgment and final order' in themselves are certainly wide and can include a criminal judgment and a criminal order. Although S. 206 is confined to 'civil cases', S. 205 has no such restriction. Similarly the words 'judgment or order' in S. 209 are also wide enough. Sub-S. (3) can be made applicable to a criminal case before the accused is actually sent to prison. The realization of fine or sending him to prison or the carrying out of a sentence of whipping or death can certainly be postponed if a stay of execution is ordered. Section 210 refers to all courts in British India. These may well include not only civil but also criminal courts.

The main object of the establishment of the Federal Court is to get decided substantial questions of law as to the interpretation of this Act or any Order in Council made thereunder, so as to introduce uniformity throughout India. Section 270 which contains an indemnity for past acts to government servants prevents criminal proceedings from being instituted against a government servant under certain conditions. The question whether the continuance of the criminal proceedings would or would not be contrary to the express provisions of this section can arise only in a criminal case. If a criminal case in which such a question arises is not allowed to be brought up to the Federal Court at all, the Federal Court can never be called upon to interpret this particular section. The Privy Council may not grant special leave to appeal unless it be shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. (*In re Abraham Mallory Dillet*¹) Again in the

Sulaiman, J.

Seventh Schedule containing the Legislative lists there may, as is often common, be penalties prescribed in various legislations for breach of conditions laid down therein, the validity of which may be challenged only in a criminal case. The validity of the criminal legislations themselves may be challenged only in criminal courts. All such matters would be outside the jurisdiction of the Federal Court if no criminal case is allowed to be brought before it. But there is no inherent right of appeal to a higher tribunal, the right being only a creature of statute. The question is not free from doubt, but I am prepared to assume for the purposes of this case that the words 'judgment or final order' in the section apply to criminal cases as well. But the further question still remains whether the order of remand was a 'judgment' or 'final order'.

Judgment.—In the Indian Code of Civil Procedure judgment is quite separate and distinct from decree. Under S. 2 (9) judgment means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order; the judgment is merely the statement of the grounds, but must have been given in a case in which a decree or order exists. If in the expression 'judgment, decree or final order' in a civil case the word 'judgment' were to have the Indian sense, then it will mean the statement of the grounds in a case where either a decree or a final order exists and not in any other case, as appeal from a judgment standing by itself would have no meaning. Appeal from judgment would then indicate the appeal from any finding in a case terminated by a decree or a final order.

In England under S. 225 of the Judicature Act judgment includes decree. In that sense in a civil case the word 'decree' in the expression 'judgment, decree or final order' would be superfluous. Indeed, although wider, the operative part of a judgment is almost like an Indian decree. Decree was a term, which, in Equity practice, corresponded to judgment at Common Law. Decree is the equivalent to the term judgment in the Queens' Bench Division. A judgment is a decision obtained in an action, and any other decision is an order (per Cotton, L.J., in *Ex parte Chinery*¹). The forms of judgment given in the Annual Practice, Appendix D, are exactly like the forms of decrees in the Indian Code, Appendix D. According to the English practice both judgment and decree can be final or interlocutory according as they do or do not finally determine the rights of the parties and conclusively dispose of the whole matter in dispute. Black in his book on Judgments defined a judgment

"as the determination or sentence of the law pronounced by a competent Judge or Court as the result of an action or proceeding instituted in such Court affirming that upon the matters submitted for decision a legal duty or liability does or does not exist. An interlocutory judgment is one which determines some preliminary or subordinate point or plea or settles some step, question or default arising in the progress of the cause, but does not adjudicate the ultimate rights of the parties or finally put the case out of Court."

1. (1884) 12 Q.B.D. 342.

Sulaiman, J.

On the other hand the learned author defined an order

"as the mandate or determination of the Court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in an action, not disposing of the merits but adjudicating a preliminary point by directing some steps in the proceedings".

The word 'judgment' occurs in clause (10) of the Letters Patent of the Allahabad High Court and clause (15) of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts, and 'final judgment' in clauses (30) and (39) respectively. As they had been drafted in England, the first interpretation put upon the word was more or less in the English sense, and not that used in the Civil Code. The earliest leading case of Calcutta was the *Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Co.*¹ Couch, C.J., defined judgment as meaning

"a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may either be preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it leaving other matters to be determined".

In Ebrahim v. Fakhruddin Begam,² Garth, C.J., observed that:

"The word 'judgment' means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety, and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character, which merely decides some isolated point, not affecting the merits or result of the entire suit."

Although purporting to follow these definitions, the Calcutta High Court gradually widened the scope of its meaning. In the latest Full Bench case of Brajagopal Ray Burman v. Amarchandra Bhattacharji,³ Rankin, C.J., observed:

"On the whole, and not without some doubt, I think that the mere circumstance that an order puts in peril the finality of a decision given in the respondent's favour, does not of itself make the order a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of Letters Patent."

The learned Chief Justice at page 140 doubted whether the correct technical use of the word 'judgment' in England is a safe guide. The High Courts of Bombay and Patna have purported to accept the definition of Couch, C.J., generally. But in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras orders in Civil Revision were regarded as judgments until the Letters Patent were amended in 1919, which made an appeal impossible.

The latest Full Bench case of the Madras High Court is Tuljaram Rao v. Alagappa Chettiar,⁴ where White, C.J., held at page 7 that:

"If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the language of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or its effect, if it is complied, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause."

Sulaiman, J.

The Lahore High Court appears to have adopted the view of White, C.J.

In the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, Muhammad Naim-ul-lah Khan v. Ihsan-ul-lah Khan,¹ Edge, C.J., at p. 228 observed :

"In my opinion the judgment referred to in S. 10 of the Letters Patent is the express decision of a Judge of the Court which leads up to, and originates, an order or decree."

On p. 232 the opinion was expressed that orders in Civil Revision were not judgments and therefore not appealable under the Letters. The Full Bench case has naturally been followed in subsequent cases.

The observation of Lord Sumner in Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi,² that what clause 15 of the Calcutta Letters Patent expressly provides is an appeal to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction from a decree of the High Court in its original ordinary jurisdiction, was not understood in India as containing a definition of the word "judgment". But their Lordships of the Privy Council had occasion to define the word 'judgment' in two cases coming from the Bombay High Court. In Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. v. The Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay,³ Lord Atkinson, relied on Onslow v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue,⁴ and pointed out that a final judgment was different from final order as used in the 39th clause of the Bombay Letters Patent. In Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. The Dakore Temple Committee,⁵ Sir John Edge laid down that :

"The term judgment in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense."

This observation was attempted to be distinguished, by drawing a distinction, perhaps without a difference, in Ishwari Prasad v. Sheotahal Rai,⁶ in view of a practice that had grown up to treat certain orders as being judgments. The same view was expressed in the Full Bench case of Sital Din v. Anant Ram,⁷ where it was also held that judgment includes a final order. Both these cases were decided before knowing the exposition of the meaning of 'final order' by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. Cassim & Sons,⁸ to be mentioned hereafter. It may also be noted that in Bhogi Lal's case,⁹ their Lordships had not said that the term 'final judgment' in clause 39 of the Bombay Letters Patent means final decree in civil cases, but that the term 'judgment' in the Letters Patent of Bombay means in civil cases a decree, and not a judgment in the ordinary sense. Sulaiman, J.

later case of Shahzadi Begam v. Alakh Nath,¹ a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court of which I was a member at the time, dissented from the opinion of White, C.J., expressed in the Madras Full Bench, and it was pointed out that "the test laid down by the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court is put in too wide a language and cannot be accepted as laying down the correct criterion", and it was further observed that their Lordships' observation in Bhogi Lal's case,² made it clear that the word 'judgment' used in the Letters Patent is not to be taken in its widest scope. The Allahabad Full Bench at p. 687 declined to accept the contention that

"Every order passed by a single Judge which puts an end to or terminates the proceeding or which has by implication the necessary effect resulting in 'such a termination is a judgment'".

Shortly after this Allahabad Full Bench case came the Full Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court in Dayabhai Jiwandas v. Murugappa Chettiar,³ where at p. 269 the view of White, C.J., was dissented from and Page, C.J., observed that "Judgment means and is a decree in a suit by which the rights of the parties at issue in the suit are determined. A final judgment is a decree in a suit by which all the matters at issue therein are decided. A preliminary or interlocutory judgment is a decree in a suit by which the right to the relief claimed in the suit is decided, but under which further proceedings are necessary before the suit, in its entirety, can be determined."

In view of the observation, made by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the word "judgment" cannot now be taken in its widest possible sense so as to include every order which terminates a proceeding pending in a High Court so far as that Court is concerned.

In criminal cases the position is still stronger. In England judgment is equivalent to a judgment of conviction or acquittal and is distinct from other orders in a criminal case. This will appear from an examination of paragraphs 260-264 in Vol. 9 of Halsbury's Law of England (Hailsham Edition).

In the Indian Code of Criminal Procedure judgment is not defined, but various sections suggest what it means. Ss. 404 and 415-A no doubt refer to appeal from judgment or appealable judgment respectively. But under Ss. 263 and 264, the judgment in a summary trial has to contain the finding and sentence or other final order. Under S. 305, in a jury trial the order of conviction or acquittal in accordance with the opinion of the Jury is the judgment. Under S. 309, in a case tried with Assessors the final order, which is followed by the sentence, is the judgment. Section 367 suggests what the contents of a judgment should be, and what it should comprise of when it be a judgment of conviction and what if it be a judgment of acquittal. Section 370 also requires a record of the offence complained of or proved, the plea of the accused and the final order. As final orders like those under Ss. 144 and 145 could not be judgments, a special provision has been made in S. 367 (6) that certain orders should be deemed to be a judgment. The Code provides appeals from certain appealable orders, and S. 423 provides appeals from conviction and sentence. Thus "judgment" in the Code means a judgment of conviction or acquittal.

Even in Madras, in Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa Goundan,¹ White, C.J., at page 131 held that an order of dismissal of a complaint under S. 203 is not a judgment within the meaning of S. 360 and this was the opinion of the majority. This opinion was later followed by another Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Emperor v. Maheshwara Kondaya,² where it was held that an order of discharge is not a judgment, as "a judgment is intended to indicate the final order in a trial terminating in either the conviction or acquittal of the accused".

Thus neither under the English nor the Indian Law the term "judgment" in a criminal case includes an interlocutory order. In S. 205 (1) of the Act, the word "judgment" does not occur by itself but is used in conjunction with final order. When both the terms judgment and final order are used together in one expression, they undoubtedly connote different and distinct meanings, and judgment cannot be interpreted as embracing even interlocutory orders, which would make the category "final order" wholly superfluous and unnecessary. It is true that in the Federal Court Rules unfortunately the definitions of judgment, decree and order have been borrowed from the Code of Civil Procedure; but that of course is only for the purposes of the rules and cannot be taken in any way to control the proper meanings to be given to those terms in the Act itself, even if an inconsistency were inevitable.

I am of the opinion that the order of the High Court directing a rehearing of the criminal appeal by the Sessions Court is not a judgment within the meaning of S. 205 of the Government of India Act.

Final Order.—The next question is whether it is a final order. The order of the High Court is final in the restricted sense that it disposes of the matter pending before the High Court finally, the case going back to the Sessions Judge. But it is by no means final so far as the case itself is concerned, because the appeal is still before the Sessions Judge and will have to be disposed of on its merits and then only a final order passed. Thus, ordinarily speaking, an order sending the case back to the Appellate Court cannot be considered to be a final order within the meaning of S. 205 (1) of the Act. The words "final order" do not occur in the present Criminal Procedure Code. As the same words would apply both to civil and criminal cases, it would not be inappropriate to consider the meaning of "final order" as used in the Civil Procedure Code. These words occur in S. 109, C.P.C., where an appeal lies in certain cases from a decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court. Their Lordships have had occasion to consider what is meant by the words "final order". The words "final order" are ordinarily used in contrast with interlocutory order. But in *Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner*¹ and Muzhar Hossein v. Radha Bibi,² both of which were under S. 595 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 their Lordships laid down that an order even though not final in the ordinary sense would be final if it decides the cardinal point in the case notwithstanding that there might be subsidiary enquiries to make. In the present case there is no doubt that a cardinal point has been decided by the High Court adversely. The accused's objection was as to the legality of the proceedings which went to the root of the matter and which if decided in his favour would result in the dismissal of the complaint outright. If the proceedings were really in contravention of the provisions of S. 270 and were void ab initio, the merits of the case should not be gone into at all.

But their Lordships have in two more recent cases expressed a somewhat different view. In Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand,³ their Lordships, following two English decisions (*Salaman v. Warner*⁴ and *Bosson v. Altrincham Urban District Council*⁵) laid down that an order refusing stay of suit under the Arbitration Act was not a final order, as it did not finally dispose of the rights of the parties but left them to be determined by the Courts in the ordinary way.

The definition of final order as given in *Salaman's case*⁴ was as follows. Lord Esher, M.R., observed:

"If their decision, whichever way it is given, will, if it stands, finally dispose of the matter in dispute, I think that for the purposes, of these rules it is final. On the other hand, if their decision, if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but, if given in the other, will allow the action to go on, then I think it is not final, but interlocutory."

Fry, L.J., remarked:

"I conceive that an order is 'final' only where it is made upon an application or other proceeding which must, whether such application or other proceeding fail or succeed, determine the action. Conversely I think that an order is 'interlocutory' where it cannot be affirmed that in either event the action will be determined."

Lopes, L.J., said:

"I think that a judgment or order would be final within the meaning of the rules, when, whichever way it went, it would finally determine the rights of the parties."

But in Bosson's case,⁵ Lord Alverstone, C.J., held:

"It seems to me that the real test for determining this question ought to be this: Does the judgment or order, as made, finally dispose of the rights of the parties? If it does, then I think it ought to be treated as a final order; but if it does not, it is then, in my opinion, an interlocutory order."

Sulaiman, J.

In Abdul Rahman v. Cassim & Sons,¹ Sir George Lowndes distinguished the two earlier cases of their Lordships on the ground that they had been decided under S. 595 of the old Code where the wording was materially different and also because in both special leave had been given, and then laid down that "the test of finality is whether the order finally disposes of the rights of the parties". In Ramchand Manjimal's case,² the appellate Court in India had been of the opinion that the order had gone to the root of the suit, namely, the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it and it was for this reason that the order was thought to be final. But their Lordships held that:

"this was not sufficient. The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If after the order, the suit is still a live suit, in which the rights have still to be determined, no appeal lies".

In that case the appeal had been allowed by the High Court, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the suit remanded to the original court for trial on the merits. It was also pointed out before their Lordships that there was undoubtedly some divergence in the views expressed in the English cases upon which the judgment in Ramchand Manjimal's case,² founds, but their Lordships considered that the rule deduced for guidance under the Code of Civil Procedure was clear and unambiguous and should be decisive in all such cases. If the effect of the order from which it is sought to appeal is not to dispose finally of the rights of the parties, then, even though it decides an important and even a vital issue in the case, it leaves the suit alive and provides for its trial in the ordinary way.

As the "final order" may be either in a civil or criminal case the definition given by their Lordships in the civil case must by analogy be applied to a criminal case as well. In the present case, the appeal has not yet been tried on the merits. It is still to be finally decided by the Sessions Judge whether the accused was or was not guilty of the offences with which he had been charged. The question of want of consent, although vital for the purposes of the proceedings as it went to the root of the matter so far as their continuance is concerned, is after all a preliminary question as to whether the proceedings had been properly instituted or not. The criminal case is still a live case, and the innocence or the guilt of the accused has not been finally determined. The question raised was one of jurisdiction of the Magistrate to entertain the complaint and was therefore analogous to the question of jurisdiction raised in Abdur Rahman's case.¹ Although the point is certainly a cardinal one, the order of remand cannot be regarded as a final order within the meaning of S. 205 (1). The accused may ultimately not be found guilty at all. If the accused is hereafter found guilty by the Sessions Court and convicted and sentenced, he can come to the High Court in Revision; and in case the High Court adheres to its view and the Revision is dismissed, the order would become final; and from that order he may come to the Federal Court under S. 205 (1). But until that stage arrives he is not in my opinion entitled to appeal from the High Court's order.

Section 270 (1).—Holding the view that no appeal at all lies at this stage, I would have feared that it would be somewhat awkward for the Sessions Judge if I were to express any definite opinion that consent of the Governor was necessary for either of the two charges in this particular case. If no appeal lies, the order of the High Court must stand and the Sessions Judge is bound to re-hear the whole appeal, and yet he may feel embarrassed by any contrary opinion expressed by the Federal Court. But the opinion of the majority is that the appeal should not fail on any such preliminary grounds. Further, a statement of the true legal position may help in applying the legal principles to the facts of the case. I therefore proceed to deal with that question also.

It must be conceded that the protection given to public servants under S. 270, which applies both to civil and criminal proceedings, is intended to be real and not merely illusory. The intention seems to be to prevent them from being unnecessarily harassed, and the criminal prosecution, except with the previous consent of the Governor-General or the Governor, is prohibited and proceedings started without such consent declared illegal. Sub-Section (1) stands as follows:—

"No proceedings civil or criminal shall be instituted against any person in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown in India or Burma before the relevant date, except with the consent, in the case of a person who was employed in connection with the affairs of the Government of India or the affairs of Burma, of the Governor-General in his discretion, and in the case of a person employed in connection with the affairs of a Province of the Governor of that Province in his discretion."

The main question for consideration is the interpretation of the words "any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant". The Act being a recent one, no case turning on the interpretation of S. 270 (1), other than the one under appeal, has been brought to our notice. Besides the cases under S. 80, C.P.C., there are a very large number of cases under S. 197, Cr.P.C., showing a considerable conflict of opinion among the Indian High Courts as to the applicability of that section. The words of that section are not exactly identical with those in the section before us. There we have the words "while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty", which have caused a divergence of opinion on the true significance of the words "while acting or purporting to act". It is therefore best to focus attention on the words actually used in S. 270 (1).

Sessions Judge's Opinion.—The learned Sessions Judge in an elaborate judgment discussed the legal aspects of the case and also considered certain apparently conflicting rulings, and then came to the conclusion that the previous sanction of the Governor was necessary for both the charges. For want of such sanction he held all the proceedings to be void and "acquitted" the appellant. The acquittal of the accused was obviously wrong, as that would have prevented further proceeding even after the necessary consent of the Governor had been obtained. If the prosecution is defective for want of proper consent, the proceedings would be void and the complaint would be dismissed. The Sessions Judge took the view that every criminal breach of trust would require a previous consent. This was putting it rather too widely. He should have really considered whether on the facts as alleged by the prosecution or at any rate as found by the Magistrate, consent was necessary. If not, he would have to go into the merits and ascertain the facts himself, and then again decide whether on the facts so appearing consent was or was not necessary.

High Court's View.—The High Court in Revision took a contrary view, set aside the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal and "returned the record to him for trial on the merits", by which presumably the High Court meant re-hearing of the appeal on the merits. The Bench appear to have taken the view that consent would never be necessary in case of criminal breach of trust, nor even in the case of falsification of accounts. They apparently thought it unnecessary to consider whether on the facts as found by the Magistrate, which were for re-consideration before the Sessions Judge, the act had purported to be done in execution of duty so as to make the previous consent necessary. In fact they have said that:

"it does not appear to them even arguable that theft, or embezzlement or breach of trust committed by a servant of the Crown can be said to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown".

But S. 477-A in express terms covers the case of an officer, who wilfully falsifies accounts which may be his duty to maintain. They have apparently put theft, embezzlement, or breach of trust on exactly the same footing as falsification of accounts, and have not considered the charge of falsifying the accounts separately from that of criminal breach of trust. This is ignoring the significance of the words "purporting to be done" which are no less important. They have thought that:

"an act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown cannot by any stretching of the English language be made to apply to an act which is clearly a dereliction of his duty as such".

But if an act has purported to be done in execution of duty, it may be done so, only ostensibly and not really, and if done dishonestly may still be a dereliction of duty.

The High Court Bench have taken the view that:

"the section is clearly meant to apply to an act by a public servant which could be done in good faith, but which possibly might also be done in bad faith..... The section cannot be meant to apply to cases where there could be no doubt that the act alleged must be in bad faith."

So far as sub-S. (1) is concerned, the question of good faith or bad faith cannot strictly arise, for the words used are not only "any act done in the execution of his duty" but also "any act purporting to be done in the execution of his duty". When an act is not done in the execution of his duty, but purports to have been done in the execution of his duty, it may very well be done in bad faith; and even an act which cannot at all be done in good faith may purport to be done in execution of duty if another is made to believe wrongly that it was being done in execution of duty. It is therefore not possible to restrict the applicability of the section to only such cases where an act could possibly have been done both in good and bad faith. Of course, the question of good or bad faith cannot be gone into at the early stage at which objection may be taken. Making false entries in a register may well be an act purported to be done in execution of duty, which would be an offence, although it can never be done in good faith. It is sub-S. (2) only which introduces the element of good faith, which relieves the Court of its obligation to dismiss the proceedings. But that sub-section relates to cases even previously instituted and in which there may not be a defect of want of consent, and is therefore quite distinct and separate, and not merely ancillary to sub-S. (1), as the learned Sessions Judge supposed. Having regard to the ordinary and natural meaning of the words "purporting to be done", it is difficult to say that it necessarily implies "purporting to be done in good faith", for a person who ostensibly acts in execution of his duty still purports so to act, although he may have a dishonest intention.

Extent of the Protection.—Obviously the section does not mean that the very act which is the gravamen of the charge and constitutes the offence should be the official duty of the servant of the Crown. Such an interpretation would involve a contradiction in terms, because an offence can never be an official duty. The words as used in the section are not "in respect of any official duty" but "in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty". The two expressions are obviously not identical. The offence should have been committed when an act is done in the execution of duty or when an act purports to be done in the execution of the duty. The reference is obviously to an offence committed in the course of an action, which is taken or purports to be taken in compliance with an official duty, and is in fact connected with it. The test appears to be not that the offence is capable of being committed only by a public servant and not by any one else, but that it is committed by a public servant in an act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty. The section cannot be confined to only such acts as are done by a public servant directly in pursuance of his public office, though in excess of the duty or under a mistaken belief as to the existence of such duty. Nor is it necessary to go to the length of saying that the act constituting the offence should be so inseparably connected with the official duty as to form part and parcel of the same transaction. If the act complained of is an offence, it must necessarily be not an execution of duty, but a dereliction of it. What is necessary is that the offence must be in respect of an act done or purported to be done in execution of duty that is in the discharge of an official duty. It must purport to be done in the official capacity with which he pretends to be clothed at the time, that is to say under the cloak of an ostensibly official act, though, of course, the offence would really amount to a breach of duty. An act cannot purport to be done in execution of duty unless the offender professes to be acting in pursuance of his official duty and means to convey to the mind of another the impression that he is so acting.

The section is not intended to apply to acts done purely in a private capacity by a public servant. It must have been ostensibly done by him in his official capacity in execution of his duty, which would not necessarily be the case merely because it was done at a time when he held such office, nor even necessarily because he was engaged in his official business at the time. For instance, if a public servant accepts as a reward a bribe in his office while actually engaged in some official work, he is not accepting it even in his official capacity, much less in the execution of any official duty, although it is quite certain that he could never have been able to take the bribe unless he were the official in charge of some official work. He does not even pretend to the person who offers the bribe that he is acting in the discharge of his official duty, but merely uses his official position to obtain the illegal gratification.

Procedure.—S. 270 (1) directs that no proceedings, civil or criminal, shall be instituted, etc. The prohibition is against the institution itself and its applicability must therefore be judged in the first instance at the earliest stage of institution. If the prosecution case as disclosed by the complaint or the Police report, as the case may be, shows that the act purported to be done in execution of duty, the proceedings must be dropped. But if the prosecution case does not involve this, the case cannot be thrown out on the preliminary ground of want of consent of the Governor in his discretion. The mere fact that the accused proposes to raise a defence of the act having purported to be done in execution of duty would not in itself be sufficient, otherwise even a frivolous defence would prevent prosecution. The prosecution must be given a chance to prove its case. Of course, if the case as put forward fails, or the defence establishes that the act purported to be done in execution of duty, the proceedings will have to be dropped and the complaint dismissed on that ground.

Breach of Trust.—Now, dishonest misappropriation or conversion of movable property to one's use is an offence under S. 403, I.P.C.; but if the offender had been entrusted with property or with any dominion over it, the dishonest misappropriation or conversion to his use or dishonest user or disposal becomes a criminal breach of trust under S. 405; and if he had been entrusted with property or dominion over it in his capacity of a public servant, it becomes a criminal breach of trust by a public servant under S. 409.

The question whether a criminal breach of trust can be committed while purporting to act in execution of duty is not capable of being answered hypothetically in the abstract, without any reference to the actual facts of the case. An attempt to answer the question in a generalised way has been responsible for loose language used in some of the cases cited before us. It is possible to conceive of a case where a criminal breach of trust may be committed in conspiracy with other servants and payment of money is dishonestly ordered ostensibly in execution of duty. The question whether the act purported to have been done in execution of duty or not must depend on the special circumstances of each case.

The first charge was worded generally that the accused had committed a criminal breach of trust in respect of certain specified medicines, but no objection appears to have been taken to it, nor could this defect be urged seriously in view of the provisions of S. 221 (5), Cr.P.C. If the present case had merely been that medicines were openly removed from the hospital dispensary to the house on some pretence, it might have remained ambiguous whether the act purported to be done in execution of duty or not. But apparently the case as put forward in the compounder Din Mohammad's application submitted with the Police Report, and also as found proved by the Magistrate at the trial was one of secret misappropriation or conversion to one's use. When a public servant simply embezzles some property entrusted to him and thereby commits a criminal breach of trust under S. 409, he is not doing an act, nor even purports to do an act in execution of his duty; when he commits the act, he does not pretend to act in the official discharge of his duty. A case like that would not ordinarily fall within the scope of S. 270 (1).

Falsifying Accounts.—But an offence under S. 477-A, I.P.C., is committed if an officer or servant or anyone employed or acting in such capacity, wilfully and with intent to defraud falsifies any book or account. Thus where it is his duty to maintain a record or a register, and in maintaining that register he makes some entries which are false to his knowledge, he is certainly purporting to act, though not actually acting, in the execution of his duty, because he is making certain entries in the register, knowing them to be false. He is ostensibly professing to be discharging his official duty in maintaining the register, which he is bound to maintain correctly. In making the entries he pretends or purports to act in the execution of his duty; but in point of fact he is acting in direct dereliction of it.

It has been argued by the Advocate-General of the Punjab that S. 270 (1) refers only to the commission of an act and not to omission. This may not be accurate but even quite apart from this, the falsification of accounts is by no means a mere omission. It is true that some entries are alleged to have been omitted in order to conceal the criminal breach of trust. If an omission were due merely to an honest mistake, it would certainly remain a mere omission; but where the omission of certain items is intentional so that a false balance may be shown and the real surplus may not be disclosed, it is a positive act of falsifying accounts. There is a falsification of the total just as much as that of particular entries that have been omitted.

In my opinion the consent of the Governor was necessary for the charge under S. 477-A, though not for that under S. 409, I.P.C.

Joint Trial—The last question is whether the whole proceedings should or should not be quashed on account of the joint trial. Under S. 235 (1), Cr.P.C., two offences for one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction can be tried at one trial. The offences of criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts were so connected. The difficulty is caused by the circumstance that for one of these offences previous consent of the Governor was a condition precedent to the exercise of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. There is no specific provision in the Code to cover the present case exactly. In a case of jury trial, I would have had no hesitation in holding that the whole trial was illegal inasmuch as the accused would have been gravely prejudiced by the production of evidence relating to the offence under S. 477-A for which the Court had no jurisdiction at all to try the accused. But this case was tried by a Magistrate before whom no objection regarding the want of consent appears to have been taken. Under S. 537, Cr.P.C., the appellate Court before altering the order relating to the offence under S. 409 has to be satisfied whether the defect has in fact occasioned a failure of justice, and in determining this, the Court must have regard to the fact whether the objection could and should have been raised at an earlier stage in the proceedings. As however we are not to go into the merits of the case, it is not practicable to decide now whether there would or would not be a failure of justice if the appeal is re-heard as regards the charge under S. 409, I.P.C. The Sessions Judge when re-hearing the appeal would be in the best position to decide this for himself.

Sulaiman, J.

I would accordingly, if an appeal were to lie, remit the case to the High Court with the declaration that the following order be substituted for the High Court's order:—The order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge be set aside, all the proceedings so far as they relate to the charge under S. 477-A, be quashed and the case with regard to that offence dismissed on the sole ground of want of consent of the Governor, without acquitting the accused of the charge, leaving the door open for a fresh prosecution under S. 477-A, if consent of the Governor in his discretion is obtained hereafter; and the appeal be sent back to the Sessions Judge for re-hearing as regards the charge under S. 409, I.P.C., leaving it open to the Sessions Judge to order a re-trial if he comes to the conclusion that the joinder of the two charges has occasioned a failure of justice.

Varadachariar, J.—This is an appeal against a judgment pronounced by the High Court at Lahore, in the exercise of its criminal appellate jurisdiction; that Court has certified that the case involves a question as to the interpretation of S. 270 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, namely, whether the consent of the Governor of the Province was necessary for the prosecution of the appellant for alleged offences under Ss. 409 and 477-A of the Indian Penal Code.

A question was mooted, in the course of the argument before us, whether S. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935, contemplated appeals in criminal cases. The juxtaposition of the words "judgment, decree or final order" is, no doubt, suggestive of civil litigation; but it cannot be said that the word "judgment" is not comprehensive enough to include a judgment pronounced in a criminal case; see S. 366 of the Criminal Procedure

Varadachariar, J.

Code and other sections in that chapter, and also clause (41) of the Letters Patent of the Chartered High Courts. Unlike S. 206 of the Constitution Act, S. 205 is not in terms limited to civil cases; and it is worth noting that S. 210 (2) places orders of this Court on the same footing as orders made "by the highest Court exercising civil or criminal jurisdiction, as the case may be". As no objection has been taken on behalf of the Crown to the maintainability of the appeal, I proceed to deal with the case on the assumption that the appeal was competent.

In view of the course of the argument before us, it is necessary to refer in some detail to the nature of the charges against the appellant. He had for many years been a Sub-Assistant Surgeon in the Punjab Provincial Subordinate Medical Service. In March, 1937, when he was in charge of the rural hospital at Mithankot, he was suspected of dishonestly removing to his own quarters certain medicines belonging to the Hospital. He was at that time under orders of transfer to a new station and was arranging to hand over charge shortly to his successor. Acting on a report sent by the compounder of the hospital to the Secretary of the District Board, a Deputy Superintendent of Police caused a search of his house to be made; and he examined the contents of some of the boxes belonging to the Appellant which seemed to have been packed ready to be taken by the Appellant when leaving the station. As the result of this search and of some further investigation, proceedings were instituted in June, 1937, before the First Class Magistrate at Dera Ghazi Khan and charges were framed against the Appellant under Ss. 409 and 477-A. The first charge was:

"that being a public servant and in such capacity entrusted with medicines of the hospital which were the property of the District Board, Dera Ghazi Khan, the accused committed criminal breach of trust in respect of certain medicines (specified in the charge) and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 409 of I.P.C."

The second charge was:

"that being a public servant, he, wilfully, and with intent to defraud, omitted to record entries in the stock book of medicines for 1937 relating to certain medicines belonging to the District Board and in his possession and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 477, I.P.C."

The Appellant denied the charges. He denied that the disputed medicines were recovered from his boxes as alleged by the prosecution. He alleged that they were in his room, as he was taking steps to complete the preparation of his stock book. As regards the omission to enter certain medicines in the stock book, he pleaded that it was not dishonest but was merely due to oversight. It does not appear from the judgment of the Magistrate whether the objection based on the absence of the Governor's consent to the prosecution was taken before him. On the evidence, the Magistrate found the Appellant guilty of both the offences charged and sentenced him to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge of Dera Ghazi Khan dealt with the objection under S. 270 (1) as a preliminary point; and, as he came to the conclusion that the proceedings could not be instituted except with the Governor's consent, he "acquitted" the Appellant, holding that the proceedings were without jurisdiction. In this view, he did not deem it necessary to deal with the evidence against the accused. I may observe in passing that the proper order to be passed on this footing was not one of acquittal; but, so far as this appeal is concerned, nothing turns on this matter of form.

The Crown appealed to the High Court at Lahore against the order of acquittal; and a Division Bench (Sir Douglas Young, C.J. and Blacker, J.) set aside the order and returned the records to the Sessions Court, for disposal of the appeal on the merits. The learned Judges do not seem to have felt any hesitation at that time in holding that S. 270 (1) could not apply to the case. It does not appear whether, at the hearing of the appeal, their attention was drawn to the conflicting rulings under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code. When the Appellant applied for a certificate under S. 205 of the Constitution Act, the attention of the High Court seems to have been drawn to some of these decisions and the learned Judges granted the certificate, with the observation that it might be possible to found on them an argument that the consent of the Governor was necessary in a case like the present.

The Appellant, who appeared in person before us, invited us to deal with the whole case on the evidence; but, in the absence of special reasons, we saw no justification for doing so. He next contended that as his own plea was to the effect that he did not act dishonestly and, whatever he did, he did only in the performance of his duty, the case must be held to fall within the terms of S. 270 (1). I cannot accede to this argument. As the consent of the Governor, provided for in that section, is a condition precedent, to the institution of proceedings against a public servant, the necessity for such consent cannot be made to depend upon the case which the accused or the defendant may put forward after the proceedings had been instituted, but must be determined with reference to the nature of the allegations made against the public servant, in the suit or criminal proceeding. If these allegations cannot be held to relate to "any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty" by the defendant or the accused "as a servant of the Crown", the consent of the authorities would, prima facie, not be necessary for the institution of the proceedings. If, in the course of the trial, all that could be proved should be found to relate only to what he did or purported to do "in the execution of his duty", the proceedings would fail on the merits, unless the Court was satisfied that the acts complained of were not done in good faith [S. 270 (2)]. Even otherwise, the proceedings would fail for want of the consent of the Governor, if the evidence established only official acts. As the Appellate Court has not pronounced any opinion on the evidence, we are not in a position to say whether on the facts proved, the proceedings could be held to fail on either of the above grounds. At this stage, we have only to see whether the case alleged against the Appellant or sought to be proved against him relates to acts done or purporting to be done by him "in the execution of his duty".

Varadachariar, J.

The Appellant pressed us to hold that, even judged by the above test, the charges framed against him, including the one under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code, did not clearly exclude the possibility of the acts complained of being acts done in his official capacity. He also urged that the charge under S. 409 was vague and, without further investigation, it could not be determined whether it related to an official act or not. I find myself unable to accept these arguments, so far as the charge under S. 409 is concerned. Read in the light of S. 221 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the charge must be taken to allege that the Appellant dishonestly misappropriated or converted to his own use property which had been entrusted to him in his official character. It is not clear from the record whether the proceedings in this case were initiated by a complaint or by a police report; but taking into account all the materials which appear to have been collected before the proceedings were instituted, I am of the opinion that so far as the charge under S. 409 was concerned, the acts in respect of which he was intended to be prosecuted could not be regarded as acts done or purported to be done in execution of his duty.

The learned Judges have dealt with both the charges, i.e., the one under S. 409 and the other under S. 477-A, as on the same footing; it, however, seems to me necessary to draw a distinction, for the present purpose, between the charge under S. 409 and the charge under S. 477-A. Though a reference to the capacity of the accused as a public servant is involved both in the charge under S. 409 and in the charge under S. 477-A, there is an important difference between the two cases, when one comes to deal with the act complained of. In the first, the official capacity is material only in connection with the "entrustment" and does not necessarily enter into the later act of misappropriation or conversion, which is the act complained of. In the charge under S. 477-A, the official capacity is involved in the very act complained of as amounting to a crime, because the gravamen of the charge is that the accused acted fraudulently in the discharge of his official duty. The consent of the Governor would thus be prima facie necessary for the institution of proceedings against the Appellant under S. 477-A. The learned Advocate-General of the Punjab sought to found an argument on the fact that the Appellant is in the present case charged not with an act, in the sense of making a fraudulent entry in the course of his official duty, but with an omission to make an entry which it was his duty to make. I do not think that anything can be made to turn on this distinction. Apart from the principle that, for the purposes of the criminal law, acts and illegal omissions stand very much on the same footing, the conduct of the Appellant in maintaining the accounts, which it was his duty to keep, has to be dealt with as a whole and the particular omission cannot of itself be treated as an offence except as a step in the Appellant's conduct in relation to the maintenance of the register which it was his duty correctly to maintain.

It only remains to deal with the arguments urged on the one side or the other as to the test to be applied in determining whether or not the act complained of is one "purporting to be done in execution of his duty" as a public servant. I would observe at the outset that the question is substantially one of fact, to be determined with reference to the act complained of and the attendant circumstances; it seems neither useful nor desirable to paraphrase the language of the section in attempting to lay down hard and fast tests. For instance, it was said in *Abdul Hadi Mussalman v. Mishra*¹ that:

"we are not concerned with the act itself so much as the capacity in which the act is performed".

An observation of that kind does not seem to be very helpful and may even prove misleading. Again, expressions like "cloak of office" and "professed exercise of office" may correctly fit in with certain cases, but they may not always be appropriate to describe or delimit the scope of the section. The question does not seem to have arisen for decision under S. 270 (1) of the Constitution Act; we were accordingly referred by way of analogy to a number of rulings under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code and one or two decisions under S. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The judgment in Rai Mahal Panday v. Maung Po Sein,² dealt with a provision corresponding to sub-S. (2) of S. 270 and throws no light on the present question.

The reported decisions on the application of S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not by any means uniform. In most of them, the actual conclusion will probably be found to be unexceptionable, in view of the facts of each case; but, in some, the test has been laid down in terms which it is difficult to accept as exhaustive or correct. Much the same may be said even of decisions pronounced in England, on the language of similar statutory provisions (see observations in *Booth v. Clive*³). It does not seem to me necessary to review in detail the decisions given under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code which may roughly be classified as falling into three groups, so far as they attempted to state something in the nature of a test. In one group of cases, it is insisted that there must be something in the nature of the act complained of that attaches it to the official character of the person doing it cf. In re Sheik Abdul Khadir Saheb,⁴ *Kamisetty Raja Rao v. Ramaswamy*⁵, *Amanat Ali v. Emperor*⁶, *Emperor v. Maung Bo Maung*⁷ and *Gurushidayya Shanivirayya Kulkarni v. Emperor*⁸). In another group, more stress has been laid on the circumstance that the official character or status of the accused gave him the opportunity to commit the offence. It seems to me that the first is the correct view. In the third group of cases, stress is laid almost exclusively on the fact that it was at a time when the accused was engaged in his official duty that the alleged offence was said to have been committed (see Gangaraju v. Venki,¹ quoting from Mitra's Commentary on the Criminal Procedure Code). The use of the expression "while acting", etc., in S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code (particularly its introduction by way of amendment in 1923) has been held to lend some support to this view. While I do not wish to ignore the significance of the time factor, it does not seem to me right to make it the test. To take an illustration suggested in the course of the argument, if a medical officer, while on duty in the hospital, is alleged to have committed rape on one of the patients or to have stolen a jewel from the patient's person, it is difficult to believe that it was the intention of the Legislature that he could not be prosecuted for such offences except with the previous sanction of the Local Government.

Two reported decisions, one in Ganapathy Goundan v. King-Emperor,² under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the other in Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal,³ under S. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, may be referred to as instructive, since in each of them two acts were complained of and, notwithstanding the apparent connection between the acts in the sense of relation in times or opportunity, the Court held that one of the acts was an official act but not the other. In the Madras case, a Village Magistrate held in confinement certain persons who were suspected to have committed a murder, and also tortured them in order to extort a confession from them. He was charged for committing offences under Ss. 330, 343 and 348 of the Indian Penal Code. Wallace, J., held that sanction to prosecute him under Ss. 343 and 348 was required under S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but not for prosecuting him under S. 330. In the Calcutta case, a trader sued a police officer for recovery of two sums of money, namely, Rs. 50 being damages for wrongful arrest and Rs. 75 being the amount alleged to have been extorted by the police officer from the plaintiff. As regards the second head of claim, the learned Judges were of opinion that no notice under S. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code was necessary, as "nobody could suppose that he was purporting to act in his official capacity in demanding and obtaining the sum of Rs. 75".

Should it, however, be assumed that the true import of S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code was that stated in the passage from Mitra quoted in Gangaraju v. Venki,¹ I must observe that, in that view, that section cannot be treated as bearing a true analogy to S. 270 (1) of the Constitution Act. The latter section does not use the expression "while acting", etc., but makes it clear that the act complained of should have been done or should purport to have been done in the execution of official duty—it does not even say "in the course of such duty". There are, in my opinion, strong reasons against placing an unduly wide interpretation on this provision. It was, no doubt, intended to afford a measure of protection to public servants; but it was not part of the normal protection of such servants.

Varadachariar, J.

That it was meant to provide for an exceptional situation is shown by the fact that it relates only to acts done at a particular juncture, namely, before the commencement of Part III of the Act. Section 270 (1) applies not only to criminal proceedings, like S. 197 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but also to the institution of civil proceedings. In the initiation of criminal proceedings, the protection of public interest is the main concern, and it may well be left to the Local Government to determine the question of the expediency of a prosecution from that point of view. But when a citizen seeks a civil remedy against a public servant, the Legislature must be presumed to have been very cautious in depriving the aggrieved citizen of redress in a Court of law and any restrictions on such a remedy imposed in the interest of the public servant should not be lightly extended so as unduly to restrict the remedy of the citizen.

I am accordingly of the opinion that the consent prescribed by S. 270 (1) of the Act was not required for the institution of proceedings against the Appellant under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code.

I must, however, state, with due respect to the learned Judges of the High Court, that in one or two places in the judgment under appeal, their observations are much too widely worded. For instance, in one place they observe that:

"the section cannot be meant to apply to cases where there could be no doubt that the act alleged must be in bad faith".

If this observation was intended to relate to sub-S. (1) of S. 270, it obviously cannot be correct; because the question of good faith or bad faith is expected to be decided by the Court after trial and, according to sub-S. (2), the proceedings will be dismissed by the Court, unless it is satisfied that the acts complained of were not done in good faith. It does not seem to me right to introduce the question of good faith or bad faith at the stage to which sub-S. (1) of the section relates. I may, in this connection, refer to two decisions under S. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code whose language is almost identical with that of sub-S. (1) of S. 270. In Koti Reddi v. Subbiah,¹ a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that the notice required by that section must be given even to a public officer who had acted mala fide in the discharge of his duty. Sir John Wallis quoted Baron Parke's observation in Kirby v. Simpson,² to the effect that a person may act maliciously and yet in the execution of his office. Sadasiva Iyer, J., stated (on p. 811) that "the question of the good faith or the bad faith of the public officer.....is irrelevant" at that stage. The Madras decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court in Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v. Omar Chand Oswal.³

Again, towards the conclusion of the judgment under appeal, the learned Judges observe that the words "act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty" cannot by any stretch of the English language be made to apply to an act which is clearly a dereliction of his duty. The word "dereliction" may reasonably include negligence in discharging a duty. But it seems to me that an act is not less one done or purporting to be done in execution of a duty because the officer concerned does it negligently.

In my opinion the order of the High Court should be modified by quashing the proceedings against the appellant so far as the charge under S. 477-A of the Indian Penal Code is concerned and directing the Sessions Court to deal with the appeal only so far as it relates to the charge under S. 409. I agree with my learned brother that it must be left open to the Sessions Judge to consider whether it is necessary to order a re-trial on the ground of possible failure of justice or prejudice to the accused by reason of the joint trial of the two charges.

By the Court.—The case will be remitted to the High Court with a declaration that the following order ought to be substituted for the order of the High Court, dated 20th October, 1938:—

"That the case be sent back to the Sessions Judge for hearing on the merits as regards the charge under S. 409 of the Indian Penal Code; that the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge be set aside; and that the proceedings under S. 477-A of the Code be quashed for want of jurisdiction, the consent of the Governor not having been obtained."

It will be open to His Excellency, after considering the facts of the case, to give his consent to a fresh prosecution under S. 477-A, if he should think fit; and it will be equally open to the Sessions Judge to order a re-trial if he is satisfied that the joinder of a charge which the Court had no jurisdiction to hear has prejudiced the accused person in his defence and thereby occasioned a failure of justice.

There will be no order as to costs.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), Ss. 13 and 14 re-enacting Ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938)—Constitutional validity—Retrospective effect—Government of India Act, 1935, Ss. 205 and 209 (1)—Jurisdiction of Federal Court to recognise the law as re-enacted after the decision of the High Court and to remit the case to the High Court without discussing the law as it stood at the time of the High Court decision—Order of High Court denying a party the benefits under Ss. 16 and 17 of the Money-lenders Act, 1938—If "Final order" appealable under S. 205, Government of India Act, 1935.

*Case No. 2 of 1938.

11th May, 1939.

S. 16 of the Bihar Act III of 1938 compelled an execution Court to estimate the value of the property and that portion of such property (brought to sale in execution) the proceeds of the sale of which it considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree. S. 17 enjoined that the proclamation of sale shall include only so much of the property of the judgment-debtor the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree and such property shall not be sold at a price lower than the price specified in the said proclamation. Civil Procedure Code, O. 2, r. 66 as amended in Patna enjoined that the Court should not enter its own valuation in the proclamation of sale. The Courts below upheld the contention of the decree-holder that the sections were repugnant to an existing Indian Law and so void, under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1935. After the High Court decision, Bihar Act VII of 1939 was passed and received the Governor-General's assent. It reproduced in Ss. 13 and 14, Ss. 16 and 17 of the Act of 1938. The provisions were to have retrospective effect. On further appeal, the Federal Court held that although the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act purports to regulate the transactions of money-lenders it does not in terms profess to exercise powers only belonging to Provincial Legislature under the Provincial List. The reservation of the Act for the consideration of the Governor-General and his subsequent assent to it make any challenge that it is repugnant to an existing Indian Law now impossible and it is unnecessary to have an academic discussion as to validity of the provisions of the repealed Act.

Per Sulaiman, J.—There is no repugnancy between the impugned sections (new S. 13 corresponding to old S. 16) and Civil Procedure Code, O. 21, r. 66 as amended in Patna.

Held, further, the Federal Court in the exercise of its Appellate Jurisdiction can remit a case to the High Court with a declaration that there shall be substituted for the judgment, decree or order of the High Court a judgment, decree or order which recognises the state of the law as it now exists without discussing the law as it existed at the time when the High Court had seisin of the case. Ss. 205 and 209 (1) of the Constitution Act gives the Federal Court that power.

Held, further, per Gwyer, C.J. and Varadachariar, J. (Sulaiman, J., dissenting).—The dismissal of the appeal by the High Court having had the effect of finally denying to the appellant the advantage conferred on him by Ss. 16 and 17 of the Money-lenders Act (a valuable substantive right) must to that extent be treated as determining a question of rights and not merely a question of procedure and an appeal lies against such order to the Federal Court.

Per Sulaiman, J.—The order of the High Court relates to the mode of sale only and is interlocutory in character and is neither a 'judgment, decree or final order' within the meaning of S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act. The certificate given by the High Court cannot be conclusive on the point. No appeal lies to the Federal Court.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court at Patna.

Rai Guru Saran Prasad and Rai Paras Nath for Appellant.

L. K. Jha and K. N. Varma for Respondents.

Baldeo Sahay (Advocate-General) and C. P. Sinha for Bihar Government.

Gwyer, C.J.—The judgment which I am about to read is that of my brother Varadachariar and myself.

In this appeal from the High Court at Patna, the question which this Court was originally asked to determine was whether S. 16 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938) was void as being repugnant to a provision of an "existing Indian Law" within the meaning of S. 107 of the Constitution Act.

The Bihar Act, which received the assent of His Excellency the Governor of Bihar on 6th July, 1938, and came into force on 15th July, provided by S. 16 that when an application was made for the execution of a decree passed in respect of a loan or the interest on a loan by the sale of the judgment-debtor's property, the Court executing the decree should, after hearing the parties, estimate the value of the property and of that portion of the property which, if sold, would in its opinion be sufficient to satisfy the decree. S. 17 of the Act then provided (a) that the proclamation of the intended sale in such a case should include only so much of the property of the judgment-debtor as would in the opinion of the Court produce sufficient to satisfy the decree; and (b) that that property should not be sold at a lower price than the price specified in the proclamation. There are provisos to the section to which it is not for the moment necessary to refer.

The "existing Indian Law" to which these provisions were said to be repugnant is a proviso which the Patna High Court, under its rule-making power, had added to O. 21, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code. This was to the effect that no estimate of the value of the property should be inserted in the sale proclamation other than estimates, if any, made by the decree-holder and judgment-debtor respectively, accompanied by a statement that the Court did not vouch for the accuracy of either. The proviso had come into force on 1st March, 1936.

The appellant, against whom a mortgage decree for more than a lakh of rupees had been passed, applied on 15th August, 1938, for an order under Ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Act, for the purpose of restricting the execution sale to such portion of the mortgaged property as might be considered by the Court sufficient to satisfy the decree. The Court dismissed the application, on the ground that the questions sought to be raised thereby had been disposed of by earlier orders passed before the Act had come into force. On appeal against this order, the judgment-debtor contended that the enactment of S. 16 of the Act enabled him to present a fresh application for the relief for which he asked; and it was by way of answer to this contention that it seems to have been urged for the first time on behalf of the decree-holder that Ss. 16 and 17 of the Act were void for repugnancy under S. 107 of the Constitution Act. A Division Bench of the Patna High Court upheld this contention of the decree-holder and dismissed the appeal. The reasons for their decision have been set out in another judgment of the same Bench, *Vishwanath Narayan Singh v. Sri Mahant Harihar Gir*¹, which they purported to follow in the case under appeal; and it appears from that judgment that the learned Judges held S. 16 of the Act to be void because when read S. 17 it was in their opinion repugnant to the proviso which the High Court had added to O. 21, r. 66, of the Civil Procedure Code.

When the appeal before this Court was opened, it was brought to our notice that, since the above decision of the High Court, the Bihar Legislature had repealed certain provisions of the Act of 1938 (including Ss. 16 and 17) and had substantially re-enacted them in the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939); that this Act had been reserved for the consideration of His Excellency the Governor-General; and that it had received His Excellency's assent on 15th April, 1939, and had come into force on 3rd May, last. By reason of the provisions of S. 107 (2) of the Constitution Act, it follows that no part of the new Act can now be challenged on the ground only of its repugnancy to an existing Indian Law; and it was therefore contended that, as the sections (Ss. 13 and 14) of the new Act, which in substance re-enact Ss. 16 and 17 of the Act of 1938 are by clear implication retrospective in effect, the appellant was entitled to take advantage of the provisions of the new Act, and that a discussion of the validity of Ss. 16 and 17 of the earlier Act could be no more than academic.

1. (1938) I.L.R. 17 Pat. 714.

Gwyer, C.J.

We entertain no doubt that Ss. 13 and 14 of the new Bihar Act are retrospective in the sense that they apply to proceedings pending at the time when the Act came into force, for they refer to applications made and decrees passed "before or after the commencement of this Act".

Counsel for the respondent did not and could not contend otherwise; but he made a half-hearted attempt to argue that the Act was not beyond challenge, because while it purported to be made in the exercise of the powers conferred on the Provincial Legislature by the Provincial Legislative List in the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution Act, it travelled nevertheless into subjects falling within the concurrent Legislative List in that Schedule. There appears to us to be no substance in this contention. Although the Act purports to regulate the transactions of money-lenders, it does not in terms profess to exercise powers only belonging to the Provincial Legislature under the Provincial Legislative List. In these circumstances, the new Act could only be challenged on the ground that it is repugnant to an existing Indian Law; and, as we have pointed out above, the reservation of the Act for the consideration of the Governor-General and His Excellency's subsequent assent to it make such a challenge now impossible.

Accordingly, it only remains to consider whether this Court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction can remit the case to the High Court with a declaration that there shall be substituted for the judgment, decree or order of the High Court a judgment, decree or order which recognises the state of the law as it now exists without discussing the law as it existed at the time when the High Court had seisin of the case. We are of opinion that Ss. 205 and 209 (1) of the Constitution Act give us this power. There is no doubt that a High Court possesses such a power in dealing with appeals from Courts subordinate to itself: see S. 107 and O. 41, r. 33, of the Civil Procedure Code; and we think that, in the absence of any evidence of a contrary intention, it is to be assumed that the powers of this Court as a Court of Appeal are not less wide. The English case of *Quilter v. Mapleson*¹ was cited to us, but it is not conclusive; for, under O. 58, r. 1 of the rules of the Supreme Court, appeals to the Court of Appeal are by way of rehearing, and Jessel, M.R., in that case said:—

"On an appeal strictly so-called, such a judgment can only be given as ought to have been given at the original hearing; but on a rehearing such a judgment may be given as ought to be given if the case came at that time before the Court of first instance". See also *Attorney-General v. Birmingham, etc., District Drainage Board*¹

1. (1882) 9 Q.B.D. 672.

Gwyer, C.J.

The order does not however apply in the case of appeals to the Judicial Committee; but nevertheless the Committee in *K. C. Mukerjee v. Mst. Ram Ratan Kuer*² where an Act passed while the appeal was pending deprived the appellant of the right which he had sought to enforce by bringing the appeal, found no difficulty in dismissing the appeal on that ground. The very general terms of Ss. 205 and 209 (1) of the Constitution Act justify us in holding that this Court has, in a case like the present, powers no less wide than those exercised in their own spheres by the Court of Appeal in England and by the Judicial Committee.

We may add that there is no substance in another contention of counsel for the respondents that litigants can only avail themselves of the rights given by S. 13 of the new Act in cases where a proclamation of sale has not been issued before 3rd May, 1939, the day on which the Act came into force. On the natural construction of S. 13 of the Act the judgment-debtor can, if he so desires, file an application to-day for an order under that section; and, that being the legal position, there is still less reason for declining to take the section into account in dealing with the present appeal.

We are of opinion therefore that the passing of the new Act has made it unnecessary to consider any of the questions discussed by the High Court, and that our judgment must be in the appellant's favour for the reasons which we have given.

Our brother Sulaiman, though otherwise in agreement with us, holds that no appeal lies to this Court in the present case. We are unable to concur in that opinion. We think that the order of the High Court in this case must be treated as a final order for the purposes of S. 205 of the Constitution Act. If the appellant's application related only to the settlement of the proclamation, it is true that an order dealing with that application could not be regarded as determining the rights of the parties in any measure so as to make it a final order.

A question of this kind must be determined with reference to the substance of the dispute between the parties and not merely in the light of the fact that the application is one made to the Court before whom an application to execute a decree is pending. The appellant's petition to the Court of first instance was presented under Ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Act of 1938, and though one of the matters to be dealt with on such an application relates to entries to be made in the proclamation of sale, the sections confer on the judgment-debtor a valuable substantive right, namely, the right to insist not only that so much alone of the attached or the mortgaged property as the Court considers sufficient to satisfy the decree should be brought to sale, but also that that property should not be allowed to be sold for less than the price fixed by the Court. This provision is very different from what is known as fixing the upset price in ordinary Court sales. In the latter case it is open to the Court or to the selling officer to reduce the upset price from time to time, if there are no bidders willing to bid at that price. But in cases falling under Ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Act, we find no warrant for the assumption that for want of bidders at the price fixed by the Court under S. 16 (or on appeal) the price can be reduced on the ground of want of bidders. On the other hand, the second proviso to S. 17 indicates that the property may be sold for a lower price, only if the decree-holder consents in writing to forego so much of the amount decreed as is equal to the difference between the highest amount bid and the price specified for the property in the sale proclamation. The Act contains no provision as to what is to happen if the decree-holder is not prepared to adopt this course. But such as they are, there can be no doubt that Ss. 16 and 17 taken together secure a substantial benefit to the judgment-debtor, namely, that he shall not by reason of any forced sale in a Court auction be deprived of his property for less than its fair value. The dismissal of the appeal in this case by the High Court has had the effect of finally denying to the appellant this advantage, and the order of the High Court must to this extent be treated as determining a question of rights between the parties and not merely a question of procedure. The right which the appellant has thus lost is different from what is available to him under O. 21, r. 90, of the Civil Procedure Code, because under the latter provision he cannot claim relief merely on the ground of inadequacy of price but only by proving that serious inadequacy of price has resulted from fraud or material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale.

The case will be remitted to the High Court with a direction to discharge their order of 22nd September, 1938, and the lower Court's order of 22nd August, 1938, and to give liberty to the appellant to file an application under S. 13 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939.

There will be no order as to costs.

Sulaiman, J.—The application made to the Subordinate Judge under Ss. 16 and 17 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938) had prayed for, “making an estimate of the value of the mortgaged property and of such portion of it as might by its sale be sufficient to satisfy the decree, and to order only that portion to be included in the sale proclamation”.

The learned Subordinate Judge also took the application to be one, “praying for fixing a valuation of the property in execution and for issue of sale proclamation in respect of a portion of the property that the Court might think sufficient to satisfy the decree”.

He, however, declined to fix any valuation and rejected the application on the sole ground that similar objections had been previously decided against the judgment-debtors, and they could not raise them over again on account of the coming into force of the new Act.

The applicants filed a Miscellaneous Appeal in the Patna High Court purporting to be both under S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, and the Money-lenders Act, S. 16 (2) of which provided for a special appeal from an order under S. 16. No appeal was provided for from an order under S. 17. Indeed the stage contemplated by S. 17 had not arrived till then.

Sulaiman, J.

In a previous appeal, *Vishwanath Narayan Singh v. Sri Mahant Harihar Gir*¹, decided on the 20th September, 1938, the High Court had come to the conclusion that both the sections were repugnant to O. 21, r. 66, as amended by the Patna High Court, and had upheld the order of the lower Court, 'refusing to fix the value of the property to be sold'. In the present case, the High Court after remarking that "the question involved in this appeal is whether the learned Subordinate Judge who is executing a mortgage decree ought to have fixed, under S. 16 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, the value of the mortgaged property and such portion thereof as is sufficient for the satisfaction of the decree", held that, for the reasons given in their previous judgment, S. 16 was void and dismissed the appeal. It was not said in express terms in this case that S. 17 also was void, though that was implied. No other point appears to have been argued or considered.

From the High Court's order, one of the judgment-debtors has appealed to this Court. I intimated to the appellant's counsel that in my view no appeal lies. Now an appeal would lie to the Federal Court only if the order of the High Court dismissing the appeal were either a judgment or a decree or a final order within the meaning of S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935. The certificate given by the High Court cannot be conclusive on this point.

'Judgment'.—The meaning of the word 'judgment' was discussed in the case of *Hori Ram Singh v. The Crown*², decided on the 12th April, 1939. In that case, the Chief Justice held that the words 'judgment, decree or final order' ought to receive no narrow interpretation, and accepted the maintainability of the appeal. Varadachariar, J., held that the word 'judgment' is comprehensive enough to include a criminal judgment, and proceeded to deal with the case on the assumption that the appeal was competent. On the other hand, I had occasion to refer at some length to the meaning of the word 'judgment' as used in the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, in the Letters Patent and also as used in England, and referred to several Full Bench decisions of the Indian High Courts and some decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council. I pointed out that in England the term 'judgment' in the Queen's Bench Division was equivalent to 'decree' in Equity practice, and "a judgment is a decision obtained in an action and any other decision is an order".

"Now, in legal language, and in Acts of Parliament, as well as with regard to the right of the parties, there is a well-known distinction between a 'judgment' and an 'order'. No doubt the orders under the Judicature Act provide that every order may be enforced in the same manner as a judgment, but still judgments and orders are kept entirely distinct. It is not said that the word 'judgment' shall in other Acts of Parliament include an 'order'." (Per Cotton, L.J., in *Ex parte Chinery*³.)

Judgment is regarded as a determination by a Court of Law, as the result of an action or proceeding upon the matters submitted for decision, that a legal duty or liability does or does not exist. That the word 'judgment' does not include every order is also apparent from the observation of Sir John Edge in *Sevak Jeranchod Bhogi Lal v. Dakore Temple Committee*¹:

"The term judgment in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense".

I emphasized in *Hori Ram Singh's case*² that "In S. 205 (1) of the Act, the word 'judgment' does not occur by itself, but is used in conjunction with 'final order'. When both the terms judgment and final order are used together in one expression, they undoubtedly connote different and distinct meanings and judgment cannot be interpreted as embracing even interlocutory orders, which would make the category of 'final order' wholly superfluous and unnecessary".

'Final Order'.—In *Hori Ram Singh's case*³, I also discussed in some detail the meaning of the expression 'final order', and referred to cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, particularly, *Abdul Rahman v. Cassim*⁴, where Sir George Lowndes had pointed out that in *Ramchand Manjimal's case*⁵,

"the Appellate Court in India was of the opinion that the order had gone to the root of the suit, namely, the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it and it was for this reason that the order was thought to be final".

But his Lordship held that,

"this was not sufficient. The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If after the order, the suit is still a live suit, in which the rights have still to be determined, no appeal lies."

It was emphasized that if the effect of the order from which it is sought to appeal is not to dispose finally of the rights of the parties, then even though it decides an important and even a vital issue in the case, it leaves the suit alive and provides for its trial in the ordinary way.

'Decree'.—As pointed out by me in *Hori Ram Singh's case*⁶, the term 'judgment' in England includes decree, and decree must therefore involve a determination of the rights of the parties.

Even in India decree is defined in S. 2 (2), Civil Procedure Code, as "the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit."

The determination of any matter within S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, is no doubt included in that term, but S. 47 deals with the determination of questions arising between the parties relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and not to the particular mode of executing the decree which may be ordered. That is dealt with in the rules contained in O. 21. R. 66 of that order does not in so many terms refer to the determination of any question arising between the parties to the proceedings, but lays down how the Court is to cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction, and sub-S. (2) provides what particulars should be specified in the proclamation of sale, and these include everything which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property.

The directions issued by the Court under O. 21, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, as originally enacted requiring the specifications to be made in the proclamation of sale cannot be regarded as judicial adjudication of the rights of the decree-holder or of the judgment-debtor. They appear to possess some characteristics of an administrative order directing how the proclamation of sale should be drawn up before the auction sale is actually held, because it cannot be suggested that by those directions the Court determines the exact value of the property so as to be finally binding on any party. At best it can arrive only at an approximate estimate of the value. Some Courts have actually gone as far as to say that an order under O. 21, r. 66 is not a judicial order but merely an administrative one. It would be quite sufficient to say that the order is not a judicial adjudication of any question arising between the parties to the execution, but merely the issuing of directions as to the mode of proclamation of sale. It is really difficult to see how the approximate estimation of the value of the property can ever be regarded as a determination of any question arising between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor within the meaning of S. 47, Civil Procedure Code. Indeed, as was laid down by their Lordships in Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar,¹ a remedy is provided (under S. 311 corresponding to O. 21, r. 90) for the judgment-debtor to question the valuation and have the sale set aside if the gross under-valuation amounts to a material irregularity and he sustains substantial injury thereby. The drawing up of the proclamation and the entering of the required specifications as fairly and accurately as possible are not matters relating to the execution of the decree itself so much as relating to the method of proclamation of sale.

There seems to be a perfect unanimity among all the Indian High Courts that the fixing of the value of the property under this rule is by no means an adjudication within the meaning of S. 47, Civil Procedure Code and such an order is not appealable as a decree. The leading case is a Full Bench case of the Madras High Court, Sivagami Achi v. Subramania Aiyar,² of course, followed in subsequent Madras cases—Kaveribai Ammal v. Mehta & Sons,³ *Avudainayagappa Pillai v. Sundaranandam Pillai*⁴ and Meenakshisundaram Pillai v. Chokkalinga Pathan.⁵ In the second case it was laid down that an order fixing a price to be entered in the proclamation of sale is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The same view has prevailed in Allahabad—Ajudhia Prasad v. Gopi Nath,⁶

*Hira Lal v. Tikam Singh*¹, *Muhammad Zakaria v. Kishan Narain*², *Kaisar Beg v. Sheo Shankar Das*³, *Nathu Lal v. Shrimati Yashodha Devi*⁴ and *Ram Charan Sahu v. Jumna Prasad Sahu*⁵. In this last case it was held that an order fixing the valuation for the purposes of the sale proclamation is not a decree within the meaning of S. 47, Civil Procedure Code. A similar view has been expressed in other High Courts—*Krishnarao Ambadas Pimpladkar v. Krishnarao Raghunath Talekar*⁶, *Devendra Nath Basu v. Kailash Chandra Kalu*⁷, *Basanta Kumar Chowdhury v. Baikunta Nath Chakravarty*⁸, *Tikoit Gayan Nath Sahi v. Pandit Malhiji Vaidya*⁹ and *Sain Das v. Punjab National Bank, Ltd.*¹⁰ It was obviously on account of this consensus of opinion as to an order passed under O. 21, r. 66, relating to valuation not being appealable that the Patna Legislature thought it fit to add sub-S. (2) to S. 16 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, making an order under that section an appealable order; nonetheless the order cannot be regarded as a decree.

No Appeal.—The main question in the present case was as to the estimation of the value of the mortgaged property and a sufficient portion thereof, and at a later stage its entry in the proclamation of sale for the benefit of intending purchasers. S. 16 (1) merely makes it obligatory on the execution Court to estimate the value of the property and of that portion of such property the proceeds of the sale of which it considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree. The Proviso reserves the power to the Court to order the whole of the property to be sold if it is satisfied that by reason of the nature of such property or any other special circumstances such property cannot reasonably or conveniently be sold in part. The estimate of the value is obviously only an approximate one and not by any means exact. The property can certainly be sold for a higher price; and of course it is also possible that there may be no bidders willing to offer bids up to the estimated price. If there is any surplus, it will go to the judgment-debtors. Such an estimation cannot therefore be considered as a determination of any rights or liabilities so as to constitute a judgment or decree; nor can it even be regarded as a final order because it determines nothing finally, nor even puts an end to the proceedings. It is merely ancillary and subsidiary, and is nothing more than a mere step of preparation for the sale being effected. It follows that the order passed by the High Court dismissing the appeal possesses the same characteristics and is in essence of the same nature. That too neither determines the rights or the liabilities of the parties, nor even decides any question arising between the parties relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. It merely affirms the order refusing to estimate such value, and therefore relates to the mode of sale only, and is interlocutory in character. There is no final decision yet, as even after the disposal of the case by the High Court, the proceeding is still a live proceeding and will continue.

Even if the stage contemplated by S. 17 had been reached, the proclamation of sale would have included only so much of the property of the judgment-debtor the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considered would be sufficient to satisfy the decree. The further provision that such property shall not be sold at a price lower than the price specified in the sale proclamation would be a direction to the sale officer not to accept any bid which is lower than the price specified. This at best is fixing a minimum price which the sale officer should accept. It does not prevent the acceptance of a higher offer; nor does it expressly prevent the Court from re-valuing the property, in case no bids up to the minimum are received. The two provisos added to the section refer to matters relating to the portion of the property to be sold, with which we are not concerned in this appeal. The mere inclusion of the whole or a part of the property in the proclamation of sale would also not be regarded as any final adjudication of any rights or liabilities so as to become a judgment, decree or final order. Not even a special appeal is provided for from such an order. All that has happened is that the execution Court has failed to estimate the value of the property, and the proclamation of sale would when issued contain two estimates as given by the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors and would include the entire mortgaged property. That in my view does not amount to any final disposal of the rights of the parties at all. In my opinion, the order of the High Court dismissing the appeal from the Subordinate Judge's order refusing to fix the valuation or to specify a portion of the mortgaged property in the proclamation of sale is neither a judgment, decree nor final order within the meaning of S. 205 (1) of the Act. No appeal therefore lies to the Federal Court.

Even if no appeal lies at this stage, it cannot be suggested that no other remedy whatsoever would be open to the judgment-debtors. If the provisions of the section were obligatory on the execution Court a non-compliance with them would certainly be a material irregularity, if not also an illegality, and the sale itself could be challenged on such a ground under O. 21, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, if substantial injury is caused by the omission. The order of the High Court in appeal may then possibly be a final order subject to an appeal to the Federal Court. As in the opinion of the majority the appeal lies, I must proceed to consider it on the merits.

Patna Rule.—Under O. 21, r. 66 (1) (e), Civil Procedure Code, as enacted, the proclamation was to specify as fairly and accurately as possible several enumerated particulars, and “every other thing which the Court considers it material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property.” There was some difference of opinion as to the proper inference to be drawn from the observation of Lord Hobhouse in the case of Saadatmand Khan v. Phul Kuar,¹ which had been decided under the corresponding S. 287 of Act XIV of 1882. Contrary to what was held at Madras, but in partial conformity with the opinions expressed at Calcutta and Allahabad, the Patna High Court considered that it was the duty of the Courts to settle the value, even if the judgment-debtor was absent, and that any valuation other than that fixed by the Court is calculated to mislead possible bidders and would be wrong, and the Court should not insert in a sale proclamation the valuation assessed by the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor—Raghunath Singh v. Hazari Sahu,² *Beni Prasad v. Edal Singh*³ and Damrupat v. Rameshwar.⁴ Later the Patna High Court changed its policy, and by an amendment of the rule, which came into force on the 1st March, 1936, provided that—

Sulaiman, J.

"no estimate of the value of the property, other than those, if any, made by the decree-holder and judgment-debtor respectively together with a statement that the Court does not vouch for the accuracy of either shall be inserted in the sale proclamation".

The prohibition is obviously deliberate and it casts an obligation on an execution Court to see that no other estimate, not even that made by itself, is inserted in the sale proclamation, and enjoins upon the Court to notify therein that the Court does not vouch for the accuracy of either estimate.

The Money-lenders Act.—With the professed object of regulating money-lending transactions and granting relief to debtors the Bihar Legislature intervened and attempted to make it obligatory on an execution Court to determine the value and enter the same in the proclamation of sale, so that the property is not to be sold for less than the specified value. S. 16 of the Bihar Act III of 1938 compelled an execution Court, "notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law" to "hear" the parties to the decree and "estimate the value of such property and of that portion of such property the proceeds of the sale of which it considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree". S. 17 enjoined that the proclamation of sale "shall include only so much of the property of the judgment-debtor the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree and such property shall not be sold at a price lower than the price specified in the said proclamation". The two provisoes dealt with the portions that are to be ordered to be sold. Thus there was a direct conflict between the amended O. 21, r. 66, enjoining that the Court should not enter its own valuation in the proclamation of sale, and S. 17 which necessitated a price being specified in it.

High Court's View.—In the earlier case the High Court had taken the view that Ss. 16 and 17 must be read together, and that it was S. 17 which specified the purpose of ascertaining the value of the property, providing among others that the property should not be sold for a price lower than that specified in the sale proclamation. According to their view S. 16, read with S. 17, enjoined the Court to estimate the value and mention it in the sale proclamation, that is to say, the Court was to vouch for the absolute correctness of the value as fixed by it. As to the contention that S. 16 itself was not repugnant to the rule they had remarked—

"This argument would have been of some force if S. 16 would have stood by itself and would have been self-contained which it is not. It is followed by S. 17 without which it would have been an absolutely useless piece of legislation".

They had further held that

"Ss. 16 and 17 ordered the Courts to fix the value very carefully, make their orders appealable to higher tribunals, and by necessary implication compel them to put the value fixed by them in the sale proclamation, and to sell the property only if the price fetched is according to the value fixed by them unless some other considerations arise". They accordingly remarked that they were "clearly of opinion that S. 16, which must be read with S. 17, was repugnant to O. 21, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code." Following their previous ruling they held in the present case also that S. 16 of the Act was, on account of its repugnancy, void.

The New Act.—The Bihar Act of 1938 had been passed with the assent of the Governor of the Province only. The Bihar Legislature has passed a fresh Money-lenders Act (VII of 1939), which was reserved for the assent of the Governor-General, and it came into force on the 3rd May, 1939, during the pendency of this appeal. The provisions of old Ss. 16 and 17 have been re-produced verbatim in Ss. 13 and 14, with a few additions, mainly to make the sections retrospective.

I prefer to base my opinion that the High Court's view cannot be accepted on a two-fold ground: (1) because the provisions of the old S. 16 corresponding to the new S. 13 are not in fact repugnant to O. 21, r. 66, Civil Procedure Code, as amended by the Patna High Court and (2) because the old section has now been replaced by the new section, which as a result of the assent of the Governor-General must in any case prevail.

Section 107 of the Government of India Act.—Under S. 107 (1) of the Act,

"If any provision of a Provincial Law is repugnant to any provision of a Federal Law which the Federal Legislature is competent to enact or to any provision of an existing Indian Law with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List, then, subject to the provisions of this section, the Federal Law, whether passed before or after the Provincial Law or, as the case may be, the existing Indian Law shall prevail and the Provincial Law shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void".

During the transitional period the Federal Laws under S. 316 of the Act mean the laws of the Indian Legislature, passed in the exercise of the powers conferred by the provisions of the Act after the commencement of Part III. Under S. 311 (2) 'existing Indian Law' means, inter alia,

"any law or rule passed or made before the commencement of Part III of this Act by any authority being an authority having power to make such a law or rule".

It has not been suggested that the provisions of the Bihar Act are repugnant to any laws of the Indian Legislature passed after the coming into force of the new Government of India Act. The only suggestion is that they are repugnant to an existing Indian Law. Now S. 107 (i) does not mean that a Provincial Law must yield if it is repugnant to any existing Indian Law whatsoever. It will give way (to the extent of the repugnancy) only if it is repugnant to an existing Indian Law "with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List", unless the assent of the Governor-General or of His Majesty has been obtained as is referred to in sub-S. (2). If it is with respect to a matter falling within the Provincial Legislative List and not the Concurrent Legislative List, then it would prevail even as against an existing Indian Law. On the other hand, the provisions of S. 100 make it clear that if the matter falls within the Federal Legislative List, then the Provincial Legislation is altogether ultra vires, even though it may also fall under the Provincial or the Concurrent List.

Principles of Construction.—When the question is whether a Provincial legislation is repugnant to an existing Indian Law, the onus of showing its repugnancy and the extent to which it is repugnant should be on the party attacking its validity. There ought to be a presumption in favour of its validity, and every effort should be made to reconcile them and construe both so as to avoid their being repugnant to each other; and care should be taken to see whether the two do not really operate in different fields without encroachment. Further repugnancy must exist in fact, and not depend merely on a possibility.

"Their Lordships can discover no adequate grounds for holding that there exists repugnancy between the two laws in districts of the Province of Ontario where the prohibitions of the Canadian Act are not and may never be in force." (*Attorney-General for Ontario v. Attorney-General for the Dominion*¹.)

It is a well-established principle that if the invalid part of an Act is really separate in its operation from the other parts and the rest are not inseparably connected with it, then only such part is invalid, unless, of course, the whole object of the Act would be frustrated by the partial exclusion. If the subject which is beyond the legislative power is perfectly distinct from that which is within such power, the Act can be ultra vires in the former, while intra vires in the latter:

"The test is said to be whether a statute with the invalid portions omitted would be substantially a different law as to the subject-matter dealt with by what remained from what it would be with the omitted portions forming part of it". (See *The King v. Commonwealth Court of Conciliation*².)

A particular section of an Act however may not be an isolated and independent clause, and may form part of one connected indissoluble scheme for the attainment of a definite object; in which case it would have to be considered as an inseparable part of the whole. A law which is ultra vires in part only may thereby become ultra vires in whole if the object of the Act cannot at all be attained by excluding the bad part. If the offending provisions are so interwoven into the scheme of the Act that they are not severable, then the whole Act is invalid: In re *Initiative and Referendum Act*³. For instance, the whole texture of the Act was found inextricably interwoven in *Attorney-General for British Columbia v. Attorney-General for Canada*¹.

The words "to the extent of the repugnancy" occurring in S. 107 indicate that it is not essential that the whole Act nor even a whole section must be declared invalid, but that it is necessary to ascertain exactly how much of it is void on account of repugnancy. In India a clear distinction exists between a provision being ultra vires by virtue of S. 100 on account of overlapping and its being void under S. 107 (1) owing to repugnancy to the extent of such repugnancy. Unlike the former, there is competency to enact in the latter case, but the legislation is invalid to a limited extent on account of a conflict.

Repugnancy.—The conditions required for a repeal by implication are naturally stringent. The rule laid down in *Kutner v. Phillips*² was "A repeal by implication is only effected when the provisions of a later enactment are so inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of an earlier one, that the two cannot stand together. . . . Unless two Acts are so plainly repugnant to each other, that effect cannot be given to both at the same time, a repeal will not be implied . . . or unless there is a necessary inconsistency in the two Acts standing together".

The question has been discussed in two Australian cases more recently. In *A.-G. for Queensland v. A.-G. for Commonwealth*³, Higgins, J., said:

"What does 'repugnant' mean? I am strongly inclined to think that no Colonial Act can be repugnant to an Act of the Parliament of Great Britain unless it involves, either directly or ultimately, a contradictory proposition—probably, contradictory duties or contradictory rights".

Again, in *Clyde Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Cowburn*⁴, the learned Judges observed:

"When is a law 'inconsistent' with another law? Etymologically, I presume that things are inconsistent when they cannot stand together at the same time; and one law is inconsistent with another law when the command or power or other provision in one law conflicts directly with the command or power or provision in the other. Where two Legislatures operate over the same territory and come into collision, it is necessary that one should prevail; but the necessity is confined to actual collision, as when one Legislature says 'do' and the other says 'don't'" (p. 503).

Griffith, C.J., remarked:

"The test of inconsistency is, of course, whether a proposed act is consistent with obedience to both directions" (p. 504).

The opinion of the majority (Knox, C.J. and Gavan Duffy, J., with the concurrence of Isaacs, J.) was that,

"Two enactments may be inconsistent although obedience to each of them may be possible without disobeying the other. Statutes may do more than impose duties: they may, for instance, confer rights; and one statute is inconsistent with another when it takes away a right conferred by that other even though the right be one which might be waived or abandoned without disobeying the statute which conferred it" (p. 478).

In this view it may be humanly possible to obey both, simply by not doing what is declared by either to be unlawful, though permitted by the other, and yet there may be palpable inconsistency. It may be conceded that the test of a possible obedience to both is not absolute. But as between the new S. 13 (old S. 16) and O. 21, r. 66 as in force in Bihar, there is not even a question of a right conferred by one being taken away by the other; much less do the words of their Lordships in A.-G. for Ontario v. A.-G. for the Dominion,¹ "it is obvious that their provisions could not be in force within the same district or province at one and the same time" apply to them.

Impugned Section.—The existing S. 13 (as did the repealed S. 16) merely enjoins the estimation of the value of the property and that of a sufficient part thereof, and does not itself deal with the entry of the same in the proclamation of sale. It is therefore not in conflict with O. 21, r. 66. Nor is there anything in the proviso permitting the Court to order the whole property to be sold which clashes with the rule. Unless the value is in some way estimated, it is impossible for the Court to ascertain what portion of the property would be sufficient to satisfy the decree, which consideration is enjoined upon the Court under the terms of the mortgage decree itself passed under O. 34, r. 5 (3), and Form No. 6 of Appendix D. There is an analogous provision in O. 21, r. 64, which applies to attached properties. The ascertainment of the value would also enable the Court to fix the order of the sale of the various items so as to adjust equities. The estimation can be made known in ways other than by merely entering it in the proclamation of sale. The High Court has not taken away the discretion of the Courts to divide the property into lots under O. 21, r. 67 (3), or of the sale officers under r. 69 to adjourn the sale on the ground of gross inadequacy of the bids, if the estimation of the value is brought to their notice otherwise (e.g., by production of a certified copy of the order). It would be of help later to the Court itself in deciding whether there has been any substantial injury caused in case any material irregularity or fraud was committed in publishing or conducting the sale. It follows that although the new S. 14 may, to some extent, be dependent on the new S. 13, as the price can be entered in the sale proclamation only after it has been ascertained by the Court, S. 13 in itself is by no means inseparably connected with S. 14, and can indeed stand alone by itself. The estimation of the price is one thing, and its entry in the proclamation of sale is quite another thing. The two are distinct and can be easily separated, as in their true import they are severable. As the former is easily separable and enacts different and distinct provisions and is not in reality dependent on the latter, there is no reason why the former should not stand merely because the latter may be repugnant. Repugnancy should not be extended to a section by implication if it does not in fact exist. In my opinion there is no repugnancy between the new S. 13 (old S. 16) and the amended O. 21, r. 66.

The second ground is that we can in appeal take into account the imperative provisions of the new Money-lenders Act which has already come into force, and which automatically repeals the old Act. Of course, we are not bound to do so, as the appellant can move the Execution Court afresh to act under the new Act and indeed it is the duty of that Court so to act even without an application. But in Quilter v. Mapleson,¹ it was held that an appellate Court could grant relief according to the new law which had come into force in the meantime even though the judgment of the Court below had been correct according to the law as it then stood. It may, however, be pointed out that under the English O. 58, r. 2, appeals were by way of "re-hearing" and the appellate Court had power not only to make any order which ought to have been made by the Court below, but also to make such further or other order as the case may require. The last words occur in the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, O. 41, r. 33 also; but that has not been made applicable to the Federal Court.

Under S. 205 (2) the Federal Court has power to grant leave to appeal on any ground other than what had been raised in the Court below. Again under S. 209 (1) the Federal Court where it allows an appeal can give a declaration as to the judgment, decree or order which is 'to be substituted' for the judgment, decree or order appealed against, and not merely a declaration as to the judgment, decree or order which ought to have been passed by the High Court.

No doubt in *Ponnamma v. Arumogam*², their Lordships applied S. 545 of the Ceylon Code, without taking into account in favour of the appellant a new Ordinance adding a proviso to that section that a suit should not fail for want of Letters of Administration, and remarked that "Their Lordships have only to say whether that judgment was right when it was given".

But their Lordships took care to observe at page 391 that

"The objection of want of administration is one of substance and the appellant's case did not fail by reason only that letters of administration to the intestate's estate have not been granted."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in a recent case, *K. C. Mukerji v. Mst. Ram Ratan Kuer*³, did take into consideration against the appellant a new Act which was passed during the pendency of the Privy Council appeal, by which the appellant's rights had been taken away. Their Lordships on the basis of the new enactment dismissed the appeal. Although that was a converse case, the principle undoubtedly applies. Accordingly there seems to be no good ground why the Federal Court may not, if it so thinks fit, dispose of the appeal on the basis of the new enactment.

As the Patna Rule came into force in 1936 and therefore did not exist at the time of the passing of the Act, it cannot be regarded as having been included in the Code of Civil Procedure existing at the time (Entry 4 of List III). But the amendment of O. 21, r. 66 was certainly a matter of Civil Procedure. The rule made by the High Court, under the powers conferred upon it by Ss. 122 and 124, Civil Procedure Code, was therefore an existing Indian Law with respect to a matter enumerated in List III. Ss. 13 and 14 of the Money-lenders Act of 1939 even if repugnant to the rule must prevail under S. 107 (2) of the Government of India Act, because the assent of the Governor-General has been obtained.

Accordingly if an appeal were to lie, I would allow the appeal and remit the case to the High Court with the declaration that the following order be substituted for the High Court's order:—

The appeal is allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the case remanded to him for disposal according to the provisions of Ss. 13 and 14 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (VII of 1939). In the circumstances, all parties should bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

RULES

New rule regarding provision for appeals against orders passed under certain sections of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act.

Fort St. George October, 27, 1939, (G.O. No. 2633, Development).
No. 855:

Rules framed under powers conferred by sub-section (1) and clause (c) of sub-section (2) of section 28 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938 (Madras Act IV of 1938).

AMENDMENT

After rule 7 of the said rules, the following rule shall be added, namely:—

“8. Appeals shall lie from any of the following orders passed by a court under the Act, namely:—

(a) an order under section 18 (1) amending or refusing to amend a decree;

(b) an order under section 19 amending or refusing to amend a decree or entering or refusing to enter satisfaction in respect of a decree;

(c) an order under section 20 staying or refusing to stay proceedings in execution of a decree;

(d) an order under section 22 directing or refusing to direct the refund of any sum realized in execution of a decree;

(e) an order under section 23 setting aside or refusing to set aside any sale or foreclosure of immovable property; and

(f) an order under section 24 directing or refusing to direct the repayment of any purchase money realized in execution of a decree;

as if the order related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908”.

Rules regarding applications to civil courts for scaling down of non-decreed debts.

Fort St. George October 27, 1939, (G.O. No. 2634, Development).
No. 856:

Rules framed under powers conferred by sub-section (1) and clauses (b) and (c) of sub-section (2) of section 28 of the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938 (Madras Act IV of 1938).

RULES.

1. In these rules—

(a) “Act” means the Madras Agriculturists Relief Act, 1938;

(b) “Court” means the court having jurisdiction under these rules; and

(c) expressions used in these rules but not defined herein shall have the same meaning as in the Act.

2. (1) Where any debt, other than a decree-debt, is due by any person claiming to be an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act in respect of such debt, the debtor or the creditor, may apply to the court for a declaration as to the amount of the debt due by the debtor to the creditor:

Provided that no such application shall be presented or be maintainable if any suit for the recovery of the debt be pending.

(2) The provisions of sub-rule (1) shall also apply to any person claiming that his debt has been discharged by virtue of the provisions of the Act.

3. (1) Every application under rule 2 shall be in writing and shall be signed and verified in the manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, for signing and verifying plaints.

(2) There shall be affixed to every such application whether by the debtor or by the creditor a court-fee stamp of the value of 12 annas.

4. (1) Every application presented by a debtor shall contain the following particulars, namely:—

(a) the name and address of the applicant;

(b) the name and address of the creditor in respect of whose debt the application is presented;

(c) a statement that the debtor claims to be an agriculturist entitled to the benefit of the Act in respect of the debt of the creditor as against whom the application is presented;

(d) the particulars of the debt in respect of which the declaration is claimed, including all matters necessary to invoke the jurisdiction of the court to have the debt scaled down; and

(e) the amount for which the applicant prays that the debt may be reduced.

The provisions of sub-rule (1) shall apply mutatis mutandis to an application presented by a creditor.

5. The application shall be rejected if it does not comply with any of the requirements of rule 4.

The rejection of an application under this rule shall not preclude the applicant from presenting a fresh application.

6. (1) On receipt of an application under rule 4, the court shall, unless it rejects it under rule 5, pass an order fixing a date for hearing the application.

(2) Notice of the order under sub-rule (1) shall be served on the creditor and the debtor.

7. On the date originally fixed under rule 6 or on any subsequent date to which the application may be adjourned by the court, the court shall, after taking such evidence or making such enquiry as it may consider necessary, pass such order on the application as it thinks fit.

8. If, at any time, while an application is pending in the court, a suit is filed by the creditor for the recovery of the debt which is the subject-matter of the application, the court shall dismiss the application.

9. The order of the court declaring the amount of the debt under rule 7 shall be subject to appeal and second appeal as if it were a decree in an original suit.

10. The courts having jurisdiction under these rules shall be the courts which would have jurisdiction to entertain suits for the recovery of the debts as unscaled.
